GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—It was not until a late hour last night that I was informed that I was expected to preside over your deliberation. I am not prepared, as a consequence, with any address to you upon this occasion. I thank you for the honor you do me in calling me to this position. I will undertake to discharge its duties with impartiality, and I put each member of this convention upon his duty and his allegiance to the great democracy of the country that you shall help me to preserve order all the time. Everything is auspicious; I felt it when I stood beside the polls this spring at the April election, and I felt it yesterday as the streams of men came from the north, and the south, and the east, and the west to consider the interests of the country. I know it now when I meet a convention such as is here presented, coming from almost every neighborhood in the state, a convention of men that are interested in the public welfare and in the public honor; a convention in numbers surpassing anything ever seen in the state of Indiana. I know that victory will set upon your banners. They nominated a candidate—I will say a ticket; it would not be right to omit the last of that ticket—on yesterday at Chicago. I take it that that ticket represents fairly the average strength of the republican party. [Laughter and applause.] In every respect I think it is so, and you and I, brother democrats, don't lean on the weakness of the ticket nominated yesterday. We lean upon the strength of the indomitable democracy. Some sad things took place at Chicago. [Laughter and applause.] I know you think I am referring to the many truths they told upon one another. That is not exactly it. Yesterday the republican party laid away forever the grim-visaged warrior and the plumed knight of the east together. [Laughter.] To-day they lie in the obscurity of defeat. The republican party has said to the nations of the world, that did Gen. Grant uncommon honor, that he is no longer worthy of sitting at the head of national affairs [applause], and it was no uncommon thing when that statement was made to mankind that Gen. Grant was no longer worthy of support in the national republican convention. [Applause.] I have heard democrats for the last two or three weeks inquiring who is the weakest man at Chicago. I care not for that. I repeat to you, I care not for that. The last election—when Tilden and Hendricks were elected—[long continued applause] there was a majority on the democratic side of the white voters of the United States of 1,000,000 of men. Of the whites and blacks together there was a majority of more than one-fourth of a million. [Applause.] When we meet in Cincinnati to respond to Chicago we meet with the assurance upon our side that we have this strength, this power, this sentiment of the American people on our side [applause], and I take it for granted that the great convention of the 22nd of this month, representing the democracy of this nation, will so organize our party as that success will attend the contest in November; and now, as I announce to you that this convention is organized and ready for the transaction of business, I ask of each of you that you shall assist in good faith and very earnestly in maintaining order in this assembly to-day. [Applause.]

Gov. Hendricks then took the chair, and called for the report of the committee on credentials. The chairman stated that the committee was not quite ready, and asked for further time, which was granted.

Hon. David Turpie, chairman, made the following report from the committee on resolutions:

Indiana Democratic Platform.

First—We, the democracy of Indiana, in delegate convention assembled, congratulate the democracy of the country upon the harmony prevailing within its organization, and upon its unanimity in purpose to cast behind it every occasion and sentiment of discord, and stand as one man for success in 1880. And we give assurance to the democracy of the country that, accepting the declaration of principles and purposes that may be made at Cincinnati and the candidates who may be there chosen, we will give to them our earnest and undivided support.

Second—We believe that laws should be enacted, executed, and administered only for the public good, and all class legislation and all favoritism in the affairs of government should be defeated and made odious. That taxes should be levied justly, and the most rigid economy should control public expenditures. That the elections must be freed from the control of the army and partisan officials so that they shall be fair and honest as they once were.

That the rightful jurisdiction of the state courts must be restored in all cases where it has been usurped by the federal authority, so that justice may be administered cheaply and speedily.

Third—The coin and paper money of the country should be of uniform value and readily convertible, and should have as great purchasing power as the money of other first-class commercial countries of the world; and the paper money, like the coin, should be furnished by the United States, and should not be in excess of such quantity as will always remain at par with coin.

Fourth—Inasmuch as the outstanding treasury notes are no longer necessary to the government in the use of its credit, and are useful only as money, they should be made subject to taxation the same as other money. As taxpayers we declare our gratification at the action of the democratic members of congress in reducing public expenditures and in cutting off the allowance and payment of questionable and fraudulent claims, resulting in a saving to the treasury of more than one hundred million dollars.

Fifth—We will stand with all our might against the agressions of the republican leaders upon the rights of the states, made for the purpose of building up a strong central power, dangerous to the liberties of the people.

We will in all fidelity maintain the constitutional right and powers of the United States, and as faithfully as we will maintain and vindicate the rights of the states as reserved to them in the constitution.

Sixth—The legislature of 1879 is entitled to honorable mention for having redeemed the pledges of the democratic convention of 1878 to provide by law for the comfort and safety of laborers in the mines and for securing their wages to the persons employed by corporations and we are in favor of such further legislation in the premises as may be necessary and proper. We congratulate the people of the state that by the action of the democrats at the last legislature basing representation on population and contiguity of territory only, the shame and taint of fraud have been removed from the apportionment of representation, and that now the people will be equally and fairly represented.

Seventh—The people of Indiana are justly proud of their system of free schools, and will maintain them in their full force and usefulness and to that end we must see to it that the management thereof does not become wasteful or extravagant, and that no part of the munificent fund which they have provided shall be used for sectarian or for any other purpose whatever than the support of common schools.

Eighth—We are gratified that the democrats in congress have acted in respect to bounties and pensions for soldiers and their families in the spirit of justice and liberality.

Ninth—We hold up to public detestation the conduct of the republican party in placing Hayes and Wheeler, by criminal practices shocking to every honest sentiment and damaging to our institutions, in offices to which they were not elected. It was an outrage to free government and a crime against the elective franchise that cannot be forgiven, and must not be repeated, and for which the guilty party must be driven from power and consigned to infamy. And we hold up to public detestation the conduct of the president in rewarding the guilty parties by conferring upon them high and lucrative offices. To reward crime is itself criminal.

Tenth—During the past few years our country has been blessed in a high degree with favorable seasons, and the production of our valuable staples has been enormously in excess of our own consumption. We have sold to foreign countries many hundred millions more than we have purchased from them; gold and silver have come to us; business confidence has been restored and we have the hope and promise of good times again. In all this we recognize the blessings of God upon our country, and we denounce it as false and blasphemous when partisan leaders claim that this is the work of their hands, and that the people shall be thankful to them and not grateful to Heaven for our returning prosperity.

Eleventh—We approve the sentiment expressed by Gov Hendricks in his letter of acceptance in 1876, that "the iniquitous coolie system which, through the agency of wealthy companies, imports Chinese bondsmen establishes a species of slavery, and interferes with the just reward of labor on our Pacific coast, should be utterly abolished."

Twelfth—Our state administration is entitled to the respect and support of the People. The government of Indiana is efficiently administered, and more cheaply than that of any other state.

Thirteenth—That we recognize the rights of colored citizens, as well as whites, who immigrate into Indiana, but we condemn and denounce the action of the republican party in importing into this state pauper negroes for the sole purpose of using them as voters.

Fourteenth—We hereby instruct our delegates in the national convention at Cincinnati to present to that body the name of Thomas A. Hendricks as a candidate for the president of the United States; one who has at all times faithfully maintained the cause of democratic truth and justice acceptably to the democracy of the whole Union, thus assuring the election of a democratic legislature and a United States senator in 1881, and a just, pure and constitutional administration of the general government.

Fifteenth—We favor the continuance of the two-thirds rule in the national convention, and the delegates this day chosen are hereby instructed to vote for the Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks as our candidate for the presidency, and to vote as a unit on all questions in said convention.

The report was accepted and adopted.

A delegate objected to democrats standing in the aisles, when Governor Hendricks responded: "There are too many democrats that's the trouble."

The committee on credentials reported that there was nothing before them and asked to be discharged. Carried.

Rev. E. H. Prosser, D.D., pastor of the First M. E. church south of this city, followed in the following

INVOCATION:

Almighty God, Father of all, Lord Jesus Christ, Ruler of all rulers, Governor of all governors, in whose hands are the issues of life, the interests of people and nations, we commit and commend to Thy care the business transaction of this convention. We ask that God will bless this people, and in their selections and wise choice of the men whom they may select, the men who represent their constituency, and the people of this state, may be men who shall be under the guidance of God, whose interests may be committed to His care, and over whom the Lord, our Father, shall watch and care for. We thank Thee that Thou hast so graciously cared for us as a state, as a people, as a republic. We thank Thee that peace is within our borders, and that success attends Thy people, and Thy blessings rest upon us as a nation. We pray Thee that in the future God will care for us and watch over us, and will look after us, and guide and direct all for the best interests of this people and this republic. Forgive us of all sins. May all that shall be done be done to the interests and advancement of Thy cause among men. May victory, may peace be within all our borders, and may God be honored by this people and this nation, and be saved ultimately in Thy kingdom, we ask for Christ's sake, amen!

Governor Hendricks then offered the following remarks in regard to the nominations:

We are now about to proceed to the most important part of our duties, and wish to have an understanding on two or three matters between you and myself. I know the great difficulty in preserving order during the hour that is now ahead of us. We are about to choose between very strong men for the first office of the state. They are supported very earnestly by strong men. I know that your feelings and passions will become excited in a contest like this, and I ask you that while the roll is being called that no man shall applaud any vote. Will you do that? [Cries of "yes."] That is a bargain between you and me. [Laughter.] Now I wish to announce another thing: you have adopted the committee report that when a county is called for its vote, it must then vote. It can not say that it is not prepared. Democrats must be prepared to vote. It is a good thing to be ready. [Laughter.] And another thing, gentlemen, with your permission, although the committee did not report it, I will adopt it as a rule, if you say so, and that is that after a county has voted that county shall not change its vote until the roll call is completed.

NOMINATIONS FOR GOVERNOR.

The following gentlemen were placed in nomination:

Hon. Franklin Landers, of Marion, by Col. C. C. Matson, of Putnam; Hon. Isaac P. Gray, of Randolph, by Robert Bell, of Allen, and Hon. Alexander Downey, of Ohio, by Judge Holman.

The first ballot resulted as follows: Landers 514½; Gray, 510½; Downey, 42.

A motion to take a recess until 2 o'clock failed to receive a second.

A second ballot was taken, but before the announcement of the result a great number of changes were made by counties in favor of Mr. Landers, and on the motion of Hon. Robert Bell, of Allen county—who placed Mr. Gray in nomination, seconded by Judge Holman, of Dearborn, who placed Mr. Downey's name before the convention—the nomination of Hon. Franklin Landers for Governor was made unanimous, amidst great applause, swinging of hats and handkerchiefs by the delegates and spectators.

Mr. Landers being loudly called for, came forward and spoke as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—I have not language to express my gratitude for the confidence that you have reposed in me. To be the standard-bearer of the Democratic party of Indiana is no ordinary compliment. I have been over your State, and when I started I felt that I would like to be Governor of Indiana. There are more counties in Indiana where the citizens feel that there homes are the best, that their soil is the best and the intelligence of the people is superior to those of any other State in this Union, and wherever you find the citizens of a county satisfied with their soil, satisfied with their labor, and satisfied with the intelligence that surrounds them, I warrant you there is a happy people. [Applause]

I have no speech to make upon the questions of the day, but I want to say this: The canvass has been a warm one, in some degree has been exciting, but as far as I know there has been nothing done on either side that is calculated to leave any feeling whatever. I did not want this nomination unless it was the wish of the democracy of Indiana. My competitors, both of them, I think, share the same feeling. I can say to you gentlemen, that Mr. Gray, my competitor in this canvass, has shown an energy that is worthy of any man. He has been industrious; he has been all over the State, and I would be proud indeed if we could have two Governors in Indiana. [Applause.] I advise energy in politics as well as in business, and I said to my friends throughout the State, that the canvass of Mr. Gray was commendable, but yet in every sense, gentlemen, it has been honorable. I will say this, that when this canvass is over you will not charge me with a lack of energy and industry. You will find me in every county in Indiana. I will be there defending the democratic party. I will be there to see that the party is organized for the contest. [Applause] We cannot get through this canvass without organization. We must have organization, and we will have organization, and when we get through with this canvass and elect our President, as we did four years ago we are determined—we mean what we say—that the man that represents a majority of the votes will be inaugurated as our President. [Applause.] There is no fraud now; no effort upon the part of the democratic party to inaugurate a man that has not been elected, but a determination on their part to see that the man that is elected is inaugurated. This will be our watchword.

I thank you most heartily, gentlemen, for the confidence that you have placed in me, and I hope that no man in Indiana, when the canvass is over, will regret that he has placed that confidence in me.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

Following Mr. Landers' speech, loud calls were made for Colonel Gray. He stepped upon the stage and was about to commence speaking when Austin H. Brown arose and said:

Before Col. Gray addresses this convention, I wish to interpose a motion, which is that Isaac P. Gray be declared the unanimous nominee of this convention for lieutenant-governor.

This motion created great excitement among the friends of Mr. Gray, the convention arising in mass and the cheering and swinging of hats continued for some time. When the confusion had partially subsided, one after another of the candidates for the position, who had been urging their claims upon the convention, arose and added to the excitement by seconding the nomination and withdrawing their names. When they had all been heard from, Governor Hendricks put the motion and declared it carried.

In introducing Col. Gray, Gov. Hendricks said:

I think that Landers and Gray would make the strongest ticket that could be put in the field, and I predict that there will not be republicans enough in number to get in sight of them.

Col. Gray responded in the following speech of acceptance:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION—Four years ago the democracy of Indiana, in convention assembled, nominated me, by acclamation, its candidate for lieutenant-governor. How well I discharged the duties of that position is now a part of the political history of Indiana. [Cries of "Good!"] I was nominated at that time without solicitation on my part. This convention to-day, again representing the democracy of Indiana, has, in the exercise of its political wisdom, seen proper to nominate me again, by acclamation, its candidate for lieutenant-governor. This is a compliment that has rarely been paid to any citizen of Indiana, so far as my memory

IT is believed in Montreal that the headquarters of the Cuban filibusters, so long established at New York, have been transferred to Canadian soil. A steamship carrying large quantities of ball cartridges, packed in sardine boxes, recently left Montreal, and an effort was made to overhaul her at Quebec, but the authorities failed to act.... The Nicaraguan Congress has confirmed the concession made by the Nicaraguan Government some time ago in the interest of that project. The name of Gen. In many places the pinch is now equal to any previous time. The distress is much felt by farmers who dread the workhouse, but can get nothing else until their crops come in. The Legislative Appropriation bill was recommitted to the conference committee, with instructions to yield to the wishes of the Senate relative to the salaries of Senate employes. Mr. Reagan submitted a conference report on the River and Harbor Appropriation bill, and it was agreed to. The conference committee on the Agricultural Appropriation bill was unable to agree, and a new one was appointed. The adjournment resolution, as amended by the Senate, was adopted. A conference committee was appointed upon the River and Harbor bill.

GARFIELD'S NOMINATION.

How It Was Brought About.

The Chicago Tribune contained the following in its issue of the morning after the adjournment of the Republican National Convention:

"The actual history of the break which culminated in the nomination of Gen. James A. Garfield is very short and very simple. It was, apparently, one of those afterthoughts which so often come as a relief from perplexity. It appears from the statements of a number of the leaders, which were made to a Tribune representative last night, that, in all the caucusing and planning of Monday night and yesterday morning, there seemed to be no possibility of an agreement. In these conferences Messrs. Hale and Chandler held that the nomination lay between Blaine and Grant, and they accordingly urged the friends of the other candidates to unite on Blaine, saying that the Blaine men could not afford to go to any one else. So it happened that, when the convention was called to order yesterday morning, no agreement or possibility of an agreement had been reached. Iowa was standing solid for Blaine, but, in a preliminary conference, had decided that Garfield should be their second choice.

"The decisive step seems to have been taken by the Wisconsin delegation. Garfield's manly course in the convention had created a favorable impression on all sides, the result of which in the Wisconsin delegation was that he was freely talked of for second choice. They held no caucus, and during the night of Monday were anxiously awaiting to see some other State make the break for Garfield. After the adjournment Monday night, and before the convention was called to order yesterday morning, the matter was talked up in the delegation, and it was agreed that, if no other solution offered itself within three or four ballots, the delegation should throw its solid strength to Garfield. No consultation was had on the subject with the other leaders, as it was intended to operate as a feeler, the Wisconsin men being among the last to be called on the roll. The result of this feeler every one knows. The Sherman men in the delegation had become convinced that their candidate could not be nominated, and were ready to unite with the Blaine and Washburne forces. The leaders and the delegates unite in saying that the movement was arranged entirely without the knowledge of Gen. Garfield and the Ohio delegation.

"The strange feature of the movement appear to be that the Ohio delegation had absolutely no intimation of it, and were not apprised of the fact that their State was to be supplied with a second favorite son. In regard to the question, Gov. Foster said: 'The Ohio delegation knew absolutely nothing of any such movement until the break was actually made. The fact of it is that we were making arrangements to transfer our strength, in Ohio at least, to Blaine, and this would certainly have been done within a few ballots had not the action of the Wisconsin delegation so taken us by surprise. It was the most spontaneous movement I ever saw. It took us all by surprise, and Garfield was the most surprised of all. The fact is that no one ever figured out such an ending, and the Ohio delegation had received no intimation of it. When the announcement of sixteen for Garfield from Wisconsin was made, we were at a loss to know what it meant. The greater part—almost the whole—of the Garfield boom was developed on the floor of the convention. Of course, we were satisfied with the result, and willingly fell in with the current. Garfield will carry Ohio sure; he is one of the most popular men in the State.'

"That there was much truth in this was evidenced by the way in which the Ohio men rushed around on the floor after the change in Wisconsin. Had they known it was coming there would not have been the amount of excitement which prevailed among them."

Strikes.

The number of trades implicated in the 2,352 strikes that took place in the United Kingdom during the 10 years 1870-'79 was 111, of which the builders headed the list with 598 strikes, the carpenters and joiners having 187 quarrels, the masons following with 151. The colliers followed next for 339, and the textile trades for 277. As to the localities, the most productive in strikes were Scotland, 473; Yorkshire, 338; Lancashire, 149; Northumberland, 138; South Wales, 135; Durham, 131—in fact, where the bulk of the iron, coal, shipping, and textile trades are found. Scotland had an extraordinary preponderance in strikes, and especially in her collieries and mines. The 10 highest town, on the list for Great Britain were Glasgow, 85; Leeds, 73; Sheffield, 66; Edinburgh and Leith, 65; Newcastle, 63; London, 56; Barnsley, 48; Dundee, 46; Merthyr, 45, and Manchester, 44.

SPURGEON said in a recent sermon: "The worship of the golden calf is pretty general now. There is too much bowing down and cringeing before it in all classes of society. No end of dodges are tried to get a scraping of one of the creature's hoofs."

THE raising of Angora goats in Western Texas is increasing, and is alleged to be a profitable business. It is said the meat is much better than mutton, and each goat yields about two pounds of hair annually. In the Eastern markets it is worth now 55 cents a pound.

THE New Haven Journal makes the curious statement that a post-mortem in the case of B. D. Purdy, Jr., of New Canaan, Ct., "revealed the fact that his death was caused by a broken neck, and that he had been living in that condition for some three years as is supposed."

JACOB BENNETT heard angry voices in his house at Sedalia, Mo., and, on peeping in, saw that the wife whom he was living with was confronted by the wife whom he had deserted. He cautiously stole away and sent a policeman to separate the women, who were found fighting furiously with knives.

THE Rev. Webster Hazlewood, of Roxbury, Mass., told his wife that he was tired of her, and wished that she would get a divorce, so that he could marry a more congenial woman. She did as he requested, he providing the evidence of his own criminality. He is now free, but was compelled to retire from the ministry.

THE two robbers who attacked and plundered Mr. and Mrs. Bacon, of New York, in a railway train between Milan and Veron, recently, have been arrested, convicted and sentenced—one to twenty and the other to thirty years' imprisonment, and all on account of the promptness and energy of Col. Schuyler Crosby, the American Consul General at Florence.

OF Emerson's personal appearance, Dr. Bartol says that "the nose showes a long and bony strength, seconded by the ample hand and foot that serve his tall, slender, angular, yet supple body, which seems Indian, Persian and Yankee by turns. A friend gazing on his countenace in sleep so felt a strange organic force and swiftness in his form and look that he was afraid to wake him up, not knowing what he would do!"

MISS BECKWITH, of England, is a plump young woman with great skill as a swimmer. Her latest effort was a thirty hours' swim in a huge tank. Before going into the water a committee of ladies ascertained that she wore nothing that could support her in the water. Then she began her task, and completed it successfully, giving many exhibitions of ornamental swimming. She took coffee and beef tea from a floating table, and in the night amused herself by singing and reading. The latter process she accomplished on her back and holding her book in both hands.

Nothing New Under the Sun.

The puzzle of 15-13-14 never was copyrighted, and much compassion has been spent on the inventor for his lack of foresight, which lost him the profits of his popular toy.

But there is a doubt as to whether he could have taken out a copyright. Some shrewd observer has discovered in a picture of "Melancholia," by Albert Durer, in the fifteenth century, the "gem puzzle," with the numbers from one to sixteen arranged so as to count thirty-four in twenty different ways.

So often do not only history but trifles repeat themselves that one is sometimes led to doubt whether there ought to be a copyright or patent for anything as being new under the sun.

The story of Shylock gave rise to vehement discussion in the Prussian Parliament the other day. One member asserted that the incident used by Shakspeare really occurred in 1587, but that it was the Christian who demanded the pound of flesh, and not the Jew. Singularly enough the fact was proved in debate that the leading idea of the story is found in ancient Hindoo mythology.

Irving's legend of Rip Van Winkle is supposed to be borrowed from Norse folk-lore; but it really originated in China. As told there, a villager went out to the mountains and found two old men playing chess in a cave. They handed him a date to eat. He stood watching them through a game, when one said to him:

"You have been a long time with us; now, go home."

Stooping to pick up his staff, it crumbled to dust in his hands; and when he returned to the village he found the ruins of a vast city. Centuries had passed. The terrified dreamer became a hermit, and after many years become immortal; in which part of the legend there is certainly some truth.

Nihilism, which is working such ravages in society, politics and religion in Russia, was a dominant influence in China in the tenth century. It destroyed six dynasties, and then slept, like the fabled Rip Van Winkle, to waken in another age and begin again its murderous work.

Colorado.

There is a great rush of people to Colorado this spring, the arrivals at Denver averaging 500 daily. The hotels are overflowing, and new ones are being erected. Business is active, and real estate has increased remarkably in price. The mines are the great attractions.

Every-Day Heroism.

One of the life-saving stations on the California coast has been officially named the "Maggy Geddes." A little girl of that name in San Antonio, aged 9 years, seeing a playmate fall into a mill-race, leaped in and with great skill and coolness, and, after a desperate struggle, succeeded in swimming with her ashore.

Another little girl, a year younger, in one of our New England towns, sprang into the river a few weeks ago, and rescued her baby brother from drowning, carrying him in her arms through the swift current, which reached her chin.

Now it was a graceful act of recognition to real heroism for the Government to give the name of little Maggy Geddes to a life-saving station, and it is right that these little heroines should be held up as examples of unselfish devotion to other girls and boys; always provided that the right lesson is drawn from their story.

Not many men, and very few children, ever have the chance to save another life at the risk of their own. Such supreme opportunities come but seldom. But every child should remember that just as much unselfishness, devotion and cool presence of mind can be shown in the little incessant matters of every day as go to make up some one great heroic deed.

In God's eye, it is not the size nor the dramatic effect of the action which counts, but its motive.

Many a young girl patiently bearing for years the cares of a disorganized household, or the peevishness of an invalid parent, or brother or sister; many a boy, bringing indomitable cheerfulness and love to the help of his tired mother—is entitled to more admiration and respect, and is just as heroic, as if in a spasmodic passion of courage they had momentarily faced death for those they loved.

A Trick in Faro.

I happened, in response to a pressing invitation, to find myself in a law court last Monday, when a curious mode of cheating at faro was shown. The game is played thus: "Thirteen cards are spread out on the table—that is to say, an entire suit. A pack of cards is shuffled by the banker, then cut by a player, when the banker proceeds to draw the cards, one after another, from the pack, first removing one. If a player has put a stake on any one of the cards which has been laid out upon the table, he wins, provided its equivalent is an odd card in the pack and he loses if it is an even one. Now, it would seem impossible that a player could cheat the banker. This is, however, how it is done: In shuffling, the banker generally shows the bottom card. When he hands the pack to be cut, the player cuts an even number, so that when the cut is put back by the banker the player knows that what was the bottom card will be an odd one, and, knowing also what that card will be, can stake upon it with a certainty that he will win. But how does he cut the number of cards that he chooses? By a very simple process. One side of the nail of his thumb is allowed to grow straight, and a little notch is made in it. Provided the length of the nail from the notch to the end be always kept the same, and that he presses the nail against the cards in cutting, he must always take up exactly the same number of cards.—London Truth.

Extraordinary Longevity.

Prominent among the lay representatives in the conference of the Methodist Protestants at Pittsburgh, Pa., is Joseph Wells, of Wellsville, Ohio. He is a member of a family of seven brothers and sisters whose longevity has, probably, no parallel in the United States, the youngest being beyond three score and ten years. Their several ages are as follows: Mary, 93; James, 91; George, 87; Joseph, 82; Ann, 80; Alexander, 72; Rachel, twin sister of Alexander, 72. The aggregate of all their ages is 557 years. The father of that family was William Wells, the founder of Wellsville. He died at the old homestead, near that town, about twenty-seven years ago at the ripe old age of 88.—Exchange.

THE GRAVE AND THE ROSE.

[Selected from the French of Victor Hugo.]

To the rose the dark grave said:
"With the tears upon thy brow,
By the pale, meek morning shed,
Flower of love, what makest thou?"

To the grave the red rose saith:
"Sepulchere, what makest thou,
With thy gaping gulfs so dread,
Laying low each noble brow?"

The rose replied: "Oh, darksome grave!
Of these tears I amber make;
Lo! perfumes the sunshine lave,
Tears to sweetness I awake."

To the rose the dark grave said:
"Plaintive flower, souls come to me
Immortality to wed,
Angels of the skies to be."

A GLASS manufacturer of Leeds, England, a widower with five children, proposed to a woman whom he understood to be 38 years of age. Finding, however, that she was younger, he wrote that he would prefer her elder sister. She replied that he was insulting, and she hoped the matter would end there—meaning his reference to her sister; but he understood the reply to mean that he was released from his engagement, and subsequently he married a widow who had two children. He was sued for breach of promise, and a jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with a farthing damages, but the Judge would not allow her costs.

THE celebration of the 130th birthday of Stephen Girard, a few days since, revealed the fact that 2,464 sons of widows have been educated in the college he founded.

NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Third Day.

Chairman Hoar called the convention to order at precisely 10:48 a. m.

After prayer by Rev. Dr. Little, Senator Conkling opened the ball by presenting a resolution reciting that no one should hold a seat in the convention unless he intended to support the nominee. A squeaky female voice back of the stage moved to amend by giving the ballot to women. Of course the interruption was unheeded. Eugene Hale, of Maine, jumped up and promised that his side would work night and day for the candidate.

The resolution was adopted on a viva voce vote, but to emphasize it a gentleman demanded a call of the States. The call proceeded uninterruptedly, all of the delegates voting aye, until West Virginia being reached, three votes were cast in the negative, amid a perfect storm of hisses, and when the vote was announced 716 for and 3 against the resolution, Conkling offered another, setting forth that the three who voted in the negative had forfeited their votes and their seats in the convention. This motion was cheered. The three delegates were S. P. McCormick, W. J. Burly, and A. W. Campbell, editor of the Wheeling Intelligencer. Campbell said he had voted the Republican ticket from his youth up, and when only thirty-nine votes were cast in his State for Abraham Lincoln. He carried his sovereignty under his hat, and would never bind himself not to exercise his right to think for himself. One of his colleagues, who voted in the affirmative, testified to the bravery with which Campbell had upheld the Republican standard.

Brandagee, of Connecticut, spoke in favor of free speech.

McCormick, one of the three, stated that he had not voted against the resolution because he did not intend to vote for the candidate, because he did intend to vote for him, but as a matter of principle, and then he went savagely for Conkling, saying that he had served two years in the war, and in 1876 had made over 100 speeches for the Presidential nominee, whereas the gentleman from New York had made only one, and it was notorious that the gentleman from New York never gave a hearty support to the Republican party unless he wanted something from it for himself.

Young, of Tennessee, a colored delegate, said something about the lack of grit in Southern delegates.

Campbell remarked that he thought he had as much grit as any man who wore a conscience in his breast.

Garfield got up, and, after the prolonged applause had ceased, he defended the right of the Virginians to vote no if they thought the motion inopportune. The gentlemen had stated that they intended to vote for the nominee, and that was all that should be asked of them. An allusion by the Ohio orator to the right of delegates to represent their constituents was cheered. He suggested that the gentleman from New York withdraw the resolution.

Mr. Conkling did so amid cheers and hisses.

The chair announced that he would clear the galleries from which hisses came. He was very properly indignant, and denounced the hissing as an outrage.

The report of the Committee on Rules was read, also a minority report. The consideration of the report was postponed until after the Credentials Committee reported, which the chair announced would be in half an hour.

At the expiration of the half-hour the chair called the convention to order, it being now 1 o'clock. He immediately introduced Hon. Omar D. Conger, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, who on behalf of the committee apologized for delay in deciding cases before them. He represented the difficulties under which they labored. They had been almost continuously and laboriously in session for over two days. The committee had considered all cases with candor and fairness, and without dispute, except on the merits of the various questions. The committee report a roll of members. In the Louisiana contest, they recommend the admission of the Warmoth delegation and the exclusion of the Beattie delegation. The report discusses the organization of the convention of the State of Louisiana. They find that the bolt was without cause.

They recommend the admission of James T. Rapier in the Fourth Congressional district of Alabama. This case is also traversed. They also advise that Smith and Warner, who were duly elected by the District Convention, should be admitted in place of Arthur Brigam and R. A. Mosely, of the Seventh Alabama.

In the Illinois case the committee recommend the following changes: In nine Congressional districts the contestants are admitted in place of sitting members. The Second Congressional district (West Side, Chicago) remains unchanged.

The districts in which changes are made in Illinois: First, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Tenth, Thirteenth and Seventeenth.

The committee report in favor of retaining the four delegates-at-large from Illinois.

In Kansas four district delegates are reported in place of sitting members.

In Pennsylvania Ninth and Nineteenth districts, sitting members are recommended as entitled to hold their seats.

In West Virginia the sitting members are entitled to their seats in contested cases. The committee rehearses the call of the National Committee as a basis for its action on all contested cases, and refers to previous calls to sustain their position and to show the justice of their decision. The calls of 1856, '60, '64 and all others down to the present date were the same in this respect as the calls of this year, and all were adopted with a purpose to remove doubts and make district representation a principle that could not be controverted or disputed.

The committee also say that the State conventions, too, have in almost every case decided that Congressional districts should have representation in the National Convention as they have elected them. The rights of representatives so elected have ever been regarded as sacred, and should not now be invaded for the first time in the history of the party by this convention. The committee declares the purpose of the convention is to select the candidate most likely to be elected, and the nearer we get to the true feeling of the people, the wiser and safer will be that selection. If State conventions may select delegates to a national convention who do not represent the feeling of the people, then those State conventions might as well select all the delegates from a single district in the State. This overriding of the will of the people cannot be too severely censured.

In the Utah case the committee favors retaining the sitting members as being in accord with these principles.

Mr. Clayton, of Arkansas, presented a minority report, which was read by the Secretary. The minority report differed from the majority mainly on the part of district representation, setting forth that, if the committee should adopt that method of selecting delegates, it would violate one of the best-established customs of the Republican party.

Mr. Conger moved that the report be so divided that each State shall be considered separately.

Mr. Conger presented a corrected roll of the convention, according to the report, and moved to take up the Louisiana case first.

Mr. Cessna, of Pennsylvania, submitted a proposition that all of the report upon which the committee had agreed be adopted, and then proceed to take up the four propositions upon which the committee had not agreed—those of West Virginia, Alabama, Illinois and Utah.

Gen. Logan arose and asked Mr. Conger if there was any contest over the four delegates-at-large from Illinois.

Mr. Conger said there was not.

Gen. Logan asked if there was any particular reason, then, why this conscientious majority of the Committee on Credentials had found it necessary to consider the Illinois delegates-at-large at all. He asked for fair play and decent treatment on the floor. "There is no contest in Illinois," said Gen. Logan, "and no committee has any right to question my title to a seat in this convention." Gen. Logan asserted that any pretense of a contest in Illinois was false, and altogether unwarranted.

Mr. Sharpe, of New York, moved to amend Mr. Cessna's motion by striking out all reference to the four delegates-at-large from Illinois.

Mr. Conger replied to Gen. Logan in a warm speech. He regretted that Gen. Logan or any one else should feel that the Committee on Credentials was disposed to do them an injustice.

After a long and heated discussion, participated in principally by Conkling and Logan on the one side, and Haymond, of California, and Conger, of Michigan, on the other, the motion of Gen. Sharpe was adopted, with only a few dissentient votes.

That portion of the report of the Credentials Committee concerning which there was no disagreement was then adopted without opposition.

That part of the report relating to the State of Alabama was next taken up and discussed until 4:20 p. m., when, on motion of Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, the convention took a recess until 7 o'clock.

The convention reassembled at 7:35 p. m. and took up the Alabama case, and, on motion of Gen. Harrison, of Indiana, forty minutes' time was allotted to the discussion of the case—twenty minutes to the friends of the majority and twenty minutes to the advocates of the minority report. Mr. Turner, of Alabama, and Gen. B. F. Tracy, of New York, then proceeded to state the case of the minority of the committee, while Mr. Parsons, of Alabama, and Gen. Bateman, of Ohio, made a plea for the majority report. The motion to substitute the minority for the majority report was then put and lost by a vote of 306 yeas to 449 nays.

The convention then proceeded to the consideration of the case of Illinois, and two hours' time was allotted, by vote of the convention, to its discussion—one hour to each side. Mr. Conger, of Michigan, and Mr. Anthony (one of the contesting delegates), of Illinois, then proceeded to make the plea for the majority report, while Gen. Raum and Emory A. Storrs, of Illinois, presented the case of the minority.

At the close of the two hours Chairman Hoar shut off debate, and Mr. Cessna, of Pennsylvania, called for a division of the question—the first part to embrace the First Congressional district of Illinois, the second division to embrace the other districts in dispute, reserving the right, if occasion should require, to make a further subdivision of the second division.

Senator Clayton, of Arkansas, offered a substitute to the effect that the report of the minority of the Committee on Credentials, so far as the same relates to the First district of Illinois, be substituted for that part of the report of the majority of said committee which relates to that district.

The substitute was lost—353 yeas to 387 nays.

That portion of the majority report relating to the First District of Illinois was then adopted by 384 yeas to 356 nays. The remainder of the majority report relating to the State of Illinois was adopted by about the same vote, and the convention, at 2:20 a. m., adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m., Saturday, June 5.

Fourth Day.

President Hoar called the convention to order at 11:45 a. m., and the proceedings were opened with a prayer by Rev. J. R. Paxton, of Washington city.

Ex-Gov. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the National Executive Committee be, and it is hereby, instructed to present a method or methods for the election of delegates to the National Convention to be held in 1884, to announce the same to the country, and to issue the call for the convention in conformity therewith.

Objection being made to the resolution, the chair ruled that the special order, namely, the consideration of the majority report on credentials, was the only thing before the convention.

The chair having decided that the report of the Committee on Credentials was in order, the contest in the State of Kansas was first in order.

Mr. Conger, Chairman of the committee, opened the debate on the question of admitting the contesting delegates from the Second and Third districts of Kansas. The report favored their admission, and Mr. Conger explained the report.

The convention, by 476 yeas to 184 nays, voted to admit the contesting delegates from the Second and Third districts.

The next question was upon so much of the majority report as relates to West Virginia.

Mr. Conger, on behalf of the Credentials Committee, reported that the contest there was in the Third district. The committee recommended that the sitting members be allowed to retain their seats.

The claimants contested on the ground that they had been elected in a district convention, but the committee found that this was not proven. Some of the delegates met the evening after the State Convention, but the committee were of the opinion that there was not a majority of the district at such meeting. This was the only point before the convention.

A delegate from Arkansas moved that so much of the report of the minority as relates to the contest in West Virginia be substituted for the majority report.

After considerable debate, the motion to adopt the minority report was adopted by a vote of 417 yeas to 330 nays.

The case of Utah was next in order, and was settled by the adoption of the minority report seating the contestants by a vote of 426 yeas to 312 nays.

The report of the Committee on Credentials, as amended, was then adopted as a whole.

The report of the Committee on Rules was then presented and adopted.

Gen. Garfield then moved that the Committee on Resolutions be ordered to report. The motion was carried unanimously, and Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, of New York, presented the report. The resolutions were as follows:

The Republican party, in National Convention assembled, at the end of twenty years since the Federal Government was first committed to its charge, submits to the people of the United States this brief report of its administration:

It suppressed a rebellion which had armed nearly 1,000,000 of men to subvert the national authority; it reconstructed the Union of States with freedom instead of slavery as its corner-stone; it transformed 4,000,000 human beings from the likeness of things to the rank of citizens; it relieved Congress from the infamous work of hunting fugitive slaves, and charged it to see that slavery does not exist; it has raised the value of our paper currency from 38 per cent. to the par of gold; it has restored, upon a solid basis, payment in coin of all national obligations, and has given us a currency absolutely good and equal in every part of our extended country; it has lifted the credit of the nation from the point where 6-per-cent. bonds sold at 86, to that where 4-per-cent. bonds are eagerly sought at a premium.

Under its administration railways have increased from 31,000 miles in 1860 to more than 82,000 miles in 1879. Our foreign trade increased from $700,000,000 to $1,150,000,000 in the same time, and our exports, which were $20,000,000 less than our imports in 1860, were $265,000,000 more than our imports in 1879. Without resorting to loans, it has, since the war closed, defrayed the ordinary expenses of Government, besides the accruing interest on the public debt, and has disbursed annually more than $30,000,000 for soldiers' and sailors' pensions. It has paid $880,000,000 of the public debt, and, by refunding the balance at lower rates, has reduced the annual interest charge from nearly $150,000,000 to less than $89,000,000. All the industries of the country have revived, labor is in demand, wages have increased, and throughout the entire country there is evidence of a coming prosperity greater than we have ever enjoyed.

Upon this record the Republican party asks for the continued confidence and support of the people, and this Convention submits to their approval the following statement of the principles and purposes which will continue to guide and inspire its efforts:

1. We affirm that the work of the Republican party for the last twenty years has been such as to commend it to the favor of the nation; that the fruits of the costly victories which we have achieved through immense difficulties should be preserved; that the peace regained should be cherished; that the Union should be perpetuated, and that the liberty be transmitted undiminished to other generations; that the order established and the credit acquired should never be impaired; that the pensions promised should be paid; that the debt so much reduced should be extinguished by the full payment of every dollar thereof; that the reviving industries should be further promoted, and that the commerce, already increasing, should be steadily encouraged.

2. The constitution of the United States is a supreme law and not a mere contract. Out of confederated States it made a sovereign nation. Some powers are denied to the nation, while others are denied to the States, but the boundary between the powers delegated and those reserved is to be determined by the national and not by the State tribunal.

3. The work of popular education is one left to the care of the several States, but it is the duty of the National Government to aid that work to the extent of its constitutional ability. The intelligence of the nation is but the aggregate of the intelligence in the several States, and the destiny of the nation must be guided, not by the genius of any one State, but by the average genius of all.

4. The constitution wisely forbids Congress to make any law respecting the establishment of religion, but it is idle to hope that the nation can be protected against the influence of secret sectarianism, while each State is exposed to its domination. We, therefore, recommend that the constitution be so amended as to lay the same prohibition upon the Legislature of each State, and to forbid the appropriation of public funds to the support of sectarian schools.

5. We reaffirm the belief avowed in 1876 that the duties levied for the purpose of revenue should so discriminate as to favor American labor; that no further grants of the public domain should be made to any railway or other corporation; that, slavery having perished in the States, its twin barbarity, polygamy, must die in the Territories; that everywhere the protection accorded to a citizen of American birth must be secured to citizens by American adoption. That we deem it the duty of Congress to develop and improve our sea coast and harbors, but insist that further subsidies to private persons or corporations must cease; that the obligations of the republic to the men who preserved its integrity in the day of battle are undiminished by the lapse of fifteen years since their final victory. To do them honor is and shall forever be the grateful privilege and sacred duty of the American people.

6. Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with the Congress of the United States and the treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding unrestricted immigration of Chinese as a matter of grave concernment, under the exercise of both these powers, would limit and restrict that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane and reasonable laws and treaties as will produce that result.

7. That the purity and patriotism which characterized the earlier career of Rutherford B. Hayes in peace and war, and which guided the thoughts of our immediate predecessors to him for a Presidential candidate, have continued to inspire him in his career as Chief Executive; and that history will accord to his administration the honors which are due to an efficient, just and courteous discharge of the public business, and will honor his vetoes interposed between the people and attempted partisan laws.

8. We charge upon the Democratic party the habitual sacrifice of patriotism and justice to a supreme and insatiable lust for office and patronage; that, to obtain possession of the National Government and the control of place, they have obstructed all efforts to promote the purity and to conserve the freedom of the suffrage, and have devised fraudulent ballots, and invented fraudulent certification of returns; have labored to unseat lawfully-elected members of Congress to secure at all hazards the vote of a majority of States in the House of Representatives; have endeavored to occupy by force and fraud the places of trust given to others by the people of Maine, rescued by the courage and action of Maine's patriotic sons; have, by methods vicious in principle and tyrannical in practice, attached partisan legislation to appropriation bills upon whose passage the very movement of the Government depended; have crushed the rights of the individual; have advocated the principles and sought the favor of the Rebellion against the nation, and have endeavored to obliterate the sacred memories and to overcome its inestimably valuable results of nationality, personal freedom, and individual equality.

The equal, and steady, and complete enforcement of the laws, and the protection of all our citizens in the enjoyment of all privileges and immunity guaranteed by the constitution, are the first duties of the nation.

The dangers of a "solid South" can only be averted by a faithful performance of every promise which the nation has made to the citizen. The execution of the laws, and the punishment of all those who violate them, are the only safe methods by which an enduring peace can be secured and genuine prosperity established throughout the South. Whatever promises the nation makes the nation must perform. A nation cannot with safety relegate this duty to the States. The "solid South" must be divided by the peaceful agencies of the ballot, and all honest opinions must there find free expression. To this end the honest voter must be protected against terrorism, violence or fraud.

And we affirm it to be the duty and the purpose of the Republican party to use all legitimate means to restore all the States of this Union to the most perfect harmony which may be possible, and we submit to the practical, sensible people of these United States to say whether it would not be dangerous to the dearest interests of our country at this time to surrender the administration of the National Government to a party which seeks to overthrow the existing policy under which we are so prosperous, and thus bring distrust and confusion where there is now order, confidence and hope.

Mr. Barker, of Massachusetts, offered the following amendment to the resolutions, which, after some discussion, was put to a vote and declared adopted:

The Republican party, adhering to the principles affirmed by its last National Convention of respect for the constitutional rules governing appointments to office, adopts the declaration of President Hayes that the reform of the civil service should be thorough, radical and complete. To this end it demands the co-operation of the Legislative with the Executive departments of the Government, and that Congress shall so legislate that fitness, ascertained by proper practical tests, shall admit to the public service.

Mr. Hale, of Maine—I move that the roll of States be called, that the announcement may be made of the members of the National Committee, as selected by the States and Territories and the District of Columbia. The motion was put and unanimously carried.

The following resolution, offered by Mr. Drake, of Minnesota, was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That, in case of the death or resignation of any member of the National Central Committee, the vacancy may be filled by appointment made by the State Central Committee of the proper State, or Territory, or District.

Mr. Hale, of Maine, next took the floor, and moved that the roll of States be called in alphabetical order, and that, whenever any State shall be reached from which a nomination is to be made for a candidate for President, the nomination be made under the rules adopted by this convention.

The Chairman—The Clerk will read the rule on the subject of balloting for nominations for President.

The Secretary read rule 9, as follows:

No member shall speak more than once upon the same question, nor longer than five minutes, unless by leave of the convention, except that the delegate presenting the name of a candidate shall be allowed ten minutes in presenting the name of such candidate.

The motion of Mr. Hale was adopted. Nominations for President being next in order, Mr. James F. Joy, of Michigan, when the name of that State was reached in the roll, arose and nominated James G. Blaine, of Maine.

J. B. Cassody, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Brandagee, of Connecticut, nominated E. B. Washburne, of Illinois.

Without taking a ballot, the convention, at 11:45 p. m., adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m Monday, June 7.

Fifth Day.

At 10:45 a. m. on Monday, June 7, Chairman Hoar called the convention to order.

The Rev. Dr. Everest, of Plymouth Church, Chicago, made the prayer.

At the request of several delegates, the fifth and sixth resolutions of the platform were read by the Secretary.

Mr. Hale, of Maine, then moved that the convention at once proceed to a ballot; Mr. Conkling seconded, and the motion was carried unanimously.

Chairman Hoar begged the convention to preserve order.

Grant	307	Edmunds	31
Blaine	279	Windom	10
Sherman	91	Garfield	2

At this point the convention adjourned until 10 o'clock, a. m., Tuesday, June 8.

Sixth Day.

The convention was called to order at 10:40 a. m. on Tuesday, June 8. After prayer by the Rev. Dr. Thomas, of Chicago, balloting was at once resumed, the twenty-ninth ballot resulting as follows:

TWENTY-NINTH BALLOT.

Grant	305	Edmunds	12
Blaine	278	Windom	7
Sherman	116	Garfield	2

The most noticeable change on the twenty-ninth ballot was the transfer of nineteen votes in Massachusetts from Edmunds to Sherman, giving the latter twenty-one votes from that State. Three of the Windom votes in Minnesota went to Blaine.

THIRTY-SIXTH AND LAST BALLOT.

While the roll was being called on this ballot, there was much excitement, and many changes were made from the Blaine column to Mr. Garfield, and the total footed up 399 for the Ohio statesman, to 306 for Grant, 42 for Blaine, 3 for Sherman and 5 for Edmunds. As 378 were necessary for a choice, Mr. Garfield was declared the nominee. The nomination was made unanimous, on motion of Senator Conkling, seconded by Gen. Logan.

It was upon this ballot that Indiana withdrew eighteen votes from Blaine, six from Washburne, two from Sherman and one from Grant, making a total of twenty-seven, and cast them for Garfield. Garfield also gained four votes from Sherman in Maryland. Grant gained one from Windom in Minnesota, and one from Blaine in Pennsylvania. Blaine gained one from Washburne in Wisconsin, and one from Sherman in Maryland. North Carolina transferred a vote from Sherman to Garfield.

The thirty-sixth and final ballot, resulting in the nomination of James A. Garfield, of Ohio, was then proceeded with amid intense excitement. The vote by States was as follows:

There was great confusion during this ballot, and the call of the roll was frequently interrupted by the applause of the audience and repeated cries of "Garfield! Garfield!"

When Iowa was called, Mr. Henderson, of that State, arose and said: "Iowa casts twenty-two votes for James A. Garfield."

When Maine was called, Senator Hale rose and said: "Maine cast fourteen votes for James A. Garfield."

By the time Wisconsin had been reached on the roll, Garfield had 352. The vote of that State, if cast for him, would insure his nomination beyond all doubt.

When Wisconsin was called, Mr. Cassody, of that State, arose at 1:30 p. m., amid a profound silence, and said, slowly and deliberately: "Two for U. S. Grant and eighteen for James A. Garfield."

These being the deciding votes, the convention and the galleries gave themselves up to cheering, shouting, and the waving of banners and handkerchiefs for some fifteen or twenty minutes, after which the vote of Wisconsin was corrected to twenty for Garfield.

After the announcement of the result of the ballot Senator Conkling arose and moved that the nomination be made unanimous. Senator Logan seconded the motion, and it was carried with a hurrah.

Upon re-assembling, the convention at once proceeded to nominate for a candidate for Vice President.

Mr. Pixley, of California, nominated Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois; seconded by Mr. McCarthy, of New York.

Mr. Robinson, of Connecticut, named Marshall Jewell, of that State.

Mr. Hicks, of Florida, named Thomas Settle, of North Carolina; seconded by Mr. Harris, of the latter State.

Mr. Houk, of Tennessee, nominated Horace Maynard, of that State.

Stewart S. Woodford, of New York, proposed the name of Chester A. Arthur, of New York. The nomination was seconded by Gov. Dennison, of Ohio; Gen. Kilpatrick, of New Jersey; Emory A. Storrs, of Illinois; Mr. Lynch, of Mississippi; Harris, of Maryland; Filley, of Missouri; Hicks, of Florida; Harris, of North Carolina; White, of Kentucky; McCarthy, of New York, and Cuney, of Texas.

William Chambers, of Texas, nominated Ex-Gov. Edmund J. Davis, of that State.

The Secretary called the roll for a ballot for Vice President, with the following result:

Necessary to a choice	376

The Chairman—Chester A. Arthur is nominated as candidate for Vice President, and the question now before the convention is, Shall the nomination be made unanimous?

Mr. McBeth, of Missouri—I move you that the nomination of Chester A. Arthur, of New York, be made unanimous.

Mr. Haymond, of California—The nomination undoubtedly is one that will be eminently satisfactory to the country, and, as the delegation from California had another choice, I think it is but right and proper for California to move to make that unanimous.

The Chairman—Those in favor of making the nomination unanimous will say aye; those opposed, no. It is carried unanimously.

On motion of Mr. Conger, of Michigan, a committee of one from each State was appointed to notify Gen. Garfield and Gen. Arthur of their nomination.

After passing a vote of thanks to the Chairman and other officers, the convention, at exactly 7:30 p. m., adjourned sine die.

FOR some reason or other M. Thiers would not have an almanac in his study, and was often unable to date a letter because he could not remember the day of the month. Upon one occasion a Government clerk, to whom he had promised a letter of recommendation, came by appointment for it, and M. Thiers, sitting down to write it, asked him the day of the month. For a moment the young man could not remember it, and M. Thiers exclaimed: "You are not likely to make a good administrator if you cannot remember the day of the month!" He wrote the letter, however, saying, as he gave it to the young man: "Always carry a pocket almanac, my young friend."

A FREE BALLOT.

Senator Voorhees on Federal Supervision of Elections.

The bill to define the tenure of Chief Supervisors of Election being under consideration in the United States Senate, Mr. Voorhees, of Indiana, spoke as follows:

I do not believe in Supervisors or Chief Supervisors of Elections. With all the strength of my convictions, heart and mind, I am against them all; for when it comes to me, either as a revelation or an affirmation, that the American people cannot govern themselves, either in township or county or in State, I will feel from my education that this Government is lost as a republic. I see nothing but evil in this Federal machinery, so called, to supervise the ingoing and the outcoming of the American ballot. Whatever other Senators may think upon this subject, I have no disguises about my opinion. If Senators on that side of the Chamber when they talk of a "nation" mean that a nation has the power to subvert the fundamental principles of popular sovereignty, of self-control, I do not believe in that sort of a nation. I believe in no loose confederacy from which an erratic star may shoot at its own pleasure. I believe in no power of a State to break this Union. I said so during the war in my place in the House, and I believe just as little in the power of the Federal Government to usurp and supplant the power of the State in local self-government and home rule.

There has been enormous abuse on this question. No wonder that the Senator from New York rises in his place to defend it; no wonder he attempts to defeat this bill. It supplants, and if it did not supplant, the Chief Supervisor in New York I should not be for it. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio gives vital power, force, efficiency, and acceptability to this bill, and that is that no man who has heretofore held the office of Chief Supervisor, and, holding it, illustrated his tyranny, usurpation, oppression, and power of outrage, shall ever hold it again. But for that I would not vote for it. I have no hesitation in saying that I will vote for no bill that gives to the President of the United States the power to keep Johnny Davenport and assimilated hirelings in politics the right to stay in office.

I have heard this afternoon a constant complaint of the danger of illegal voting. I ask the Senate to allow me to read a statement made by a member from the State of New York in the other branch of Congress. Speaking of the scenes and the practices that occurred at New York elections, he says:

A neighbor of mine, who had resided in the same district for seventeen years and a soldier in the Union army at that, was arrested. I was asked to go to the Republican headquarters in an adjoining district, whither he had been taken. The street for an entire block was lined with carriages, in which the unfortunate citizens who had fallen into the hands of the Philistines had been or were to be conveyed. When I entered the building I found the front room decorated with all the paraphernalia of a political headquarters, and filled with Republican politicians. In the back room a United States Commissioner was holding court. The door was closed, watched by a Cerberus. No one was allowed inside but the prisoners and the Republican managers. After about half an hour's waiting, I was informed by the doorkeeper that the man I was looking for was no longer there. I asked whither he had been taken. "Suppose to Fort Davenport," was the laconic reply.

Is that agreeable to Senators on that side of the Chamber? Is it agreeable to read that a Chief Supervisor has some place designated by his own name as a place of imprisonment for American citizens. "'Fort Davenport,' was the laconic reply." Let me read now what "Fort Davenport" looked like when this man reached there:

Such a scene as the rooms of this court presented on that election day has never before been witnessed in this city or in this country, and it is to be hoped never will again. From early morning until after the polls were closed these rooms were packed and jammed with a mass of prisoners and Marshals. Not only were they crowded beyond their capacity, but the halls and corridors were thronged with those who were unable to obtain admission, so that the counsel representing the prisoners and the bondsmen who were offered to secure their release had the greatest difficulty, and were frequently unsuccessful in obtaining entrance. In addition to all this was that delectable iron "pen" on the upper floor, in which men were crowded until it resembled the Black Hole of Calcutta, and where they were kept for hours hungry, thirsty, suffering in every way, until their cases could be reached.

What a choice morsel of American history is here for those who stand on this floor and cry out for a nation to put people in an iron pen and keep them there.

With scarcely an exception these men had gone to the polls expecting to be absent but a short time. Many of them were thinly clad; numbers had sick wives or relatives; some were sick themselves. There were cartmen who had left their horses standing in the public streets; men whose situations depended on their speedy return; men who wished to leave the city on certain trains. Every imaginable vexation, inconvenience, injury and wrong which the mind can conceive existed in their cases, so that it was painful for the counsel who were endeavoring to secure their release to approach sufficiently near the railing to hear their piteous appeals and witness the distress which they had no power to alleviate. And over all this pushing, struggling, complaining crowd Mr. Commissioner John I. Davenport sat supreme, with a sort of Oriental magnificence, calmly indifferent to everything but the single fact that no man who was arrested was allowed to vote.

No Turk invested with a Caliph's power in some province under the sway of the Sultan ever outraged individual security, personal decency, personal liberty beyond what is there described; and I say to the Senators on the other side, on this question, as on all others, we will meet you and continue to meet you, discuss it with you, and we will triumph, unless American liberty shall die. As long as liberty lives, as long as the inherent, everlasting, glorious rights for which our fathers counseled, led the armies, and fell on the field, live, so long we will be right and you will be wrong, and nobody knows it better than the Senators on that side themselves. No one knows the inherent force and power of this issue more than they do. They spring up here and make false issues upon us, or seek to do so, dreading and knowing perfectly well that upon the great question of the right and power of the people, unsupervised, uninspected, unspied, to cast their votes, this side of the Chamber is entirely right.

Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has assumed to say—and I speak to him and of him with entire personal kindness; it is not in my heart to speak otherwise of men unless I am compelled to do so—that we are afraid to meet issues like this. I will tell you who is afraid. The Senators on that side of the Chamber are afraid to trust the people; they are afraid to trust the sovereign capacity of the people; they are afraid to trust the intelligence of the people; they are afraid to trust the virtue of the people; they dare not do it, because without hindrance, without control, the people will condemn those who desire to put spies upon them and enact in the laws of this country a system of espionage. The Senators on that side are those who are afraid, and they are much more afraid than it would be possible for this side of the Chamber to be of that side. They are afraid of that great, majestic power of public opinion; they are afraid of the great, untrammeled power of the people, and they cant—cant is the word—upon the subject of a nation. What is the meaning of it? What do you mean by it? Do you mean that a nation shall come in with imperial power to strike down the unrestrained and untrammeled voting capacity of the people?

Do you mean by that that it is necessary for Supervisors and Chief Supervisors and Deputy Marshals, clothed with insolent power as they are with their locust clubs, to go into my State and up and down the regions there to master and overmaster the people's judgment and their will? Who is it that is afraid here? I will tell you who is afraid. The Senator from Vermont is afraid to trust the people; the Senator from Vermont is afraid to take away his overseers; he is afraid to take away his spies; he is afraid to take away this system of espionage; he is afraid to take away this system of brute force. He desires John I. Davenport and his iron pen. He is afraid to trust the doctrines of the Revolution, which said that this Government was founded upon the virtue and the intelligence of the people.

Atlas.

Professor to classical student: "You ask, if Atlas supported the world, what supported Atlas. The question, dear sir, has often been asked, but never, so far as I am aware, satisfactorily answered. I have always been of the opinion that Atlas must have married a rich wife and got his support from her father."

Joint Representative Convention.

Delegates from the counties of DeKalb, Noble, and Elkhart, the same constituting a joint representative district, will meet in convention at Kendallville, Ind.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 6th, 1880.

for the purpose of nominating a democratic candidate for joint representative for the counties named. The ratio of representation will be one delegate for each 100 votes cast for Gov. Jas. D. Williams in 1876, and one for each fraction of 50 or over, as follows:

DeKalb county	[illegible]
Noble "	21
Elkhart "	31
Total	86

By order of the district committee.

Judicial Convention.

The democracy of Noble, DeKalb and Steuben counties, constituting the 35th judicial district, will meet in delegate convention at Kendallville, Ind., on for the purpose of nominating a judge of the circuit court and prosecuting attorney. The ratio of representation will be the same as that in the joint representative convention, which will be held at the same time and place.

FRIDAY AUGUST 6th, 1880,

By order of the district committee.

A fire at Ashland, Ohio, on the 6th inst. resulted in the complete destruction of City Hall and the business rooms of W. G. Heltman and Parmely & Mann. At one time over twenty fires were started by sparks and pieces of burning timber scattered by a strong wind. Total loss, $35,000; insurance, $25,000.

The Credit-Mobilier crookedness, with which Garfield was proven to have been identified, was monopolized by the republican party, at least but one democrat (Brooks) was ever charged with guilt in that connection, and he went home and died for the good of the party. The Credit-Mobilier investigation was made by republicans, and Garfield was proven to have been identified with the thieving transaction. No man is better fitted to represent republican ideas than he.

Hon. Horatio Seymour seems to be the second choice of Indiana democrats for the presidency. If his name is presented in the convention he is almost certain to be nominated.

Ex-Senator James A. Bayard of Delaware, father of Thomas F. Bayard now a member of the U. S. senate, died at his home in Wilmington last Saturday morning.

The COURIER of last week contained the first two days proceedings of the republican national convention at Chicago; this issue contains the balance of the proceedings in full, for the benefit of our republican readers.

Democrats who attend the national democratic convention at Cincinnati, will find the general Indiana headquarters at the Gibson House. The headquarters of the executive committee will be at the Burnet House.

The recent democratic state convention was one of the largest and most enthusiastic ever held in the state. The ticket nominated cannot be surpassed for popularity and strength, and will be elected by an overwhelming majority.

The democracy of DeKalb ought to import some man with a thimbleful of brains to edit "their" county paper for them.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

Yes, the editor of the Sentinel for instance, whose cranium is about of that capacity.

With the state ticket nominated at Indianapolis last week, and the democratic county ticket so popular here at home, the democrats of DeKalb county have only to stand together as one man to insure success. Let us all go to work with a will and place DeKalb in the list of reliable democratic counties. We must elect the entire county ticket by at least 500 majority.

Whether Mr. Hendricks receives the nomination for president or not, his candidacy has done much to strengthen the democratic party in Indiana. Had it not been for the earnest desire on the part of all democrats in this state to show the democrats of other states the power and influence of harmony, and the respect for, and confidence imposed in their recognized leader, the results of the state convention might have been different and less satisfactory, and the influence and arguments of Indiana democrats at the Cincinnati convention would have been less potent.

A train of sixteen palace cars will convey the Tammany Hall democracy of New York city to the Cincinnati convention. A dispatch from New York says:

The feeling against Tilden seems to have been intensified by the defeat of Grant at Chicago. Prior to that event many democrats looked upon him as the right man to run against the general. But now the desire is, even it is said among some of those most earnest in his behalf, that he should resign and leave the field to some man upon whom the party can heartily unite.

But little enthusiasm is manifested by the republicans of Indiana. The invincible state ticket nominated by the democrats, together with the result of the Chicago convention has demoralized the republican forces of this state to such an extent that no ticket can be presented by the state convention, which meets to-day, that will be acceptable to the masses of the party. The republican party of Indiana is groping in political darkness in search of a leader, and thousands of good honest republicans are ready to desert the sinking ship and take refuge under the good old democratic banner, providing an acceptable ticket is nominated at Cincinnati.

The Auburn COURIER is about the poorest and thinnest specimen of a democratic county paper that comes to this office. The democracy of DeKalb ought to import some man with a thimbleful of brains to edit their county paper for them.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

Our recent allusion to "a newspaper which contained nothing but advertising—for patent medicines and Tilden," must have been applicable to the Sentinel; hence the attempt to get even, by the French gentleman with eye-glasses, who presides in the editors sanctum of the oyster (?) organ. Keep cool Samyule, don't get excited until after you get Tilden nominated. You ought not waste your ammunition on small game.

Landers and Gray.

The democratic party of Indiana has presented for the suffrages of the enlightened voters of Indiana, one of the strongest, if not the strongest and most acceptable ticket ever nominated by any party in this state. Mr. Landers, while he was not our first choice, we are free to acknowledge has ability, integrity and strength before the people; he is a gentleman above reproach in every particular, and fully able to sustain his enviable reputation in a contest for the governorship.

Mr. Gray, who has joined his political destinies with those of Mr. Landers, as one of the rising democrats of the state, as was evidenced by the manner in which the young democracy rallied to his support for the first place on the ticket. He is an able speaker, a true democrat and an honest, upright citizen; no man is more entitled to the confidence and respect of the party than he, and no man would have made a better governor. Landers and Gray, with the whole state ticket, will have a walk-over in the great contest of 1880.

THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION AND THE TICKET NOMINATED.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

A Musical Sound.

[Terre Haute Express.]

Landers and Gray has a musical sound. Pronounce them and the names run smoothly from the tip of the tongue through the parted lips. They sound like victory.

Now for Victory.

[Plymouth Democrat.]

The ticket nominated is an exceptionally strong one, and will command the support of the entire democratic party, as well as that of many voters from the opposition. Now for victory.

Make Things Hot.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

With Landers and Gray at the head of the ticket and Hon. W. H. English as chairman of the state central committee, we ought to make things so hot for Indiana radicalism that not a sprout of it will be left after next November.

To be Congratulated.

[Evansville Courier.]

The democratic party is to be congratulated on the choice made yesterday at Indianapolis by their delegates for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. In the selection of Hon. Franklin Landers to lead the democratic party to success in November, and with the invaluable assistance of Col. Gray, there can be no doubt as to the result of the campaign, so far as the state of Indiana is concerned. The popularity and determination of Mr. Landers to win, always, has been demonstrated thoroughly and satisfactorily heretofore. In his race for congress he had the proud honor of carrying Marion county and we have a suspicion he will do so again. As an organizer he has no superiors and few equals in this state, and whenever he enters into a campaign he goes in to win, no matter what the odds are against him. In Col. Gray we have one of the most popular and brilliant men in this state, and no man stands higher than he does, and deservedly so, for in the campaign of 1876 he took rank as a fine speaker, a thorough gentleman, and achieved a popularity surpassed by none.

A Strong Ticket in Every Sense.

[Indianapolis Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The following from then pen of "Jayhawker," who is a radical republican, ought to be considered good authority:

The democratic state ticket elected yesterday is a strong one in every sense. Mr. Landers, the head of the ticket, is just in the prime of life—a fine physical specimen and one of the most energetic business men in the state. He began life without a dollar, working on a farm in summer, and attending school in winter. When twenty years of age he passed his examination and for several winters thereafter taught school. His business sense and thrift enabled him to make money and keep it, and when the war broke out he was one of the largest farmers and stock-raisers in the state, and at the same time a successful merchant. Before that time he had served in the legislature several terms, making a good record. In 1863 he was sent to the state senate. During the time of the draft, his township through his efforts always furnished its quota of men without draft. To-day Mr. Landers is stronger with the ex-soldier vote than any man in Morgan county, for he befriended the families of every one that needed aid. His career in congress is too well and favorably known in Indiana to need mention here. Mr. Landers is a hard student, and gives more time to books than any man of his age in the state. His library on finance embraces everything that has ever been written on the subject, and he has studied it carefully. Yet, with all this, he cultivates nearly three thousand acres of land, carries on an extensive pork-packing establishment, and has a large interest in a wholesale dry-goods house in this city. As a husband, father and neighbor, no man in the state deserves to rank higher.

Col. Isaac P. Gray is one of the young men of the state, and a living representative of energy and pluck in a political sense. He is chuck full of what the boys call "sand," and he uses it whenever needed. His action on yesterday in accepting the second place almost insures him the unanimous nomination four years hence if he wants it. Governor Hendricks said yesterday that it was the strongest ticket ever offered to the people of Indiana, an indorsement which can be appreciated when it is remembered that Mr. Hendricks twice made the race for governor.

From the same source a few days later:

The sinking ship is being deserted in Indiana. Two weeks ago the republicans of this state were so certain of success that the whole of the party managers were candidates for the offices. Generals Coburn, Shackleford, Streight, and a half-dozen others were red-hot on the track for the gubernatorial nomination. To-day Streight is the only one left. The Chicago nomination and the ticket made here last Wednesday did the business. The late republican candidates are the sickest lot of politicians ever seen in Indiana; but their cards of withdrawal read well in the newspapers. Democratic elation has grown in a corresponding ratio. Their platform adopted Wednesday places the democracy of this state in accord with those of the whole country and it reflects the unanimous sentiment of the party in Indiana.

The 16th Annual Session of the Indiana State Sunday-School Union, to be Held at Warsaw Next Week.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 8, 1880.

EDITORS COURIER: About this time of year look out for conventions, for they are getting ripe fast now. And they are not all political either, for in this goodly state of ours Sunday-school conventions are by no means a novelty.

The largest, and no doubt the best one of the season, will be held in Warsaw, Kosciusko county, this June 22, 23 and 24, and will be the sixteenth annual meeting of the Indiana State Sunday-School Union. Warsaw is a beautiful little city, situated on the crossing of the Wabash and Michigan, and Fort Wayne and Chicago railroads, about 35 miles northwest of Fort Wayne, and some 80 or 90 miles north of Indianapolis. It is surrounded by several beautiful lakes, which abound in fish and furnish delightful boating. As to the good people of Warsaw, their liberality and hospitality seem to be unbounded. They have been making preparation for the meeting for nearly a year, and promise to feed, shelter and entertain all the Sunday-school workers who can be persuaded to go there—whether there be a hundred or a hundred thousand.

Railroads throughout the state will make liberal reductions in fare. As it is to be a mass convention, every Sunday-school in the state can send as many delegates as can be persuaded to go. For further particulars, apply to Charles H. Conner, secretary, New Albany, or I. H. C. Royce, president, Terre Haute, Ind.

Having been treasurer of the State Sunday-School Union for the past three years, of course I am more interested in the finances than any other branch of the work, so right here I would like to get in a few words on that subject.

At the fifteenth annual convention held in Richmond last June, it was decided to make an assessment on each Sunday-school in the state of an amount equal to one cent only for each member, for the purpose of raising the necessary means for carrying on the work of the state organization. To facilitate the collection of this assessment, a small "penny collection box," made of paste-board, was provided, to be hung up in the Sunday-school room where pennies could easily be dropped into it, the hole in the box being made plenty large enough to admit a half dollar, if ever necessary. Several hundred of these boxes have been sent out to the various superintendents in the state, some of whom have most cheerfully and promptly paid the very small sum asked for, and more too, but a great many more have evidently hung the box up in the stove or waste-basket, instead of the Sunday-school room, thinking, possibly, that the matter was not worthy of their attention; or perhaps, that their school was too poor to spare one cent from each member.

Of course there are many schools which received no boxes, because the addresses of the superintendents could not be learned. Now, Mr. Editor, the object of these remarks just here is to induce every one who reads them to first hunt up, and then hang up that lost box in the Sunday-school room, and have a special collection taken up on next Sunday, June 20, for this purpose, and forward to me as per address below, at once, so I can get the money in time to include it in this year's report to be made at the convention on the 23rd inst., and thus prevent the distressing necessity of reporting many counties delinquent—an ugly word which ought never to appear on the same page with the name of a Sunday-school man, or body of men. Is not that so? Let the money be forwarded to me in care of the convention at Warsaw on Monday, or sent by some delegate, for any amount received before the morning of the 23rd will be in time to prevent the above-mentioned delinquent calamity. Should the penny box not be found, a good-sized hat will do as well.

One word more about the convention and I will stop. Do not wait for further instructions, but begin at once to make preparation for going. Allow me to urge every reader of this to see to it that the whole matter is laid before his school on next Sunday, June 20, and at least one if not more delegates appointed to attend the convention.

Very respectfully,
CHARLES D. MEIGS, JR.,
Treasurer of the Indiana State Sunday-School Union, No. 5 east Washington street, Indianapolis.

Special Notice to Soldiers.

The law granting arrears of pensions, dating back to the day of discharge, will soon expire. It is highly important that soldiers of the late war who expect to apply for pensions should file their papers now. If their claims are filed before the law expires they will have all the benefits of the law. Land warrants and pensions for all U. S. wars prior to 1861; pensions and bounties for soldiers (and heirs) of the late war. Experience of 20 years. Information in regard to all military claims gratis. It is probable the present congress will pension Mexican soldiers without regard to disability, and also their widows. Send in your names.

—The finest mixed paints, ready for use, also pure white and red lead, at bottom prices, can be had at Casebeer & Matheny's—the Physicians' drug-store.

—Our Jack Little, foreman in this establishment, has again been floored by a "bile." Don't ask him where it is, because he'll not tell you; and besides, he may get mad.

—George Weamer had a cigar agency in Waterloo, but it didn't pan out worth a cent. George manufactures cigars to sell—not to give away—and therefore the aforesaid agency has gone up the flume.

—Commissioners court adjourned Tuesday evening until Friday morning. The business of the session being incomplete makes it necessary to defer the publication of the proceedings until next week.

—When you go to Waterloo, either for pleasure or on business, stop at Butt's hotel, which runs a free hack to and from all trains. Commercial men, and the traveling public generally, will find this house convenient and pleasant in all respects.

—Hollister's ice cream is hard to beat.

—The M. E. church social at the residence of Dr. J. B. Casebeer last evening, was a very pleasant affair. Mr. and Mrs. Casebeer understand how to do the agreeable.

—A few bushels of corn or oats, and a small load each of hay and straw would be taken on subscription at this office, if brought in soon.

—The report to the effect that John Robbins had fallen through a straw and drowned himself, while sucking a lemonade, is without foundation.

—When Mike Boland wants the arm-rest, to use in his recordorial duties, he says: "Frank, give us a rest"—and Frank gives. (Mose Dills' name is Frank).

—Old Charlie Garfield, Lew.'s father, whose case was dismissed at the last term of court, pleaded poverty, and an attorney was appointed at the expense of the county to defend him.

—A number of delinquent subscribers will be dropped from our list on the first day of July, if they do not pay up before that time. It costs money to publish a paper, and we must have money in return for our expenditures and labor.

—Mr. B. F Dawson, of Angola, one of the alternate delegates to the Cincinnati convention, called in to see us yesterday. Ben. is sound on Hendricks, and is just the kind of a politician to do effective work in the national convention.

—Will. Rose, head clerk at the Swineford house, has this week been taking instructions from the landlord in the way of building fish nets. They are making a good one, and when finished it will be big enough to catch the court-house in.

—It is said that 8,000 people were present at the soldiers' re-union in Waterloo, last Friday. While that sounds very much like one of the Ft. Wayne Sentinel's snake stories, still, it cannot be far from correct, as the town was either too small or the re-union too large.

—Dealers in agricultural machinery in Auburn and vicinity, can show more sales during 1880, than the dealers in the same line in any other town in northern Indiana, except Fort Wayne. This is big talk, but we challenge a comparison of figures at the end of the season.

—Al. Robbins, R. H. Weamer, J. E. Rose, E. Provines, A. S. Leas, Jno. Somers and a crazy man went to Indianapolis yesterday. The befuddled individual's object was to attend the republican convention, but what the others went for could not be ascertained.

—An excursion from Muncie, consisting of five well-filled coaches, went to Pleasant Lake, over the Jackson road, Tuesday morning at 8 o'clock. As the name indicates, it is a pleasant place, and it is growing more popular all the time as a resort.

—The Edgerton Herald tells of a little boy at Crestline who died from eating "wild parsnips while at play." Having examined reliable authorities, we are prepared to say that such a case could not have occurred. Wild parsnips have never been seen at play.

—The circuit court opened Monday last, with Judge Lowry on the bench, but adjourned after a session of about two hours. The republican state convention at Indianapolis to-day, was the cause of it, as several of the attorneys felt that it could not proceed without them.

—The soldiers' re-union at Waterloo, last Thursday and Friday, was productive of numerous battles between the boys who had "bowled up" too diligently with liquid enthusiasm. No less than four punching bees occurred Thursday evening within a period of twenty minutes.

—Lute Wright and Coop. Ralston comprised one of the teams who took advantage of the excursion rates to Pleasant Lake, last Sunday morning. They don't care to have anything said about their fishing, but Coop. wants to know why Byron Rainier rode back on top of the passenger coach.

—The state Sunday-school union meets in its sixteenth annual convention June 22, 23 and 24, at Warsaw. A good programme has been arranged, and a general attendance from this county is desired. For reduced railroad fare, address the vice-president, Frank W. Willis, Waterloo, Ind.

In 1876, when Hayes ran for president and Garfield ran for congress, the majority for Hayes in Ashtabula, Geauga, Lake, Portage and Trumbull counties (Ohio) was 12,232; the majority for Garfield in the same counties was 8,663, or 3,569 less than Hayes. Does this show popularity at home?

—John Rush, formely agent for the Jackson road at Pleasant Lake, has gone to Janesville, Wisconsin, accompanied by Toby Rush and "Pete" Eldridge, where the trio will enter a school for instructions in telegraphy. The boys started Monday, via the B. & O., and will be joined next week by Will. Ryan.

—What has become of the town ordinance which was intended to prevent cattle from running at large at night; are the quadrupeds of the genus Bos; to be permitted to tear down gates, jump fences, destroy gardens and disturb the slumbers of our citizens without protest being entered? Our city fathers are expected to see that the ordinance is enforced.

—An old man who is evidently afflicted with religious monomania, drew a curious crowd around him, yesterday afternoon, while saying his prayers on the street corner. How he manages to eke out an existence in that particular way is hard to conjecture. If his crowd yesterday is a fair sample of those he gets elsewhere, he doesn't do it by picking pockets, to a certainty.

—Some few months since, a man who lives within a radius of less than nine hundred miles from Auburn made application at the proper tribunal for permission to live apart from his other self—a girl whom he had married by request,—but his appeal was ignored, and in return, about the first of this month, the girl herself made a similar experiment, with better success. A divorce was granted, and in less than ten days the man was rehitched and is, so far as we ken, living in ecstatic bliss with another partner. Such are the vicissitudes of life—in double harness.

—The singing school Saturday evening proved a failure on the part of the teacher. Quite a large class out, notwithstanding the appearance of rain.

—Farmers in this vicinity are very much elated over the fine prospects of wheat and grass. If the weather continues favorable there will be a large yield of wheat, which will set our farmers nicely on their feet again.

—Mr. Bartley, formerly of Auburn, has bought the farm of Noah Lung, one mile south of the village, and moved on it. We think we have made a good exchange, at least we have got rid of one nuisance—the distillery—for which we are truly thankful.

—Mrs. Sarah Smith and daughter, who formerly lived in this place, have bought the farm formerly belonging to Mr. Gideon Houser 1 1-2 miles south of the village. They have taken up their abode there and gone into the agricultural business. We hope they will like it and find it profitable.

—The funeral services of old Mr. Probst were held on the 12th at the church north of us. The family were in ill health at the time of his death, hence the deferring of the ceremonies till now. There was a large attendance, and the sermon by Rev. F. M. Hussey, of Kendallville, and the singing were excellent, and appeared to be appreciated by the congregation. X. Y. Z.

Big Figures.

Even those familiar with the enormous sales of the "Vibrator" separators manufactured by Nichols, Shepard & Co., will be surprised to know that if all the separators manufactured by them were set up ready for work and placed in line just touching each other, the line would be more than 100 miles long. And if to this are added the engines and powers manufactured by them, the line would be over 200 miles in length. To ship these machines, placing one on each car, would require 25,000 cars, making 1,250 trains of 20 cars each. With such a demand it is easy to see why the firm carries in stock 10,000,000 feet of the choicest air-seasoned lumber. The reason of this success is the fact that the "vibrator" is perfectly simple, does not easily get out of order, lasts the longest, and does the best and quickest work. Every article used in its manufacture is the very best that money can buy, and as the firm have an abundance of capital, they buy for cash and therefore sell at a price no higher than other parties charge for a poor article. Of course, no one would buy any threshing machinery without first examining that made by Nichols, Shepard & Co , Battle Creek, Mich.

—Circuit court has been adjourned until August 23, when Judge Lowry will be present to finish all business assigned to him. On the 30th of August Judge McClellan will convene court to finish up all business that may come before him.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 21-41

WHITE CLOVER.

BY MRS. J. T. H. COONS.

I.

O, beautiful white clover,
You bloom the green earth over,
And the bee, the restless rover,
Kisses with delight unbounded
Your faces soft and rounded;
Then away again he goes,
And he whispers to the rose,
With what takes her sweet repose
He disturbs, there's no one knows.
But, mark! he hastens back
To his first love, meek and fair,
Soft along the perfumed track,
Through the lazy summer air.
Then he revels all day long
In your beauty pure and white,
Droning o'er his one love-song
Till the day is lost in night.

II.

O, beautiful white clover,
When the world was bright all over,
And my heart was light and free,
[illegible], before a single shadow
Its [illegible] o'er the meadow,
Where you used to smile for me,
How I loved you and caressed you!
How I played with you and blessed you!
And one eve I'll ne'er forget,
When the golden sun had set,
The sky was blue and fair,
Your sweetness filled the air,
And the stars were thick and bright,
And I watched them with delight—
I thought the sky a mirror,
And the stars your forms reflected
On its calm and radiant brow;
All things were so protected,
And heaven seemed so much nearer
Than to earth than it does now.

MUNCIE, Ind.

STORY OF A SKELETON SKIRT.

I was in the civil service at Richmond. Enough that I was there, and on honest business. That business done, I prepared to return home. And thereby hangs this tale, and, as it proved, the fate of the Confederacy.

For, of course. I wanted to take presents home to my family. Very little question was there what these presents should be—for I had no boys or brothers. The women of the Confederacy had one want which overtopped all others. They could make coffee out of beans; pins they had from Columbus; straw hats they braided quite well with their own fair hands; snuff we could get better than you could in "the old concern." We had no hoop-skirts—skeletons, we used to call them. No ingenuity had made them. No bounties had forced them. The Bat, the Grayhound, the Deer, the Flora, the J. C. Cobb, the Varuna, and the Fore-and-Aft all took in cargoes of them for us in England. But the Bat, and the Deer, and the Flora were seized by the blockaders, the J. C. Cobb sunk at sea, the Fore-and-Aft and the Grayhound were set fire to by their own crews, and the Varuna was never heard of Then the State of Arkansas offered sixteen townships of swamp land to the first manufacturer who would exhibit five gross of a home-manufactured article. But none ever competed. The first attempts, indeed, were put an end to when Schofield crossed the Blue Lick and destroyed the dam on the Yellow branch. The consequence was that the people's crinoline collapsed faster than the Confederacy did, of which that brute of a Grierson said there was never anything of it but the outside.

Of course, then, I put in the bottom of my new large trunk in New York, not a "duplex elliptic," for none were then made, but a "Belmonte" of thirty springs, for my wife. I bought for her more-common wear a good "Belle-Fontaine." For Sarah and Susie each I got two "Dumb-belles." For Aunt Eunice and Aunt Clara, maiden sisters of my wife who lived with us after Winchester fell the fourth time, I got the "Scotch Harebell," two of each. For my own mother I got one "Belle of the Prairies" and one "Invisible Combination Gossamer." I did not forget good old Mamma Chloe and Mamma Jane. For them I got substantial cages, without names. With these tied in the shape of figure eights in the bottom of my trunk, as I said, I put in an assorted cargo of dry goods above, and, favored by a pass, and Maj. Mulford's courtesy on the flag-of-truce boat, I arrived safely at Richmond before the autumn closed.

I was received at home with rapture. But when, the next morning, I opened my stores, this became rapture doubly enraptured. Words cannot tell the silent delight with which old and young, black and white, surveyed those fairy-like structures, yet unbroken and unmended.

Perennial summer reigned that autumn day in that reunited family. It reigned the next day, and the next. It would have reigned till now if the Belmontes and the other things would last as long as the advertisements declare; and what is more the Confederacy would have reigned till now, President Davis and General Lee, but for that great misery, which all families understand, which culminated in our great misfortune.

I was up in the cedar closet one day looking for an old parade cap of mine, which, I thought, though it was my third best, might look better than my second best, which I had worn ever since my best was lost at Seven Pines. I say I was standing on the lower shelf of the cedar closet, when, as I stepped along in the darkness my right foot caught in a bit of wire, my left did not give way in time, and I fell, with a small wooden hat box in my hand, full on the floor. The corner of the hat box struck me just below the second frontal sinus, and I fainted away.

When I came to myself I was in the blue chamber; I had vinegar on a brown paper on my forehead; the room was dark, and I found mother sitting by me, glad enough indeed to hear my voice and to know that I knew her. It was some time before I fully understood what had happened. Then she brought me a cup of tea, and I, quite refreshed, said I must go to my office.

"Office, my child!" said she. "Your leg is broken above the ankle; you will not move these six weeks. Where do you suppose you are?"

Till then I had no notion that it was five minutes since I went into the closet. When she told me the time—5 in the afternoon—I groaned in the lowest depths. For in my breast pocket in that innocent coat, which I could now see lying on the window seat, were the duplicate dispatches to Mr. Mason, for which, late the night before, I had got the Secretary's signature. They were to go at 10 that morning to Wilmington, by the Navy Department's special messenger. I had taken them to insure care and certainty. I had worked on them till midnight, and they had not been signed till near 1 o'clock! Heavens and earth, and there it was 5 o'clock! The man must be half way to Wilmington by this time. I sent the doctor for Lefarge, my clerk. Lefarge did his prettiest in rushing to the telegraph. But no! A freshet on the Chowan river, or a raid by Foster, or something, or nothing, has smashed the telegraph wire for that night. And before that dispatch ever reached Wilmington the navy agent was in the offing in the Sea Maid.

"But perhaps the duplicate got through?" No, breathless reader, the duplicate did not get through. The duplicate was taken by Faucon in the Ino. I saw it last week in Dr. Lieber's hands in Washington. Well, all I know is that, if the duplicate had got through, the Confederate Government would have had in March a chance at 83,211 muskets, which, as it was, never left Belgium. So much for my treading into that blessed piece of wire on the shelf of the cedar closet, upstairs.

"What was the bit of wire?"

Well, it was not telegraph wire. If it had been, it would have broken when it was not wanted to. Don't you know what it was? Go up in your own cedar closets, and step about in the dark, and see what brings up about your ankles. Julia, poor child, cried her eyes out about it. When I got well enough to get up, and as soon as I could talk and plan with her, she brought down seven of these old things—Belmontes, simplex elliptics and horrors without a name—and she made a pile of them in the bedroom, and asked me, in the most penitent way, what she should do with them.

"You can't burn them," she said; "fire won't touch them. If you bury them in the garden they come up at the second raking. If you give them to the servants they say 'Thank-e, missus,' and throw them in the back passage. If you give them to the poor, they throw them into the street in front, and do not say 'Thank-e.' Sarah sent seventeen over to the sword factory, and the foreman swore at the boy and told him he would flog him within an inch of his life if he brought any more of his sauce there; and so—and so," sobbed the poor child, "I just rolled up these wretched things, and put them in the cedar closet, hoping, you know, that some day the Government would want something, and would advertise for them. You know what a good thing I made out of the bottle corks."

In fact, she had sold our bottle corks for $4,216 of the first issue. We afterward bought two umbrellas and a corkscrew with the money.

Well, I did not scold Julia. It was certainly no fault of hers that I was walking on the lower shelf of her cedar closet. I told her to make a parcel of the things, and the first time we went to ride I hove the whole shapeless heap into the river, without saying mass for them.

But let no man think, or no woman, that this was the end of the troubles. As I look back on that winter, and on the spring of 1865, it seems to me only the beginning. I got out on crutches at last; I had the office transferred to my house, so that Lefarge and Hepburn could work there at night and communicate with me when I could not go out; but mornings I hobbled up to the department, and sat with the chief, and took his orders. Ah me! shall I soon forget that damp winter morning, when we all had such hope at the office? One or two of the army fellows looked in at the window as they ran past, and we knew that they felt well; and, though I would not ask Old Wick—as we nicknamed the chief—what was in the wind, I knew the time had come, and that the lion meant to break the net this time. I made an excuse to go home earlier than usual; rode down to the house in the Major's ambulance, I remember, and hopped in to surprise Julia with the good news, only to find that the whole house was in quiet uproar, which shows that something bad has happened of a sudden.

"What is it, Chloe?" said I, as the old wench rushed by me with a bucket of water.

"Poor Mr. George, I 'fraid he's dead, sah."

And there he really was, dear, handsome, bright George Schaff—the delight of all the nicest girls of Richmond; he lay there on Aunt Eunice's bed on the ground floor, where they had brought him in. He was not dead, and he did not die. He is making cotton in Texas now. But he looked mighty near like it then. The deep cut in his head was the worst I ever had seen, and the blow confused everything. When McGregor got round he said it was not hopeless; but we were turned out of the room, and, with one thing and another, he got the boy out of the swoon, and it proved his head was not broken.

No, but poor George swears to this day it was better it had been, if it could only have been broken in the right way, and on the right field. For that evening we heard that everything had gone wrong in the surprise. There we had been waiting for one of those early fogs, and at last the fog had come. And Jubal Early had that morning pushed out every man he had that could stand, and they lay hid for three mortal hours, within I don't know how near the picket line at Fort Powhatan, only waiting for the shot which John Streight's party was to fire at Wilson's wharf, as soon as somebody on our left center advanced in force on the enemy's line above Turkey island, stretching across to Nansemond. I am not in the War Department, and I forget whether he was to advance en barbette or by echelon of infantry. But he was to advance somehow, and he knew how; and when he advanced, as you see, that other man lower down was to rush in, and as soon as Early heard him he was to surprise Powhatan, you see; and then, if you have understood me, Grant and Butler and the whole rig of them would have been cut off from their supplies, would have had to fight a battle for which they were not prepared, with their right made into a new left, and their old left unexpectedly advanced at an oblique angle from their center; and would not that have been the end of them?

Well, that never happened. And the reason it never happened was that poor George Schaff, with the last fatal order for this man, whose name I forgot (the same who was afterward killed the day before at High Bridge), undertook to save time by cutting across behind my house, from Franklin to Green streets. You know how much time he saved; they waited all day for that order. George told me afterward that the last thing he remembered was kissing his hand to Julia, who sat at her bedroom window. He said he thought she might be the last woman he ever saw this side of heaven. Just after that, it must have been, his horse—that white Messenger colt old Williams bred—went over like a log, and poor George was pitched fifteen feet headforemost against a stake there was in that lot. Julia saw the whole. She rushed out with all the women, and had just brought him in when I got home. And that was the reason that the great promised combination of December, 1864, never came off at all.

I walked out in the lot, after McGregor turned me out of the chamber, to see what they had done with the horse. There he lay, as dead as old Messenger himself. His neck was broken. And, do you think, I looked to see what had tripped him. I supposed it was one of the boys' bandy holes. It was no such thing. The poor wretch had tangled his hind legs in one of those infernal hoop-wires that Chloe had thrown out in the piece when I gave her new ones. Though I did not know it then, those fatal straps of ruby steel had broken the neck that day of Robert Lee's army.

That time I made a row about it. I felt too badly to go into a passion. But, before the women went to bed—they were all in the sitting-room together—I talked to them like a father. I did not swear. I had got over that for a while, in that six weeks on my back. But I did say the old wires were infernal things, and that the house and premises must be got rid of them. The aunts laughed—though I was so serious—and tipped a wink to the girls. The girls wanted to laugh, but were afraid to. And then it came out the aunts had sold their old hoops, tied as tight as they could tie them, in a great mass of rags. They had made a fortune by the sale—I am sorry to say it was in other rags, but the rags they got were new instead of old—it was a real Aladdin bargain. The rag-man had been in a hurry and not known what made the things so heavy. I frowned at the swindle, but they said all was fair with a peddler—and I own I was glad the things were well out of Richmond. But when I said I thought it was a mean trick, Lizzie and Sarah looked demure, and asked what I would have them do with the old things. Did I expect them to walk down to the bridge themselves with great parcels to throw into the river, as I had done by Julia's? Of course it ended, as such things always do, by my taking the work on my own shoulders. I told them to tie up all they had in as small a parcel as they could and bring them to me.

Accordingly, the next day I found a handsome brown-paper parcel—not so large, considering, and strangely square, considering—which the minxes had put together and laid on my office-table. They had a great frolic over it. They had not spared red tape nor red wax. Very official it looked, indeed, and on the left-hand corner, in Sarah's boldest and most contorted hand, was written "Secret service." We had a great laugh over their success. And, indeed, I should have taken it with me the next time I went down to Tredegar, but that I happened to dine one evening with young Norton, of our gallant little navy, and a very curious thing he told us.

We were talking about the disappointment of the combined land attack. I did not tell what upset poor Schaff's horse; indeed, I do not think those navy men knew the details of the disappointment. O'Brien had told me, in confidence, what I have written probably for the first time now. But we were speaking, in a general way, of the disappointment. Norton finished his cigar rather thoughtfully and then said:

"Well, fellows, it is not worth while to put it in the newspapers, but what do you suppose upset our grand naval attack the day the Yankee gunboats skittled down the river so handsomely?"

"Why," said Allen, who is Norton's best-beloved friend, "they say that you ran away from them as fast as they did from you."

"Do they?" said Norton, grimly. "If you say that I'll break your head for you. Seriously, men," continued he, "that was an extraordinary thing. You know I was on the ram. But why she stopped when she stopped I knew as little as this wineglass does; and Callender himself knew no more than I. We had not been hit. We were all right as a trivet for all we knew, when, skree! she began blowing off steam, and we stopped dead and began to drift down under those batteries. Callender had to telegraph to the little Mosquito, or whatever Walter called his boat, and the spunky little thing ran down and got us out of the scrape. Walter did right well; if he had had a monitor under him he could not have done better. Of course we all rushed to the engine-room. What in thunder were they at there? All they knew was that they could get no water into her boiler.

"Now, fellows, this is the end of the story. As soon as the boilers cooled off, they worked all night on those supply pumps. May I be hanged if they had not sucked in, somehow, a long string of yarn and cloth, and, if you will believe me, a wire of some woman's crinoline. And that French folly of a sham Empress cut short that day the victory of the Confederate navy, and old Davis himself can't tell when we shall have such a chance again."

A Remarkable Case of Skin Grafting.

Probably the most extensive case of skin grafting ever attempted has been going on with gratifying success during the past year in Danielsonville, Ct. The patient, Jesse Morgan, 11 years old, fell into a vat of caustic potash on the last day of the year 1878. Both legs were immersed nearly to the hips, and the skin was so completely destroyed that a new growth was impossible. After some months of hopeless and excruciating agony, the older physicians of the place giving up the case as hopeless, a young man, Dr. George J. Ross, undertook to save the boy's life by skin grafting. Over 2,000 grafts were used, the boy's mother, the family coachman and many neighbors and friends contributing thereto. The process was begun in April, 1879, and, though the work is not yet complete, the legs are nearly restored to their natural functions. The boy is stil weak, but can walk a short distance without a crutch. The grafts are said to grow fastest in the spring months.—Scientific American.

THE DEEPEST GORGE IN THE WORLD.

The Perilous Descent of a Party of Prospectors into Cataract Canon, Colorado.

[From the Arizona Miner.]

In March last a party of prospectors, thirteen in number, procured the necessary papers from Gen. Wilcox allowing them to visit the Indian village on Cataract creek, inhabited by the Ava Supais, a tribe of Indians numbering all told 200 souls. The party went from Williamson valley to the Bill Williams range and thence to Pine Spring. Here they found every indication of an old sea bed, the gravel and rocks being round and smooth, similar to those in the ocean bed. From Pine Spring the party directed their course for the Ava Supai village, which is reached by descending from the table-land down one of the roughest trails ever traveled by man, for a distance of fourteen miles, dropping 3,000 feet. At places along the trail we are told that it is not over twenty inches wide, and winds around the perpendicular walls of sandstone that loom above for hundreds of feet, while on the other side dark, deep canons exist, hundreds upon hundreds of feet deep, where, by one false step or move, man or beast would be sent to eternity. With great care and good luck ten of the party succeeded in reaching the village, three of their number returning rather than run the gantlet in passing down into this awful yet marvelous crevice in the earth.

The Ava Supais practice polygamy, each male having about three wives. They have 1,000 acres of farming land, which is described as being of a yellowish color and mostly composed of sand. However, it is said to produce good corn, pumpkins, melons and beans, with the aid of irrigating water, of which they have an abundance. They have a peach orchard of 250 trees, which were, on the 1st of April, loaded with small peaches about the size of acorns.

The party was well received by these red people, who stated that their greatest desire was to be left alone in the enjoyment of their land and other property. Their houses are built with poles, in a rude manner, and thatched over with bear grass and tule. The only stock they have are a few ponies.

Cataract creek heads in the Bill Williams and San Francisco mountains, the streams connecting some distance above the Indian village. This stream empties into the Big Colorado, fifteen miles below the Ava Supai town, and a short distance south of the junction of the Little and Big Colorado rivers.

The party attempted to explore Cataract creek to its confluence with the Colorado, but were unable to do so from the fact that they encountered precipice after precipice from 100 to 200 feet perpendicular, and it was in the foolhardy attempt of D. W. Mooney, of Williams valley, to descend one of these perpendicular precipices, 100 feet down, that he was dashed to a sudden and rocky tomb, where he now rests as he fell, his companions being unable to rescue the body. Mr. Mooney took a small rope, hardly half an inch in diameter, tied one end to a bank, suspended it over the brink; then, taking hold of the rope, was soon dangling between the bright heavens and the dark gorge below. Evidently cramp came in his arms, or his mind gave way, and he fell from almost the top to his rocky and lonely grave below. The party remained nearly two days, devising means and plans to rescue the corpse, but with failures, as no one cared to risk a descent upon the weak rope. The Indians informed the party that no one man had ever passed through the canon; that, in fact, a passage was only possible for the birds of air or the spirits of the dead.

The party retraced their steps and went around Cataract creek to the Grand canon of the Colorado. They took in this peculiar freak of nature, and describe the walls, which are about perpendicular, as being about two miles from the apex to the water. Where they beheld the Grand canon the water is described as being 100 yards across; still, from the elevated view of the explorers, the furious stream appeared to be a silver thread of only a few inches in width. A canon two miles deep is a grand wonder, which will, when the thirty-fifth parallel road is completed, draw thousands upon thousands of wonder-seekers annually.

Bismarck's Blood-Money.

Ten years having elapsed since peace was definitely concluded between France and Germany, the Imperial Chancery has submitted to the Federal Council of the German empire a final report upon the manner in which the French war indemnity has been disposed of. The total sum extracted from France by her conquerors as the price of peace amounted, as will be remembered, to considerably more than £200,000,000, every penny of which had been expended, distributed to the several German states or invested in newly-created imperial institutions by its official administrators, before the conclusion of the financial year 1877–8. It would appear from the report in question that nearly the whole of this vast treasure—above four-fold the national debt of Prussia—has been devoted to purposes directly or indirectly connected with the development of Germany's military defenses. The imperial share of the indemnity is set down at about £51,500,000, £600,000 of which, in coined gold, lie deposited in the Julius tower, at Spandau, and constitute a fund wherewith the preliminary expenses of Germany's next war may be paid in hard cash. Other £28,000,000 have been employed in founding the imperial military invalid fund, while the remaining £17,000,000-odd were spent in strengthening the defenses of Elsass-Lothringen and in remedying the damage done to property in those provinces during the war of 1870–71. The balance of the indemnity, between £160,000,000 and £170,000,000, was divided, in exact proportion to the respective numbers of their several populations, among the German states which had participated in the Franco-German struggle—namely, the former North German Confederation, Bavaria, Wurtemberg, Baden and Hesse. The portion allotted to the North German Confederation was dedicated by act of Parliament, July 8, 1873, to the liquidation of the war loans, the rearmament of the imperial forces and the augmentation of the latter's numerical strength and fighting capacity. Similar dispositions of their shares in the mighty spoil were made by the minor German states. Prussia spent her surplus in constructing strategical railroads and in fortifying her Eastern frontier. Thus the colossal sums wrung from France in the hour of defeat and humiliation may be said to have been entirely absorbed by warlike preparations, and to have increased, rather than diminished, the burden of military harness hitherto so manfully and patiently borne by the long-suffering German people.—London Telegraph.

What the Farmers Raise.

A writer in the International Review says that in fifteen years the production of wheat and barley in the United States has trebled; corn, cotton, and tobacco more than doubled; oats increased nearly 140,000,000 bushels; potatoes nearly doubled, and hay increased more than one-third. He gives the figures for the chief crops in 1865 and 1879, according to which the production of wheat has increased from 148,553,000 bushels in the former year to 448,757,000 in the latter; corn, from 704,427,000 to 1,544,899,000; oats, from 225,252,000 to 364,253,000; rye, from 19,544,000 to 22,646,000; barley, from 11,291,000 to 40,148,000; potatoes, from 104,632,000 to 181,369,000; hay, from 23,538,000 tons to 35,648,000; tobacco, from 184,317,000 pounds to 384,059,000, and cotton from 2,223,000 bales to 5,020,000. The remarkable increase in the production of cereals has been largely owing to the settlement and development of the Western and Northwestern States. Within the present generation the center of corn production has shifted from the South to the West, and of wheat production from the Middle States to the far West. In 1849, 50 per cent., and in 1859, 52 per cent. of the corn crop of the country was produced in the Southern States. In 1877, 850,000,000 bushels were grown in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, while the production of all the rest of the Union amounted to 494,558,000 bushels. The increase of the tobacco crop has been chiefly in the South, where the production increased 100,000,000 pounds from 1870 to 1878. During the same period the yield of cotton increased from 5,012,000 bales to 5,216,000. This increase was mainly in Arkansas and Texas, the crop of the former State swelling from 111,000,000 pounds in 1870 to 318,000,000 in 1878, and that of the latter State from 157,000,000 in 1870 to nearly 500,000,000 in 1878. According to the writer already cited, only about 9 per cent. of our entire grain crop is exported, including 24.76 per cent. of the wheat and 6.49 per cent. of the corn produced. The exports rapidly increased in the past few years, and are likely to increase in the future, especially if the cost of transportation shall be reduced. Thus, the total exports of all cereals increased from 39,000,000 bushels in 1868 to 189,000,000 in 1878. About 3 per cent. of the national product was exported in 1863, and nearly 11 per cent. in 1878. In addition to this, the exportation of live stock, into which corn enters more or less, has increased tenfold within the past two years.

How Typhoid is Carried.

Ten thousand persons annually die of typhoid fever in Great Britain. Two hundred thousand a year are attacked by the fever, and yet the disease may be prevented.

An article in the Nineteenth Century discusses the question of its propagation. We give some of the leading points.

The various infectious diseases have each their proper seat in the system. That of typhoid fever is in certain glands in the bowels. These are its nidus—the spot where alone the contagious germ can find lodgement.

If the germ enters the body through the lungs, and thus passes into the general circulation, the probability is that it will again pass out of the system without causing sickness. But it is quite likely to reach the glands where it will germinate, if it enters through the stomach with the water drank.

In this case the germ soon multiplies to millions of germs, as the yeast fungus multiplies in dough. Hence the excrements of the patient are filled with them, and, if these are thrown upon the ground or into open outhouses or cesspools, they generally find their way into wells—perhaps into a neighbor's, or possibly into a well which supplies many families—endangering the lives of the persons who drink the water.

To remove all danger, thoroughly disinfect the fecal discharges, and, if in the country, they should be taken at least 200 feet from any well. Under no circumstances should they be disposed of in an open out-house. In the city—in case the drainage is good—it is safe to use the sewer.

The author of the article maintains that, as the infectious germs are carried out in what passes from the patient, the sick-room is wholly safe to friends and attendants. This we do not fully accept. We believe that more or less of the germs enter the atmosphere of the room, and may be inhaled; still, that there is next to no danger if the room is kept properly ventilated.

As a general thing, one attack is proof against a second. The glands that constitute the seat of the disease are quite rudimentary in early childhood; increase in size and activity till puberty; are most fully developed from, say, 15 to 40, when they gradually diminish, losing their activity at 70. Hence the prevalence and violence of the typhoid fever in persons whose ages are between 15 and 45, and the general exemption of infants and the aged.—Youth's Companion.

Intermarriage Inducing Stammering.

The frequency of stammering in the South of France is found, on investigation, to equal twelve or thirteen cases in every 1,000 of the population, while in the eastern departments the proportion is only one to that number. It has been assumed that the defect was in many instances simulated to avoid military conscription, but, according to the Abbe Petitot, there are two districts in the Bouches du Rhone, where all the inhabitants—some 15,000—stammer. He ascribes this to be long-continued intermarriages among the communities, and to a consequent degeneracy of the race.

Large Schools.

The experience of a third of a century, says a foreign writer, has convinced many observant persons that the aggregation of children in huge schools is a mistake. There can, of course, be no cultivation of individual character in such schools. The children are dealt with in masses, and each child is only a unit in a crowd. They act together with the precision of machinery; but they are lost when called upon to act alone. There is, moreover, as all visitors to these large pauper schools have noticed, an unjoyous look in the children. They have old heads on young shoulders, in the sense, not of wisdom, but of hopelessness. They are dull, apathetic, helpless. They are like plants which are brought up without sunshine. They are, in fact, exotics, shut out from all contact with the cares that beset their class, ignorant of family life, fed with the regularity of well-kept animals, but without any practical knowledge of the conditions under which their after lives must be passed in the struggle with the world.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Seminal Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11th, 1879.—The remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for eight years past.

Chicago, Aug. 14, 1879.—I am thoroughly cured and feel tip top. The young man in the country is getting better.

Missouri, Sept. 13, 1879.—I received so much benefit from the use of your remedies that I want to try them in another case. Case of long standing, and will need something very strong.

Mich., Jan. 29, 1879.—I have used up your package of medicine; send me another as soon as possible. That package stopped all apparent trouble, but there is a weakness yet, and I wish you would prepare this lot for the cure of that.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, 1879.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes of a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 29, 1879.—I received your medicine, and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed please find $3, for which please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 26th, 1879.—Please forward immediately another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a remedy taken, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 3, 1879.—Last January we got from you a box of your remedy, for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way, and wish by return mail one No. 2 box.

FARM NOTES.

Ten cents per foot will purchase and pay for putting up the best quality of lightning rod. Any one paying more is robbing himself or his family.

To raise cows for the dairy they should not be allowed to become fat at any stage of growth, and should be brought to calf before two years of age. Every breeding develops large milking powers.

Experience of two seasons, one wet and the other dry, is that prairie sod, no matter how early turned, rots better, is more free from weeds and grass after a crop of flax, than uncropped sod broken in May or June.

Nothing mars the beauty of a farm more than to see it surrounded by a great big, overgrown hedge fence, shutting the farm out from view, and, on the other hand, nothing adds more to the appearance of a farm than to see it surrounded by a neatly-trimmed hedge of the proper height.

Wash for Mossy Trees.—"The following wash I have found efficacious: Heat one ounce of salsoda to redness in an iron pot, and dilute it in one gallon of water, and while warm apply to the trunk. After one application the moss and old bark will drop off and the tree be quite smooth."—P., Masonville, Iowa.

The old practice among farmers of annually scraping the trunks of apple trees and afterward applying a coat of whitewash is not so common nowadays as it used to be. Still the good results following the labor will well repay one. Underneath the dry and dead bark countless numbers of vermin make their home; when the bark is removed and whitewash applied the destruction of all vermin is certain.

A little effort is necessary to teach a calf to take its first grain dry, but it will soon learn it. Beginning with a small quantity and gradually increasing it after a week or two, or when the calf is four to six weeks old, give it all it will eat of these light foods, feeding it immediately after it has taken its milk. A good increase on one good calf well protected is better than half a one on two calves poorly cared for.

Have had sweet corn as a field crop since 1876, and am a planter of twelve to fifteen acres a year. I have also furnished seed to a large number of dairy farmers, and the acreage is now counted in this vicinity by hundreds, with an increase this year. The chemist makes the value of sweet corn as about nine to five for other sorts. We begin to feed on the stalks about July 20 to our milch cows and pigs, and before frost we cut up and cure for winter use. It makes the best of cow feed.—Asa C. Bowen, Sand Spring, Pa.

We have often read of thumb-pots for plants. An egg shell is a very inexpensive one, and answers its purpose well; break one end a little larger than you do the other, making simply a small hole; then fill with earth, and if you wish to put plants in them, set in a box the height of the shells, fill the spaces with earth; the plants start splendidly, and can be taken out and handled very easily. As the shell is much lighter than pots, they are more desirable for shipping; fill the space with moss or any light substance used for that purpose.

Most of the ferns found in our woods contain more or less starch, and when properly prepared are extremely palatable and nutritious. An attempt was recently made in France to popularise them as an article of food. The young shoots of the common brake fern when exposed above the soil to the air and sunlight become exceedingly fleshy, white and tender. A famous French painter is known to pride himself on his fern omelets, and the hill tribes of Japan live on fern all the year round. In spring they eat the tender leaflets, and later in the season they eat the starch extracted from the roots.

These suggestions as to managing young bulls are given by the Williamette Farmer: "To make a first-class animal he should run with the cow till he is 6 months old at least. If weaned earlier, feed on new milk just from the cow three times a day till he is 6 months old, then twice a day till 8 months, then once a day for a month or so longer. At an early day, say a month old, give him a little fine hay to pull at, and later let him have some oatmeal, a little oil-cake, vegetables, etc., increasing the rations gradually as he grows older. Weaning from milk should be gradual and in pasture time. Ring his nose at 8 months and handle him from that time on daily. After he is weaned, feed as you would other cattle to keep them in the best condition. Do not handle the ring after it is put in until the wound is entirely healed, and rub on his nose mutton-tallow twice a day.

Exiles in Siberia.

The popular idea of the fate of prisoners sentenced to hard labor in the mines of Siberia is a somewhat exaggerated one. It is generally believed that a man condemned to work in the Siberian mines is virtually condemned to death; that when he descends into his mine he says good-by to the light of heaven forever, being kept under ground until he dies; and that, living as he thus does, amid unhealthy fumes, death is not long in coming. The correspondent of the London Times, having heard these statements before he went to Siberia, appears to have taken some trouble to ascertain whether they are true or not, and, after many inquiries, "common fairness," he writes, "compels me to say that every one denied that there was any foundation for them. Even," he continues, "the few Poles who spoke to me so bitterly of the Government did not bring this to their charge, nor did I meet any of the convicts who said as much." On the contrary, the silver mines were, so far as he could learn, worked on the twelve, and sometimes even on the eight, hour system; while in the gold mines, which he himself visited, the men worked in summer from 6 in the morning till 7 at night, with intervals of rest for meals. In the coal mines, also, the men only work twelve hours a day, and an officer informed the writer that the amount of work allotted to each man per day ought to be got through by an energetic workman in about two hours. On the other hand it appears that flogging is not infrequently inflicted in a barbarous manner in Siberia. At three stations, but apparently at three stations only—at Kara, Nicolaievsk and Saghalien—an instrument called the "troichatka," or plait, is used. From twenty to fifty stripes are usually administered, though the number may be made 100; and the writer adds that "when the heavy numbers are inflicted, the punishment must be little short of an execution. Sometimes, in fact, the convicts do not recover from its effects."

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Sour apple sauce is generally improved by the addition of a table-spoonful of butter to a quart of sauce, and, moreover, there is much less sugar needed. A little lemon peel makes a fine flavor.

An excellent cement for uniting broken glass may be made by dissolving in a pipkin over the fire (taking especial care that it does not boil over) one ounce of isinglass in two wineglasses of spirits of wine. This will be transparent glue.

Strawberry Jam.—Same weights of strawberries and pounded white loaf sugar; mash up the berries well in preserving-pan first, and add sugar afterward; boil for twenty minutes, stirring well and skimming; always use patent glass jars.

It is said grease may be extracted from silk by the following process: Wet the part with eau-de-cologne and gently rub the silk upon itself between the hands. When dry, the grease will disappear. This will also remove recent paint, and the grease from a wax candle.

Lemon Preserve.—One pound of pounded loaf sugar, quarter pound of butter, six eggs and the whites of four well-beaten, the rind of two lemons grated and the juice of three. Mix together and let it simmer till of the consistency of honey. Be careful to stir all the time, or it will burn.

Beefsteak Pie.—Take cold roast beef, cut it into thin slices about an inch and a half long. Take raw potatoes, peel them, and cut them into thin slices. Have ready a deep dish, lay some of the potatoes at the bottom, and then a layer of beef, and so on till the dish is filled. Season as you would chicken pie, fill it with boiling water, cover it with a crust and bake it.

Rhubarb Jelly.—Take some rhubarb, wipe it with a clean wet cloth, peel it, and cut it into pieces an inch long. To each pound of rhubarb add three-fourths of a pound of white sugar. Put it to boil for about ten minutes, or until the juice is well drawn. Strain it into a preserving pan, let it boil quickly till it clings to the spoon, skim it and put it into jam pots or molds. The quickest way to know if it will set is to drop a little on a plate to cool.

To Cure Fits of Sneezing.

A correspondent of the British Medical Journal says: "During the recent rapid changes of temperature I caught a severe cold in my head, accompanied by a most incessant sneezing. My unfortunate nose gave me no rest. The slightest impact of cold air, or passing from the outside air into a warm room, equally brought on a fit of sneezing. In vain I snuffed camphor and pulsatilla; the light catarrh still triumphed over me. At length I resolved to see what the maintenance of a uniform temperature would do toward diminishing the irritability of my Schneiderian membrane, and accordingly I plugged my nostrils with cotton wool. The effect was instantaneous. I sneezed no more. Again and again I tested the efficacy of this simple remedy, always with the same result. However near I was to a sneeze, the introduction of the pledgets stopped it at once. Nor was there any inconvenience from their presence, making them sufficiently firm not to tickle, and yet leaving them sufficiently loose to easily breathe through." This is really worth knowing, for incessant sneezing is among the greatest of smaller ills, and it seems only a rational conclusion to hope that this simple plan may furnish the most efficient remedy against one of the most distressing symptoms of hay fever.

Destructive Influences.

Doubtless countless myriads of living creatures come into existence, of which by far the greater part must be destroyed. One aphis may be the parent of 5,904,900,000 individuals in five generations, and when these are swallowed up by lady-birds and other enemies in mass, it is no minute individual variation that can avert their fate. The unchecked produce of one pair of herrings would stock the Atlantic in a few years, until there was no room to move; and when these are ingulfed by shoals, as a mouthful for the Balænoptera, they can make as little struggle for their existence as the grass can make that the ox licks up, or the vegetation of a district that is devastated by locusts. It is the unwritten law of nature that one race must die that another may live; this other, in its turn, subserving the same end, and so, constantly, until the cycle be complete. Without this law, against which there is no appeal, nature would be a chaotic impossibility. The destructive influences are so predominant that the carnage is indiscriminate and without struggle.—Contemporary Review.

An Object of Pity.

Hans Growyost, a worthy German farmer, who has been a life-long resident of Berks county, has a shrewish wife, who has long rendered his domestic life anything but a couch of roses. One day not long ago she, in a fit of pique, packed up her duds and left him, vowing never to come back. The news went around among the neighbors—you know how intelligence of all kinds does travel in the country—and at night several of them, of whom I was one, went to condole with Hans. He sat on his front stoop, puffing away at his pipe. "Hans," I remarked, "I pity you." "My boy," replied the honest Dutchman, as he disturbedly knocked out the ashes of his pipe, "you vas right. She has shust come back!"—Chester (Pa.) Democrat.

Ex-Gov. Brown, the new Senator from Georgia, is not as fine a looking man as his predecessor, having a clerical appearance, with long white whiskers, tapering to a point, and being slightly bald.

NERVOUS DEPRESSION.

Valuable Hints for a Large Class of Patients.

The chief part of the cure lies with the patient. Change, exercise, fresh air, diet, tonic—all these together will not cure any one who gives up and gives way. The aim of the patient must be to disregard and even defy his sensations, impressions, languor or whatever form his sufferings may take, and just go on as usual, doing all he can to forget self. Nervous people often rally wonderfully under pleasant excitement, sometimes even under sudden trial. They surprise their friends by their activity and endurance, and accomplish the otherwise impossible. Let us illustrate our meaning in one or two particulars. Suppose a patient so severely depressed that he can hardly be persuaded to move; he must begin—he must try. No brooding over troubles and watching for symptoms. Giving up is fatal; resolution and hope gain the victory, with the help of Providence. And even as to fears, forebodings, and so forth, the same direction, in substance, will apply. A lady told the writer that, after a period of acute suffering from various apprehensions, she one day said to herself: "Now I have long been fearing all sorts of things, and they do not come; I have had all manner of distress, and dreaded what has never yet happened. Nothing that I have been so alarmed about has really occurred. I will allow these tormenting fears no longer." And she resolutely dismissed her apprehensions. She strove against, and in time overcame, her gloomy and groundless forebodings, and now lives to encourage others, to preach hope and cheerfulness and trust.

Not a few of the habits of modern life strain the nervous system considerably; hurry and excitement are far too prevalent. "Taking things coolly" should be at least endeavored by those who may have much in their work calculated to stimulate the mind or the feelings. Excess of any kind is constantly the parent of nervous depression. So, too, are exciting amusements, such as gambling. Too much novel-reading is an unsuspected, but often very powerful, contributing cause. Overwork, alas! is one which it is not so easy to remedy as to denounce.

Little to earn, and many to keep,

Often strains the nerves and brain too heavily. A good hobby is often a wonderful relief to the overtaxed mind. Too little exercise and too much tea ruin the nerves of many a woman. Men often try theirs by indulging too freely in the use of tobacco. Young men, and above all growing lads, are very unwise if they employ tobacco at all. Their elders have more excuse; but the vigor of youth cannot require it, and certainly will not profit by it. The diabolical cruelty of frightening young children is almost certain to sow the seeds of nervous weakness; so does harsh treatment in later childhood. And over-driving and harrassing young lads and girls, whether at books or work, all tend in the same direction. Competitive examinations have to answer for some cases of enfeebled nerves.

Simple habits, moderation in all things, cheerful amusements or pastimes, and reasonable care, will go far to prevent nervousness. But when, through ignorance, indiscretion, hereditary tendency, or affliction, it has been developed, the sufferer will do well to give all heed to the foregoing hints, and take for his motto, "Hope on, hope ever."

The Richest Women in America.

The richest woman in America, and, indeed, excepting royalty and Baroness Burdett-Coutts, the richest in the world, is Mrs. E. H. Green, the wife of the Vice President of the Louisville and Nashville road. She was a Miss Robinson, and her father was a whaling master at New Bedford. He owned a fleet of ships known as the blue line of whalers, and from this profession was known as "Blubber Robinson." He died when his daughter was a mere girl, and left her a fortune of about $8,000,000. She lived slenderly and prudently, and gave the management of her affairs to Mr. John J. Cisco. As her tastes were simple and her wants few, she was able to transfer her enormous income almost every year to the body of the fortune itself, and it has now accumulated to more than $27,000,000. Her husband, Mr. Green, was a very rich man when she married him, and has been successful since. It is said by one who should know that the income of this couple is $2,500,000 a year. Mr. Green is rather large in stature, quiet, reserved, sagacious and of modest habits. He is about 47 years of age, and she is about 43.

The richest young ladies in New York are the Misses Garner, the daughters of Commodore Garner, who was drowned under a yacht that overturned a few years ago. He made his fortune in Wall street, and, upon his death, was able to leave his daughters $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 each. Added to this, they are charming and beautiful young ladies.

Man's Age.

Few men die of age. Almost all die of disappointment, passion, mental or bodily toil, or accidents. The passions kill men sometimes, even suddenly. The common expression, choked with passion, has little exaggeration in it; for, even though not suddenly fatal, strong passions shorten life. Strong-bodied men often die young; weak men live longer than the strong; for the strong use their strength and the weak have none to use. The latter take care of themselves, the former do not. As it is with the body, so it is with the mind and temper. The strong are apt to break, or, like the candle, to run; the weak to burn out. The inferior animals which live temperate lives have generally their prescribed number of years. The horse lives twenty-five, the ox fifteen or twenty, the lion about twenty, the dog ten or twelve, the rabbit eight, the guinea pig six or seven years. These numbers all bear a similar proportion to the time the animal takes to grow to its full size. But man, of the animals, is one that seldom lives this average. He ought to live a hundred years, according to physical law, for five times twenty are one hundred; but, instead of that, he scarcely reaches on an average four times his growing period; the cat six times; the rabbit even eight times the standard of measurement. The reason is obvious—man is not only the most irregular and the most intemperate, but the most laborious and hard worked of all the animals. He is also the most irritable of all animals; and there is reason to believe, though we can not tell what an animal secretly feels, that, more than any other animal, man cherishes wrath to keep it warm and consumes himself with the fire of his own secret reflections.—Albany Journal.

The collected reports concerning the wheat crop in Southern Indiana agree that the prospect is that the crop of 1880 will be the heaviest, by 20 per cent., ever grown in the counties named.

Mrs. Polly Bowman, an old pioneer of Harrison county, died at the residence of her grandson, Jacob Bruce, four miles east of Corydon. She was in the 105th year of her age, and was the oldest inhabitant of the county, and probably of Southern Indiana. The deceased was a highly-respected old lady.

Jeremiah Wampler, one of the highly esteemed citizens of Bainbridge, is probably the oldest man in Putnam county. He is 100 years old, having been born May 29, 1780. He is quite a hale old gentleman, and can read without spectacles.

Jacob Kintner, aged 78 years, the oldest resident of Corydon, Harrison county, and proprietor of Kintner's Hotel in that town, died recently of erysipelas, which supervened a fall he received eight or ten days ago. No man in Southern Indiana was more widely or favorably known.

Mrs. Fannie Monroe, aged 88 years widow of the late Col. Henry Monroe, died at New Albany the other day, of measles. She was one of the pioneer women of Southern Indiana. She helped, in her girlhood days, to make clothing for the soldiers who fought with Gen. Harrison at Tippecanoe. Her husband was a soldier in the war of 1812.

The graves in the cemetery at Salem have of late been almost daily visited by vandals, who despoil them of the flowers and shrubbery that ornament them. Recently a man with his second wife dug up all the flowers and shrubbery over his first wife's grave, and transferred them to his door-yard for the delight of the second partner of his bosom.

In digging among the ruins of his house in Richmond, which was destroyed by fire a few days ago, Bennett Baumer discovered an earthen jar over the mouth of which was drawn a piece of parchment, and on removing this he found a roll of bank bills amounting to $150. The jar had evidently been hid in the cellar where the fire could not get at it, but how it came there or who it belonged to he has no idea.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

Ages of Animals.—A bear rarely exceeds twenty years; a dog lives twenty years; a fox fourteen or sixteen; lions are long-lived—Pompey's lived to the age of seventy. The average age of cats is fifteen years; a squirrel and hare seven or eight years; rabbits seven. Elephants have been known to live to the great age of 700 years. Pigs live to the age of thirty years; the rhinoceros to twenty. A horse has been known to live to the age of sixty-two, but averages twenty-five to thirty. Camels sometimes live to the age of 100. Stags are long-lived. Sheep seldom exceed the age of ten. Cows live about fifteen years. Cuvier considers it probable that whales sometimes live 1,000 years. The dolphin and porpoise attain the age of thirty. An eagle died at Vienna at the age of 104 years. Ravens frequently reach the age of 100. Swans have been known to live 300 years. A tortoise has been known to live 107.

The Change in the Frog.—Nowhere in the animal kingdom is there so favorable an opportunity for peeping into nature's workshop as in the metamorphoses of the frog. This animal is a worm when it comes from the egg, and remains such the first four days of its life, having neither eyes nor ears, nostrils, nor respiratory organs. It crawls. It breathes through its skin. After a while a neck is grooved into the flesh. Its soft lips are hardened into a horny beak. The different organs, one after another, bud out; then a pair of branching gills, and last, a long and limber tail. The worm has become a fish. Three or four days more elapse, and the gills sink back into the body, while in their place others come, much more complex, arranged in vascular tufts, 112 in each. But they, too, have their day, and are absorbed, together with their framework of bone and cartilage, to be succeeded by an entirely different breathing apparatus, the initial of a second correlated group of radical change. Lungs are developed, the mouth widened, the horny beak converted into rows of teeth, the stomach, the abdomen, the intestines, prepared for the reception of animal food in place of vegetable; four limbs, fully equipped with hip and shoulder bones, with nerves and blood vessels, push out through the skin, while the tail, being now supplanted by them as a means of locomotion, is carried away piecemeal by the absorbents, and the animal passes the balance of its days as an air-breathing and flesh-feeding batrachian.

Peculiarities of Deep-Sea Animals.—Deep-sea animals, as a rule, have either no eyes at all or have very large eyes. As an example may be cited the crustacean, astacus zalencus, most closely allied to the common cray-fish which Prof. Huxley has lately made illustrious. It is from 450 fathoms. It has no eyes at all, but one of its nippers is extraordinarily long and delicate, and possibly the animal uses it to feel its way with, as a blind man uses his stick. There are also abundant hairs on the animal's surface, which are probably organs of touch. Many deep-sea crustaces, however, have very large eyes, indeed, evidently for the purpose of making use of some small quantity of light which must exist in all depths. In the absence of sunlight the only other source of light must be phosphorescence of certain of the deep-sea animals themselves. No doubt many animals, as in shallow water, emit light in the deep sea; and the deep-sea animals with eyes probably congregate round them or grope their way in the gloom from one bunch to another as they lie scattered over the bottom, just as we half-feel, half-see our way from lamp-post to lamp-post in a night fog. Some lose their way, as we do sometimes, and get into shallow water, and a good many deep-sea animals have been from time to time picked up near the shores at Madeira and elsewhere, and have found their way into museums as great rarities. No doubt the sense of touch is the one mainly relied on by most deep-sea animals. Very many are provided with special organs of touch, such as long hairs, or, in the case of fish, enormously long fin-rays.

Longfellow at Home.

He dresses in a suit of black broadcloth, and is very much of a democrat. A charming conversationalist, he has drawn many dear friends to him. He has a marvelous faculty of putting one quite at his ease. Rising early, he takes a comparatively light breakfast, and, if the day is bright, indulges in a walk for several hours, varying his route daily. His rambles sometimes lead him to that great city of the dead, Mount Auburn; occasionally he visits Cambridgeport, and once in a while he walks to Boston to see his friends or his publishers.

He calls on his printer every day or two when he has anything to put in type, and receives or returns proofs of his works. The winter he spends in Cambridge, and the summer in his cottage at Nahant. His carriage is erect, and there is little in his manner to suggest his poem "Morituri Salutamus." The warmth of his love is lavished upon his children, who [illegible] all to him. THE EAST.

Houdlette & Ellis, a Boston iron manufacturing firm, has suspended. The liabilities are placed at $1,000,000. Lightning struck a 20,000-gallon tank of oil near Titusville, setting fire to the liquid, which poured out in all directions. The fire communicated with other oil-tanks, and the burning fluid spread the flames in all directions, destroying the Acme Oil Works, one of the largest oil refineries in the world, and several smaller establishments, the houses in the neighborhood, the railroad bridge, and other property. The total loss is placed at $200,000....A disconsolate colored man put his head under a heavily-loaded truck in Broadway, New York, and, before the driver could stop the horses, one of the wheels had passed over it, crushing it to a pulp.

Ex-Senator James A. Bayard, of Delaware, father of the present Senator Bayard, has just died at his home in Wilmington, after a long illness....The oil fire at Titusville, Pa., was not gotten under control until $1,500,000 worth of property had been destroyed.

A tornado near Pittsfield, N. H., swept away everything in its path and damaged property to the amount of $100,000.... Ex-Mayor George Opdyke, of New York, is dead....A steam pipe exploded in Music Hall, Cincinnati, fatally injuring two visitors to the Millers' International Exhibition.

The First National Bank, of Brattleboro, Vt., has been ruined by the forgeries and thefts of Silas M. Waite, its President. It is estimated that his stealings amount in the aggregate to $250,000, and that they have been in uninterrupted progress for more than ten years. ....A disease resembling dysentery has made its appearance at North Adams, Mass., which has, so far, baffled the skill of the physicians. One thousand persons have been stricken down already, and it is feared that many cases will prove fatal. PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Vetoing the Deputy Marshals' Bill.

To the Senate of the United States:

After mature consideration of the bill entitled "An act regulating the pay and appointment of Deputy Marshals," I am constrained to withhold from it my approval, and return it to the Senate, in which it originated, with my objections to its passage. The laws now in force on the subject of the bill before me are contained in the following sections of the Revised Statutes:

Section 2,021. Whenever an election at which Representatives or Delegates in Congress are to be chosen is held in any city or town of 20,000 inhabitants or upward, the Marshal for the district in which such city or town is situated shall, on application in writing of at least two citizens residing in such city or town, appoint special Deputy Marshals, whose duty it shall be, when required thereto, to aid and assist the Supervisors of Election in the verification of any list of persons who may have registered or voted; to attend in each election district or voting precinct at the times and places when and where registration may by law be scrutinized and the names of registered voters be marked for challenge; and also attend at all times for holding elections at the polls in such district or precinct.

Sec. 2,022. The Marshal and his general deputies shall keep the peace and support and protect Supervisors of Election in the discharge of their duties, preserve order at such places of registration and at such polls; prevent fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting thereat, or fraudulent conduct on the part of any officer of election, and immediately at the place of registration or polling-place or elsewhere, and either before or after registering or voting, to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person who commits, or attempts or offers to commit, any of the acts or offenses prohibited herein, or who commits any offense against the laws of the United States; but no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the Marshal or his general or special deputies or either of them, or of Supervisors of Elections or either of them, and for the purposes of arrest or preservation of the peace the Supervisors of Election shall, in the absence of the Marshal's deputies, or if required to assist such deputies, have the same duties and powers as Deputy Marshals; nor shall any person on the day of such election be arrested without process for any offense committed on the day of registration.

Sec. 2,023. Whenever any arrest is made, under the provision of this title, the person so arrested shall forthwith be brought before a Commissioner, Judge or court of the United States, for examination of the offenses alleged, and such Commissioner, Judge or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in case of crime against the United States.

Sec. 2,024. The Marshal or his general deputies, or such special deputies as are thereto specially empowered by him in writing and under his hand and seal, whenever he or either or any of them is forcibly resisted in executing their duties under this title, or shall by violence, threats, or menaces be prevented from executing such duties, or from arresting any person who has committed any offense for which the Marshal or his general or special deputies are authorized to make such arrest, are, and each of them, empowered to summon and call to his aid bystanders or a posse comitatus of his district.

Sec. 2,028. No person shall be appointed a Supervisor of Election or Deputy Marshal under the preceding provisions who is not at the time of his appointment a qualified voter of the city, town, county, parish, election district, or voting precinct in which his duties are to be performed.

Sec. 5,521. If any person be appointed Supervisor of Election or special Deputy Marshal under the provisions of the title, "The Elective Franchise," and has taken the oath of office as such Supervisor of Election or such Special Deputy Marshal, and thereafter neglects or refuses, without good and lawful excuse, to perform and discharge fully the duties, obligations and requirements of such office until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, he shall not only be subject to removal from office with loss of all pay or emoluments, but shall be punished by imprisonment with not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than $500, or by both fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of prosecution.

Sec. 5,522. Every person, whether with or without any authority, power, or process, or pretended authority, power, or process of any State, Territory, or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults, or by bribes, solicitation, or otherwise interferes with or prevents Supervisors of Elections, or either of them, or the Marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of any duty required of them, or which he or they or either of them may be authorized to perform by any law of the United States in execution of process or otherwise, or who, by any of the means before mentioned hinders or prevents free attendance or presence at such places of registration or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or in going to and from any such place of registration or poll of election, or to and from any room where any such registration, or election, or canvass of votes, or of making any returns or certificates thereof may be had, or who molests, interferes with, removes or ejects from any such place of registration or poll of election, or of canvassing votes cast thereat, or of making returns or certificates thereof, any Supervisor of Election, the Marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, or who threatens or attempts or offers so to do, or refuses or neglects to aid and assist any Supervisor of Election or Marshal or his general or special deputies, or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties when required by him or them or either of them to give such aid and assistance shall be liable to instant arrest without process, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than two years or by fine not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of prosecution.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the recent case of ex parte Siebold and others, decided at the October term, 1879, on a question raised in the case as to the constitutionality of the sections of Revised Statutes above quoted, uses the following language:

"These portions of Revised Statutes are taken from an act commonly known as the Enforcement act, approved May 31, 1870, and entitled 'An act to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of this Union and for other purposes,' and from a supplement to that act, approved Feb. 28, 1871. They relate to elections of members of the House of Representatives, and were an assertion on the part of Congress of the power to pass laws for regulating and superintending said elections and for securing the purity thereof and the right of citizens to vote thereat peaceably and without molestation. It must be conceded to be a most important power and of a fundamental character. In the light of recent history and of the violence, fraud, corruption and irregularity which have frequently prevailed at such elections, it may easily be conceived that the exertion of power, if it exists, may be necessary to the stability of our form of government.

"The greatest difficulty in coming to a just conclusion arises from mistaken notions with regard to the relations which subsist between State and National Governments. It seems to be often overlooked that the national constitution has been adopted in this country, establishing real government therein, and which, moreover, is or should be, as dear to every American citizen as his State Government is. Whenever the true conception of the nature of this Government is once conceded, no real difficulty will arise in the just interpretation of its powers. But, if we allow ourselves to regard it as a hostile organization, opposed to the proper sovereignty and dignity of State Governments, we shall continue to be vexed with difficulties as to jurisdiction and authority. No greater jealousy is required to be exercised toward this Government in reference to the preservation of our liberties than is proper to be exercised toward State Governments. Its powers are limited in number and clearly defined, and its action within the scope of those powers is restrained by a sufficiently rigid bill of rights for the protection of its citizens from oppression. The true interests of the people of this country require that both the national and State Governments should be allowed without jealous interference on either side to exercise all powers which respectively belong to them according to the fair and practical construction of the constitution. State rights and the rights of the United States should be equally respected. Both are essential to the preservation of our liberties and the perpetuity of our institutions. But in endeavoring to vindicate one we should not allow our zeal to nullify or impair the other.

"The true doctrine, as we conceive, is this: That, while States are really sovereign as to all matters which have not been granted to the jurisdiction and control of the United States, the constitution and constitutional laws of the latter are, as we have already said, the supreme law of the land, and when they conflict with laws of States they are of paramount authority and obligation. This is the fundamental principle on which the authority of the constitution is based, and, unless it be conceded in practice as well as theory, the fabric of our institutions as it was contemplated by its founders cannot stand. The questions involved have respect not more to the autonomy and existence of states than to the continued existence of the United States as the Government to which every American citizen may look for security and protection in every part of the land.

"Why do we have Marshals at all if they cannot physically lay hands on persons and things in the performance of their proper duties? What functions can they perform if they cannot use force? In executing the process of the courts, must they call on the nearest constable for protection? Must they rely on him to use the requisite compulsion and to keep the peace while they are soliciting and entreating the parties and bystanders to allow the law to take its course? This is a necessary consequence of the positions assumed. If we indulge in such impracticable views as these, and keep on refining and refining, we shall drive the National Government out of the United States, and relegate it to the District of Columbia, or perhaps to some foreign soil. We shall bring it back to a condition of greater helplessness than that of the old confederation. The argument is based on a strained and impracticable view of the nature and powers of the National Government. It must execute its powers or it is no Government. It must execute on the land as well as on the sea, on things as well as on persons, and to do this it must necessarily have power to command obedience, preserve order and keep peace, and no person or power in this land has the right to resist or question its authority so long as it keeps within the bounds of its jurisdiction."

I have deemed it fitting and proper to quote thus largely from an important and elaborate opinion of the Supreme Court, because the bill before me proceeds upon the construction of the constitution as to the power of the National Government, which is in direct conflict with the judgment of the highest judicial tribunal of our country.

Under the sections of the present law above quoted, the officers of the United States are authorized, and it is their duty, in case of Congressional elections, to keep peace at the polls and places of registration; to arrest immediately any person who is guilty of crime against the United States election laws and to protect all officers of election in the performance of their duties, and, whenever an arrest is made, to bring the person so arrested before a Commissioner, Judge, or court of the United States for examination of offenses alleged against him. Such Special Deputy marshals are specially empowered thereto by Marshals in writing. "If forcibly resisted they may call to their aid the bystanders or posse comitatus." It is made a crime punishable with fine or imprisonment to hinder, assault, or otherwise interfere with a Marshal or his special deputies, or to threaten or to attempt to do so. If any person appointed such special Deputy Marshal has taken the oath of office and thereafter neglects or refuses to fully discharge the duties of such office, he is punishable not only by removal from office, but by fine and imprisonment. The functions of special Deputy Marshals non-provided for by law, being executive, they are placed under the authority of a well-known chief executive officer of the courts of the United States. They are, in fact, not merely in name, the deputies of Marshal, and he and his bondsmen are responsible for them. A civil force for the execution of the law is thus instituted in accordance with long-established and familiar usage which is simple, effective, and under a responsible head. The necessity for the possession of these powers by appropriate officers will not be called in question by intelligent citizens who appreciate the importance of peaceable, orderly and lawful elections.

Similar powers are conferred and exercised under State laws with respect to State elections. The executive officers of the United States, under existing laws, have no other or greater power to supervise and control the conduct of Congressional elections than State executive officers exercise in regard to State elections.

The bill before me changes completely the present law by substituting for the special Deputy Marshals of the existing statutes new officers hitherto unknown to law, and who lack the power, responsibility, and protection which are essential to enable them to act efficiently as executive officers.

The bill under consideration is as follows:

"Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act, the pay of all Deputy Marshals for services in reference to any election shall be $5 for each day of actual service, and no more.

"Sec. 2. That all Deputy Marshals to serve in reference to any election shall be appointed by the Circuit Court of the United States for the district in which said Marshals are to perform their duty in each year, and the Judges of the several Circuit Courts of the United States are hereby authorized to open their respective courts at any time for that purpose; and, in case the Circuit Courts shall not be open for that purpose at least ten days prior to registration, if there be one, or, if no registration be required, then, at least ten days before the election, the Judges of the District Courts of the United States are hereby respectively authorized to cause their courts to be opened for the purpose of appointing such Deputy Marshals, who shall be appointed by said District Courts, and the officers so appointed shall be in equal numbers from the different political parties, and shall be well-known citizens of good moral character and actual residents of the voting precincts in which their duties are to be performed, and shall not be candidates for any office at such election; and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"Provided, That Marshals of the United States for whom deputies shall be appointed by the court under this act shall not be liable for any of the acts of said deputies."

It will be observed that the Deputy Marshals proposed by the bill before me are distinctly different officers from the special deputies of Marshals, as such officers are now provided for in the statutes. This bill does not connect the new officers with the existing laws relating to special Deputy Marshals, so as to invest the proposed Deputy Marshals with the same powers, to impose upon them the same duties, and to give them the same protection by means of the criminal laws.

When new officers are created, distinct in character, and appointed by different authority, although similar in name to the officers already provided for, such new officers are not held to similar responsibilities to the criminal law; do not possess the same powers and are not similarly protected unless it is expressly so provided by legislation. The so-called Deputy Marshals provided for in this bill will have no executive head. The Marshal can neither appoint or remove them. He cannot control them, and he is not responsible for them. They will have no authority to call to aid, if resisted, the posse comitatus. They are protected by no criminal statutes in the performance of their duties. An assault upon one of these Deputies, with intent to prevent a lawful election, will be no more than an ordinary assault upon any other citizen. They can not keep the peace. They can not make arrests when crimes are committed in their presence. What powers they have are confined to the precincts in which they reside. Outside of the precincts for which they are appointed, the Deputy Marshals of this bill cannot keep the peace, make arrests, hold prisoners, take prisoners before a proper tribunal for hearing, nor perform any other duty. No oaths of office are required of them, and they give no bond; they have no superior who is responsible for them, and they are not punishable for neglect of duty or misconduct in office.

In all these respects this bill makes a radical change between the powers of the United States officers at national elections and the powers uniformly possessed and exercised by State officers at State elections. This discrimination against the authority of the United States is a departure from usage of the Government established by precedents beginning with the earliest statutes on the subject, and violates the true principles of the constitution.

The Supreme Court, in decision already referred to, says: "It is argued that the preservation of peace and good order in society is not within the powers confided to the Government of the United States, but belongs exclusively to States. Here again we are met with the theory that the Government of the United States does not rest upon the soil and territory of country. We think that this theory is founded on an entire misconception of the nature and powers of that Government. We hold it to be an incontrovertible principle that the Government of the United States may, by means of physical force, exercised through its official agents, execute on every foot of American soil the powers and functions that belong to it. This necessarily involves the power to command obedience to the laws, and hence the power to keep the peace to that extent. This power to enforce its laws and execute its functions in all places does not derogate from the power of a State to execute its laws at the same time and in the same place. The one does not exclude the other, except where both cannot be executed at the same time. In that case the words of the constitution itself show which is to yield: 'This constitution, and all laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme laws of the land.'"

In conclusion, it is proper to say that no objection would be made to the appointment of officers to act with reference to elections by the courts of the United States, and that I am in favor of appointing officers to supervise and protect elections without regard to party. But the bill before me, while it recognizes the power and duty of the United States to provide officers to guard and scrutinize Congressional elections, fails to adapt its provisions to the existing laws so as to secure efficient supervision and protection. It is, therefore, returned to the Senate, in which it originated, for that further consideration which is contemplated by the constitution. Rutherford B. Hayes.

A Paragraph of the Future.

Time, A. D., 1900. The necessity for church-going and edifices is almost dis-dispensed with. The Rev. Dr. Turgid, from the central edifice of the Sacred Telephone, preaches every Sunday to five thousand families of his persuasion in the privacy of their homes. The musical adjuncts to the service, vocal and instrumental, are also dispensed by telephones, and as wafted to the five thousand homes by electricity each family joins in the hymn. The average attention to service is much greater now than a quarter of a century since, as the ladies have not each other's dresses and bonnets to look at.

The new Minister to Belgium, James I. Putnam, of Buffalo, is a graduate of Yale, '39, and served as New York State Senator from 1854 to 1855, and has the reputation of being a writer and speaker of great eloquence and force.

One of the inexplicable phenomena of nature is the effect the emptying of a pan of ashes has in suddenly reversing the direction of the wind.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

American journalism is rich in names. For instance, there is the Fairplay (Col.) Flume, the Dakota Blizzard, the Solid Muldoon, of Ouray, Col., the Tombstone Epitaph, of Nevada, the Simplecute, of Texas, and the Bazoo, of Missouri.

A meeting of prominent citizens of Camden, S. C., was held recently to organize an anti-dueling association. After several speeches had been made officers were elected, and resolutions denouncing the barbarous code, and agreeing to prosecute all persons who send, carry or accept challenges, were adopted. The movement thus inaugurated gives evidence of a change in public sentiment in that section which is to be commended.

A tramp bill passed by the New York Legislature provides that every tramp upon conviction as such shall be punished by imprisonment, at hard labor in the nearest penitentiary, for not more than one year, and that all persons who rove about from place to place begging, and all vagrants living without labor or visible means of support, who stroll over the country without lawful occupation, shall be held to be tramps within the meaning of this act.

The Russian army comprises 908 Generals, 31,414 officers, and 886,425 men. The reserves number 742,144 men, and the Cossack troops 1,972 officers and 21,359 men, with 105,946 men on furlough. It is shown by a German military writer that the revenue annually devoted to military purposes in Russia would not, even if the army was administered in the most economical manner, suffice to maintain such large forces.

During the years of 1879 and 1880, up to Feb. 10, over 9,000,000 acres of land have been sold under the homestead laws. Kansas leads off with 2,677,623 acres sold; Dakota, 1,699,000 acres; Nebraska, 1,368,455 acres; Minnesota, 1,028,808 acres. All the Territories except Arizona and Utah show large gains. The coming year will, doubtless, show the largest growth in the fertile regions of the great Northwest ever yet seen.

A strange story of second sight is told at Salvisa, Ky. The Rev. Mr. Vaughn, Judge Durham, and several respectable Colonels vouch for its truth. It is to the effect that Mrs. Foster was ill and part of the time delirious. When out of her head, one night, she said two negroes were setting fire to a certain building; that she plainly saw them pouring coal oil on some buildings, and preparing to light it. No heed was paid to her ravings. A few minutes afterward the watchers in the room heard an alarm of fire. The flames had been discovered at the very time and place of which Mrs. Foster had spoken.

A writer in Chambers' Journal says: "The bread par excellence, according to the majority of medical men, is aerated bread." A patent for the making of this was taken out about fifteen years ago, but since then it has not enjoyed, says the writer, nearly the popularity and consumption that it really deserves. It has many decided advantages, a great one being that the dough demands no handling from perspiring and, too often, unclean bakers. Dr. Corfe, of the Middlesex Hospital, insists strongly on its value "in those cases of dyspepsia which so often affect the brain-workers of the great metropolis." It keeps better, too, than other bread."

A farmer in Preston, Ct., who was troubled with rats, purchased a cat with a reputation as a mouser, and rats were soon among the things that were. But on going into the cellar, one day, he saw rats sharing the noonday meal of the cat. The cat appeared to be charmed by them. The farmer allowed the strange friendship to exist for several days, the rats coming regularly to partake of meals with the cat. Finally the farmer decided to put an end to the singular friendship, and, taking a gun, went to the cellar. No sooner, however, had he fired at and missed a rat than the cat jumped upon it and killed it. Now the farmer wants to know why the cat did not kill the rat before.

Gavin, a clothier at Lafayette, Ind., sent a telegram that, as delivered in Cincinnati, read as follows: "I will employ Murray for six months and longer, if his cutting is satisfactory." Murray was discharged at the end of a month. He sued for wages during six months, claiming that, by the terms of the offer, he was to be employed for that period anyhow, and longer, if he proved satisfactory. Gavin held that the dispatch, properly construed, meant that Murray was to hold the place only as long as his cutting was satisfactory. His lawyer argued that a comma after the word "months" was necessary to support the claim. The Judge ruled for the plaintiff.

The Boston and New York boats have long had a war of cutting fares. From Boston to New York is $1, while from Boston to Newport—not half way—the fare is $1.60. Once upon a time Mr. Ward McAllister, a Harvard law student, had occasion to go to Newport. Now, strange as it may appear, this particular law student had not a superfluity of lucre, although it is a well-known fact that law students generally are very flush. So Mr. McAllister bought a ticket to New York, intending quietly and unobtrusively to get off at Newport. But here the mighty arm of the railroad company was stretched out and the McAllister was not allowed to get off until he had paid 60 cents extra. This was why he sued. The court has just decided that a man must pay for riding on the cars, but that he is not obliged to pay for getting off where he pleases. So the economical McAllister not only got his ride to Newport for $1, but he has been awarded $75 and costs for doing so. The costs amount to $125.

A balloon was recently sent up from Lille, France, containing two occupants, who had several very narrow escapes before they again alighted on terra firma. A heavy wind was blowing at the time, and, on the balloon reaching an altitude of 1,900 metres, the cold air condensed the gas and caused the balloon to descend with fearful rapidity. Carried along by the wind, it struck violently against a tree, throwing out one of the occupants, who only saved his life by clinging to the ropes of the balloon and swinging himself into the car again. The anchor was thrown out, but the speed at which the balloon was traveling broke it off as soon as it caught in a tree. The balloon then started off at a furious pace, impelled by the gale, and, in crossing a railway, narrowly escaped being cut in two by the telegraph wires. At last, after completing a distance of four and a half miles in five minutes, the stump of the anchor caught in the branches of a tree, the balloon came to a sudden stop and burst, the two aeronauts were thrown down with the car, which fortunately lodged in a tree. Some peasants soon arrived and extricated the unfortunate travelers, who were not injured by their dangerous voyage.

Mr. Howler, a beplastered and pasted-up victim of man's inhumanity to man, appeared in a San Francisco police court demanding justice. He was a professor of elocution, into whose apartments, while instructing a pupil, burst McPelter, who threw the pupil down stairs, danced on Howler and hammered him into a hash with a bed-slat. McPelter then produced two witnesses from his coat-tail pocket—a slice of wooden partition and a copy of Edgar A. Poe's poems. The substance of his testimony was that he had been doomed to hear the poem of "The Raven" howled by the plaintiff until his spirits sank, his sleep forsook him, his memory failed and reason began to totter on its throne. The clerk read three stanzas in a sing-song tone and then the poem was turned over to Howler. At the end of the first verse there was a general look of horror; at the second groans and evidence of sea-sickness; at the third the Judge grew faint, and the policeman clapped his hand over the elocutionist's mouth. A flask of "medicine" was handed to the court, and when he recovered he dismissed the prisoner and bound Howler over to keep the piece—and keep it out of sight.

Why Quacks Succeed.

Any explanation of the success of quackery would be insufficient if it did not include the fact expressed in the following lines:

> You'll ne'er convince a fool, himself is so;
> He hates realities, and hugs the cheat,
> And still the only pleasure's the deceit.

An invalid, whose disease had been pronounced incurable, intrusted his case to a quack. It was his last resort. The quack promised that if he would submit to his treatment for six months he would make a well man of him; but no change must be looked for until the expiration of that period. A friend, seeing that the invalid was paying out money and receiving no benefit, expostulated.

"For mercy's sake!" exclaimed the invalid, "destroy not the hopes which that man holds out to me; upon them I live, without them I die."

The man's stimulant was the quack's assurances, half suspected though they were. A medical writer tells this story of a celebrated English quack:

He was once visited by an old acquaintance from the country, who addressed him as "Zam."

"I'm glad to see thee'st got on so vinely, Zam," said the rustic, "but how is't, man? Thee know'st thee never had no more brains nor a pumpkin."

Taking him to a window, the quack bade him count the passers-by. "How many have passed?" asked the quack, after a few minutes.

"Nointy, or mayhap a hundred."

"And how many wise men do you suppose were among this number?"

"Mayhap one."

"Well, all the rest are mine."

Robert Burns' Prose.

It is not generally known that Burns' prose works exceed in bulk his poetry. It is when we see the former collected in three large volumes that we perceive that the poet wrote so many and so voluminous letters. The more of Burns' letters that come to light the feebler will become the prejudice now common against his prose style. It is true that his letters are pompous and affected, and echoes of the fine language of the time, when he writes with half sincerity and in what he calls his "very best manner." But when he is himself, burning words and manly eloquence rise to his lips.—London Times.

FARM NOTES.

To Make Sheep Pay.—To benefit to the full extent by raising and keeping a numerous flock of sheep; roots must be grown for winter use, and when this is found to be true, and roots are grown on a proper field system, so as to cost but from 5 to 8 cents per bushel, sheep husbandry will go ahead.

Mineral and Farm Manures.—Dr. Lawes says: "I may say that forty-two pounds of nitrogen, applied in the form of nitrate of soda, with mineral manures, with one acre of barley, has, for twenty-five years in succession, produced as large a crop as an annual application of fourteen tons of farm-yard dung per acre."

Black Ants a Cure for Currant-Worms.—A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer finds the common black ant an efficient protection against the plague of currant-worms. He has several colonies of ants close to his currant bushes, and enjoys an abundance of currants, while his neighbors' bushes are overrun with worms. Formerly he took pains to destroy the ant colonies, but, on witnessing their attacks upon the worms, he has taken pains to protect and encourage them.

How Not to Use Lime.—Lime is not a good material to mix with animal manures; it has a tendency to separate and throw off the ammonia; therefore, unless a considerable quantity of dry muck is added to absorb the ammonia, the lime reduces rather than increases the value of manure. If one has large quantities of good muck, with plenty of lime, and a farm with a light soil, it would be desirable and profitable to mix lime with the muck, or in some cases to mix muck with the manure in small quantities.

Keeping Butter with Borax.—The Italian Minister of Agriculture gives an account of some experiments which have been made at experimental stations of Florence, to the effect that butter, purposely not freed from buttermilk, kept perfectly sweet, for upward of three months by the addition of 8 per cent. of borax. It is stated that the borax should be dry, in fine powder, and thoroughly mixed with the butter. A friend of ours is experimenting with both borax and boracic acid in butter, and in due time will report results.

Codling Moth Traps.—The cheapest bands for trapping codling moths are made of thick coarse paper, what is termed carpet-paper answering a good purpose. It may be more or less folded, according to its thickness, the bands being about four inches wide. There are two modes of fastening them to the tree, either of which answers well. One is to pass a cord around at the middle, which, when drawn tight, causes the paper to spread a little above and below, and affords a hiding place for the insects; the other is to secure one end of the band by driving a carpet tack into the tree, and then passing the band closely about the tree, and overlapping the other end, fastening it by driving in another tack not quite to the head, so that the band may be removed every ten days for destroying the pupa. The bands are put on about the middle of June. Their length must be adjusted to the size of the trees.

Peach Grub.—"Here is the plan I have tried for twenty years with the worm that works on the tree just under the surface of the ground. I destroy all the worms I can find; then prepare a sheet of brown paper by painting it with grafting wax; clean the dirt from the tree as low as I can without interfering with the roots; then wrap the paper around the trunk about a foot up from the root. It will stick without any tying. Then pull the dirt back around the tree. The time to do the work is in the spring. If you are planting out young trees, wrap them before they are planted. They should be wrapped every spring. Old trees are not worth bothering with. The miller deposits the eggs which produce the grubs in May or June, just above the surface of the ground. They hatch, go downward and become larger all the time and do not stop working till cold weather."—E. N., Cincinnati, O.

Hog Butter.—Editor Clarkson, of the Iowa State Register, is a very cautious man, especially as to what he eats. It is presumed that some wretched substitute for good butter came nigh unto his table, and he talks thusly about it: "It seems that adulteration is to invade all kinds of food. Butter is not only made of tallow and refuse beef grease, but now it is announced that there are really extensive establishments where butter is adulterated with lard. Half choice butter with the other half lard, with a little additional coloring matter, is said to resemble the prime article better than the best samples of oleomargarine. It is now put up in the latest style and branded as pure butter, and does not come under the penalties imposed by law on Old Marg. butter. So this will open a market for a large portion of the hog-cholera lard. The better way is to know from whom you get your butter, and know that they are right."

The Queen and Beatrice.

As to the Queen herself, she is never seen in London unless she comes up from Windsor especially for some public ceremonial, and then she remains as short a time as possible in the city, always going back to Windsor before night. Even the number of presentations at the drawing-room is restricted, because she will not endure the fatigue of receiving for more than two hours at a time. Should the number of ladies to be presented prove so large as to take up more time than the allotted two hours, she will unceremoniously take her departure, and leave the Princess of Wales to act in her stead. But presentation to the Princess is by no means considered in the same light as is one to the Queen, and so at every drawing-room there is a great desire on the part of those to be presented to get their names among the first of those inscribed upon the list, so as to be sure of kissing the finger-tips of veritable royalty. The Queen might very well, one would think, remain until the very last, as her presence at the drawing-room is the only social manifestation of any kind that she has permitted herself to make since the death of Prince Albert. She never goes even to the opera or the theater; she never drives in the park, and she mews up the luckless Princess Beatrice as closely as though she were a cloistered nun, instead of a marriageable young lady of royal blood. No one ever sees the Princess in public with the Prince and Princess of Wales, as she remains buried with the mother in dreary seclusion from one year's end to another.—London letter.

HOUSEKEEPERS' HELPS.

Flour Gems.—These are made by taking a cup of sweet cream, one beaten egg, and stirring in fine flour until a little stiffer than griddle cakes. Bake the same as Graham gems.

Rice Cake.—Eight beaten eggs, a pound of white sugar, half a pound of butter, a pound of rice ground very fine, a little salt, three table-spoonfuls of milk, and any flavoring liked. Cream the butter and sugar, add the eggs, then the milk and salt, stirring in the rice last. Bake in small pans.

Country Captain.—Cut up a chicken into small pieces, melt some butter in a saucepan, and put into it an onion shred very fine, fry until quite crisp, sprinkle the fowl well with curry powder, add some salt, and fry until thoroughly cooked, turning the pieces frequently. Serve very hot, with the fried onions on the top.

Delicious Pineapple Custard.—On the day before you wish to use the custard, peel and pick to pieces with two forks a nice pineapple. Put plenty of sugar over it and set it away. Next day make a custard, and when cool mix with the pineapple, which will have become soft and luscious, and thoroughly sweetened.

Breakfast Dishes.—Trout or mackerel split open and broiled, scrambled eggs on anchovy toast, buttered eggs with tomato sauce, fried soles with cut lemon, kidneys stewed or fried, kidney toast, ham toast, omelets, curried fowl or rabbit, rissoles, potted meat, and lobster or salmon cutlets, are all excellent dishes for breakfast, and not very difficult to prepare.

Give Baby a Drink.—I have no doubt that much fretfulness in little ones is caused by their suffering from want of fresh, cold water. Give a little at a time, every hour or two, especially when teething. My own babe often at night awakes crying, after an hour or so of sleep. I have found that at such times a drink of water will do more to soothe and quiet him than anything else I can do.

Cinnamon Rolls and Rusk.—For rusk, take a loaf of bread at the last kneading, work in a lump of butter and a little sugar. Let rise; make into little cakes; again let it rise, then bake. For cinnamon rolls, roll the dough into a sheet half an inch thick, spread with butter, sugar and cinnamon. Commence at one side and roll up; then with a sharp knife cut into cakes half an inch thick, and let rise and bake.

Veal Hash.—Take a teacup of boiling water in a sauce-pan, stir in an even teaspoon flour wet in a table-spoon cold water, and let it boil five minutes; add one-half teaspoon black pepper, as much salt, and two table-spoons butter, and let it keep hot, but not boil. Chop the veal fine, and mix with it half as much stale bread crumbs. Put it in a pan and pour the gravy on it, then let it simmer ten minutes. Serve this on buttered toast.

Practical.

Zabdiel Adams, a Congregational clergyman, of Massachusetts, in the last century, was noted for sharp wit and pithy sayings. He was apt to say pungent things in the pulpit, if matters went badly in the parish, and adjoining parishes had learned to fear his sharp tongue.

A neighboring clergyman noted for his mildness and timidity, once proposed an exchange of pulpits. Mr. Adams accepted the proposal eagerly, for he was itching to tell the people some plain truths about their niggardliness in neglecting their meeting-house. There were broken panes in the pulpit window, a ragged cushion on the disk, and a general forlornness about the sanctuary.

Mr. Adams had prepared a stinging rebuke for parsimony, when his timid neighbor, suspecting some such purpose, rode over on Saturday and exacted a promise that he would say nothing unkind to the people. Mr. Adams reluctantly consented, but a new idea occurred to him. Taking a little bag into the pulpit, he waited till the congregation gathered. Then, looking round, as if feeling a draught, he examined the broken panes, and opening his bag, took out a bundle of rags, stuffed them slowly into the openings, and surveyed his work with great satisfaction. There was a sensation below.

He then began the services. In the middle of his sermon, growing very animated, he closed the Bible, set it aside, and lifting his hands impressively, suddenly brought them down with great force on the cushion. Feathers blew out of the holes abundantly.

Looking round comically, he said: "Bless me! how the feathers fly!" and resumed his sermon as if nothing had gone amiss.

It is needless to say repairs were made before another Sunday, though he had kept the letter of his promise to the timid pastor.

The bird-killing spider, a monster from Bahia, with a hairy body three inches long and terrible claws, has recently been received in the Zoological Gardens in London. He hides under a bit of bark, from which he emerges to kill his prey, a mouse or a bird, or he will eat a dozen ship cockroaches in an hour. Unwarned by the fate of their comrades, the cockroaches walk up to the great insect to stare at him, and are caught up and devoured, one after the other, as the followers of Ulysses by the Cyclops. The animal has his uses, and will at least serve to reduce the number of the cockroaches by which the gardens are infested.

A young mother, in despair o ever teaching her idle little girl, aged 4, her letters, and thinking that perhaps the child knew more than she would admit, said: "Now, Katie, I won't try to teach you to-day; you shall be mother, and shall teach me my letters." "May I really and truly be mother?" said Katie. "Yes, my darling." "Let's begin, then," was the response. "You have been a very good child to-day and you may have a whole holiday!" and Katie shut up the book and ran off laughing.

DEVASTATING STORMS.

Gigantic Power of the Winds That Has Been Attested by Many Disasters.

(From the New York Evening Post.)

The tremendous wind-storms lately experienced in the western part of the United States will not, we trust, find a coming parallel on the Atlantic coast; but it cannot be denied that the suffocating heat, unexampled as it is for the month of May, by which we have been and are still visited, is likely to be followed by atmospheric preturbations of a violent character. While we may hope, therefore, that such vicissitudes, if they come, may prove of a harmless description, it is timely and interesting to consider the nature and scope of such phenomena as are supplied by historical data.

Calamity, when it does not immediately touch ourselves, is apt to slip easily from the mind, and hence events often appear unique, precedents for which have in fact often been established. The recent destruction of Western towns by violent gales of wind has thus probably been regarded by many persons as a novel display of the malefic forces of nature; but there are in truth a great number of accounts of similar experiences of authentic character preserved in the records. Nor are these instances confined to tropical regions or to settlements of new or fragile construction; they have occurred in latitudes as temperate as our own, and the most solid structures erected by the hand of man have sometimes been prostrated by the overwhelming fury of the elements.

The gigantic power of the wind has been illustrated by the repeated demolition of lighthouses built on the famous Eddystone rock, and the same thing, it will be recalled, happened on our own coast to the lighthouse on Minot's ledge, near Boston, on the 19th of April, 1851. These events, however, like those of the terrible East Indian storm of Oct. 25, 1737—which destroyed hundreds of ships and 30,000 human lives—and perhaps the earlier, or "great" storm, on the coast of England in November, 1703, may be imputed in a considerable degree to the accumulated stress of the wind gathered in crossing vast bodies of water. But the gale that ravaged England in February, 1861, when the spire of Chichester Cathedral and part of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham were blown down, was of a manifestly different character.

London itself has many times been disastrously visited in the same manner. In 944 it is recorded that a storm burst upon that capital that overthrew 1,500 houses. In 1091 500 houses were blown down there; and, not to mention intervening and lesser catastrophes of this nature, tremendous hurricanes felled whole streets of buildings in London in the years 1800 and 1838. In 1814, 1822 and 1828 there were like outbreaks throughout the United Kingdom. In 1839—Jan. 6-7, 1839—the west coast of England and many parts of Ireland suffered terribly from the same cause. Twenty persons were killed in Liverpool by the falling buildings, and great numbers were drowned in and about the Mersey. Dublin, Limerick, Galway and other towns were similarly afflicted, and with them the prostration of houses and the concurrent loss of life were followed, as in examples lately chronicled, by conflagration, the winds spreading the fires.

As regards the details of mischief wrought by past great storms, and the comparison of those details with the damage done by late tempests in our Western States, it will be found that parallels have been recorded to the worst of what has lately been suffered, and perhaps to exceed it. In one of the examples we have cited, that of the English hurricane of November 26 and 27, 1703, 8,000 persons are said to have perished in the floods of the Severn and the Thames alone. Ships were blown from their anchorage and never heard of more. Twelve men-of-war went down in full sight of the English coast. Seventeen thousand trees were torn up by the roots in Kent alone. The Eddystone lighthouse was dashed into the sea, its engineer, Winstanley, being within it. Cattle were drowned in tens of thousands. The Bishop of Bath and Wells and his wife were killed in bed at their palace in Somersetshire. Such an accumulation of horrors is not outstripped, it must be owned, by any evils with which, unhappily, the last few days have made us familiar. Such dire catastrophes are uncommon, it is true, in immediately-modern days, but they have been sadly plentiful for all that, and what is more, and Mr. Buckle and Mr. Vennor to the contrary notwithstanding, there is neither measurable periodicity nor other trustworthy data about these dismal inflictions whereby mankind can prepare for or evade them.

The Whig Convention of '40.

The Des Moines Register has an editorial giving reminiscences of the Whig Convention at Harrisburg, Pa., forty years ago—the one that nominated Gen. Harrison. It gives the names of all the delegates from each State, and many other interesting facts. The Register says that at that period in her political history the whole number of delegates to the National Convention was 198, divided as follows:

Maine	7	Kentucky	10
New Hampshire	4	Ohio	15
Massachusetts	14	Indiana	5
Rhode Island	2	Louisiana	1
Vermont	6	Mississippi	2
Connecticut	7	Missouri	2
New York	38	Illinois	3
Pennsylvania	24	Alabama	3
New Jersey	7	Michigan	3
Delaware	10	Virginia	15
Maryland	9
North Carolina	11		198

They were entitled to 254 votes. So it required 128 to nominate. On the first ballot, Gen. Scott had sixteen, Henry Clay ninety, and Gen. Harrison 148 votes. It will be noticed that the great Northwest of to-day was then a mere shadow. Illinois had but three votes in the convention and Missouri but two. There was then no Iowa, and no Wisconsin to be represented, saying nothing of the smaller but still great States now making up this great division.

The water is diverted from the Merrimac river for the use of the mills at Lowell, Mass., and at 6 o'clock is turned back again. Two little boys were fishing from a rock in the rapids when the water came thundering down. They climbed to the highest point, where they were just above the current. Efforts were made to rescue them, but in vain, and they were compelled to remain on their perch all night. The danger was that they would get asleep and fall off, and to keep them awake their parents and others built bonfires on the shore, sang camp-meeting songs, and told stories to them until morning.

A party of tramps broke into a confectioner's residence in Dubuque, Iowa, a few nights ago, kindled a fire in the range, cooked what there was to eat, had a hearty supper, and departed before daybreak, without disturbing any member of the family and without stealing anything except a pair of shoes.

American tradesmen who claim genius for advertising should listen to a Berlin grocer, who thus informs the public through the Borsen Zeitung: "Twins are come to me for the third time. This time a boy and girl. I entreat my friends and patrons to support me stoutly. Excellent butter, well worth its price; similarly, sausage and cheese."

It is estimated that this year the colleges and universities of the country will turn out one thousand new ministers of the gospel, two thousand new doctors, about one hundred of them women, and three thousand new lawyers. It will be seen from this that the world, the flesh and the devil have greater attractions for the rising generations than the church.

Over fifty patents have been granted for different kinds of cow-milkers, thirteen in England and forty in America. These machines have been divided into three classes: First, tube-milkers; second, sucking machines; third, mechanical hand-milkers. The first are tappers, the second suckers, and the third squeezers and strippers. Some devices are formed of combinations of these classes.

Two boys and two girls, the oldest of whom was under 16, planned to elope from Ottawa and get married this side of the line. One of the boys obtained $80 for expenses, but the other's financial calculations failed, and at the last moment he was compelled to withdraw from the enterprise. His sweetheart, however, could not give up the idea of eloping, and so accompanied the more prosperous couple in their flight.

How to Buy Meats.

There are not many house keepers who have any thorough knowledge about meats; the condition in which it ought to be bought, its appearance when it is unfit for use, and the most desirable cuts to purchase. This sort of knowledge is most essential, especially when there exists so little conscience on the part of the butchers. One fact should be remembered, and that is that in the purchase of meats, as in everything else, the best is the cheapest. Cheap joints always include large bones and sinews; such joints should be used for soup and gravies. For roasting and boiling choose the better cuts, such as legs of mutton and veal, ribs, sirloin and round of beef.

Ox beef, when good and young, has a fine open grain and a good red color; the fat is firm and white. The grain of cow beef is closer and the color darker. When the fat of beef is hard and skinny, and the lean of a deep red, it is very inferior. Old meat may be known by a line of horny texture running through the meat of the ribs. The cuts known as chuck, brisket and round, are the least desirable. Sirloin and middle ribs are best for roasting.

In choosing mutton, look for firmness and fineness of grain, good color and firm, white fat. Lamb should be fresh. The vein in the neck of lamb is blue when the meat is fresh, but turns green when kept too long. In buying hind-quarters, examine the kidney; there will be a slight smell if the meat is not as fresh as it should be. Veal is generally preferred when the meat is delicately white, but it is better flavored and more juicy when the color is a little deeper. To test veal look at the loin; if the kidney, which will be found on the under side of one end of the loin, is enveloped in firm and white fat, the meat is certainly recently killed and undoubtedly good. The kidney always changes first, and then the meat is flabby and spotted, and the suet soft.—New York Tribune.

The manner in which Mr. Charles Beugnot was slaughtered by the republicans of DeKalb county, is characteristic of the republican party. Know-nothingism is one of the cardinal principles of that party, and it is only necessary to whisper in the ears of the faithful that a certain candidate for office is a catholic, to have his political career abbreviated.

The republican convention of last Saturday preferred to take the chances and nominate both clerk and treasurer from the same town, rather than put a certain catholic on the ticket. The manipulators will leave catholics off of the state hereafter, unless they are put on to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for some person else, as Mr. Beugnot was this time.

The acknowledged qualifications of Mr. B. D. Harris for county clerk made him a prominent candidate for that office at the republican convention last Saturday. The only arguments used against him were that he was a carpetbagger, that he had no property here and was not permanently located; in view of which he was laid upon the political cooling-board. These objections were all forgotten, however, when the name of Mr. Hopkins was presented for the office of representative in the state legislature. Mr. Hopkins is little known throughout the county, and was nominated on the recommendation of Mr. O. C. Clark, of Keyser township. The nominee is a superintendent in one of the B. & O. railroad shops at Garrett, and was nominated with a view of getting the votes of the railroad employes. He owns no more real estate in this county than Mr. Harris does, and his residence here depends upon the length of time the B. & O. railroad gives him employment. We doubt whether the people of DeKalb will care to risk their interests in the legislature in the hands of an entire stranger. Time will tell whether or not his nomination was a judicious one.

A majority of the voters of DeKalb county will be gratified to know that the supreme court of this state has decided that the constitutional amendments were not adopted by a majority of the voters at the April election. A source of equal gratification is the announcement made by Judge Best in the republican convention last Saturday, that the decision of the supreme court will be made an issue in the coming campaign. No issue will suit the democrats and many republicans of this county better than the one suggested by Judge Best. The people want no such jumbled legislation, and the party which undertakes to defend it will be placed upon the defensive before the campaign closes. Let the issue be made.

Republican papers are charging that the action of the supreme court, in deciding against the adoption of the constitutional amendments, was through impure motives intended to benefit the democratic party; at the same time the republicans claim that the action of the court will give them 20,000 majority at the next election. The two statements do not harmonize well, because, if the democratic judges made their decision from a political standpoint—which they did not—it is not probable that they ruled against their own party; on the other hand, if they decided upon purely legal propositions—which they did—they certainly ought not to be charged with impure motives.

We had the pleasure a few days since of meeting and forming the acquaintance of Mr. Jay J. VanAuken, of DeKalb county. Mr. VanAuken is a candidate for sheriff in that county on the democratic ticket, and is a live, energetic young democrat, who the democracy of DeKalb would do well to elect, as they undoubtedly will.—Elkhart Democrat.

The voters of DeKalb county are going to turn the sheriff's office over to a democrat next October, and that democrat is J. J. VanAuken. His opponents will please take notice.

THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

A Result Unexpected and Unsatisfactory to the Party.

The republicans of DeKalb county met in delegate convention last Saturday. The crowd, aside from the delegates, was made up of democrats and brass bands. The convention was called to order at half past ten o'clock by H. C. Peterson. Mr. W. L. Penfield was made permanent chairman, who briefly addressed the convention. In his remarks he alluded (jokingly) to the unanimity of the republican national and state conventions, and with the same degree of earnestness declared that there was no discord nor dissension in the republican ranks. He spoke of Garfield as the republican candidate for president, and Porter as the candidate for governor, but neither name created the least ripple of applause. Our friend Penfield was evidently moving in too low a sphere upon that occasion.

At the conclusion of Mr. Penfield's remarks the republican editors of the county were invited to act as secretaries. The Chair named Messrs. Best, Hartman, Pinchen, Bicknell and Murphy as a committee on resolutions.

The announcement of candidates was declared in order, and the following names were presented for the several offices:

—The following is a list of letters remaining unclaimed in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., June 21, 1880:

—Mrs. D. W. Worden, of Moberly, Mo., a sister of Mrs. A. J. Little and Mrs. Ed. Eldridge, arrived in town early Monday morning, to render what service she could at the bedside of her mother, Mrs. McDowell, who is prostrated with sickness and has been confined to her bed for a number of weeks.

—The Mayor house, at Fort Wayne, W. W. Reed proprietor, may not be so pretentious in appearance, but its register shows a business, on several recent occasions, which is equal to that of any other two hotels in the city combined. Its bill of fare cannot be beaten, and its proprietor is a genial, hospitable gentleman.

—Clyde Moore returned last Thursday from Notre Dame, near South Bend, where he has been sharpening his intellect for several months past. Clyde has written home some rather severe criticisms on the discipline of the school, and when Mr. C. C. Shaffer met him Thursday, he greeted him thusly: "Hello, Clyde, how's the prison?"

—While the republican convention was in conclave last Saturday, at the court-house, we observed one disgusted man sitting in the grass, at the north side of the building, holding his head between his hands and sobbing like a defeated candidate. A friend at our side surmised that he was weeping over the corruption in the party to which he was devoted.

—Another exceedingly pleasant entertainment was given last Thursday evening to their friends of both sexes, by Mr. and Mrs. Jno. L. Davis, in honor of their son's return from school. The music was good, the supper was par excellence, and the dancing—as the girls would say—was "just too jolly for anything." Rev. Mr. Webbe and lady, and Miss Lillie Ward, of Ft. Wayne, and Mr. and Mrs. Shryock and son, Will., of Huntertown, were the "foreigners" in attendance, including Miss Crane, of Waterloo, who, possibly, can hardly be classed under that head. That party will long be remembered as one of the best private entertainments of this season

Released From Suffering.

Mrs. Belle Baughn, wife of Captain Wm. Baughn, whom the readers of the COURIER will remember as having been a sufferer from dropsy for sever months past, died of that dread disease Tuesday morning at four o'clock, in the 43rd year of her age, and was buried at five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day. The funeral sermon will be preached by Rev. H. J. Norris, next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in the Methodist church.

Postponement.

The national greenback labor convention for DeKalb county is postponed until some time in the month of August, previous to which due notice will be given. The postponement is in compliance with numerous requests, for which the harvest season has made it advisable. It means no abandonment. The convention will assemble, and a ticket will be placed in the field. By order of committee.

A. B. DARBY, Chairman.

Drowned in a Ditch.

Last Sunday afternoon, Willie Burgett, a lad of about eight years, who was living with Mr. John Wingard, was drowned in a ditch about six miles east of Auburn. The particulars of the sad affair are as follows: On the day named, Mr. Wingard and his family, with little Willie and a number of the neighbors, attended a woods meeting in that vicinity. On their way home they stopped at Mr. Wingard's father's, and while there the little boy asked to go bathing. Mr. Wingard fearing to allow him to go alone, went with him, and several other young men accompanied them. The bathing place was a large ditch which was being dug through the woods, and which was full of water. After the boy and men had been in the water some time, the boy was placed on the bank and told to go and dress. He ran along the ditch toward his clothing and no more attention was paid to him until after the men had dressed, when the boy could not be found. The ditch was searched at once and the body was found in about four feet of water, not over one hundred feet from and within plain sight of the men. It is supposed that the unfortunate boy was playing on the bank and accidentally slipped into a hole below his depth. It will probably be some time before those young men take another child in swimming on Sunday. Willie was buried Monday in Cosper's graveyard.

Pint bottles only one dollar. Use Dr. Whites Pulmonaria for Coughs and Colds. The best in the market. For sale at Casebeer & Matheny's drug store. 25-2w.

—Get your candies at Schaab, Beugnot & Co's., at prices cheaper than the cheapest

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-1t

Special Notice to Soldiers.

The law granting arrears of pensions dating back to the day of discharge, will soon expire. It is highly important that soldiers of the late war who expect to apply for pensions should file their papers now. If their claims are filed before the law expires they will have all the benefits of the law. Land warrants and pensions for all U. S. wars prior to 1861; pensions and bounties for soldiers (and heirs) of the late war. Experience of 20 years. Information in regard to all military claims gratis. It is probable the present congress will pension Mexican soldiers without regard to disability, and also their widows. Send in your names.

AN OLD MAN'S LOVE.

BY ARVIDE BALDWIN.

So old and feeble man was this
Of whom this story's told to-day;
Sorrows he'd known as well as bliss,
And he had nearly closed life's play;
But still he had no thought that time
Had such wild wings as it flew on,
And so he passed his life of prose and rhyme,
And youth, he thought was here, was gone.

And manhood in its prime had disappeared,
While wrinkles deep, marked o'er his face,
Had now to show that what he feared
While young had found a lodging-place;
But still he would not know 'twas so,
But toiled on with dry and creaking bones,
Trying to keep ahead of worldly woe,
And shunning the place that's covered o'er with stones.

And thus he toils, with shoulders stooping down,
Writing with greatest will, to-day,
And looks not up. But o'er his crown
Of gray the morning sunbeams play;
Perhaps 'twill not be wrong to steal a look
Upon the page where crooked lines are seen,
And see what's in the heart's remotest nook
Of age; and what its love has been.

And so we look, and this is what we see
Scrawled upon the sheet before us;
'Twill show that with us, early though death be,
Those that live will e'er deplore us,
And though our male may live an hundred year
And five and seventy more than we,
He'll only recollect through smiles and tears
Our youth and its sad destiny.

* * * * * *

Dear Lena, thou springtime of my soul,
I long to clasp thee in these arms again,
To shield thee from the ills and pain
This life control.
Thou wert my joy but a few days ago,
But death hath robbed thee from the earth,
And taken youth and beauty well as worth,
And only memory left to know
That thou wast here, and all that's good of thee.
I feel a hand! I think it must be thine!
Aye, those fingers that so quietly intertwine
Are thine for me—
Ah, yes, indeed, it is. I hear a sound!
That gentle voice only hers could be!
And thus I hear her say, "Come up to me;
Pleasures here abound."

I've missed thee long—aye, many a day,
My love so beautiful in form and face,
And o'er whose brow no sign, no trace
Is found of life's decay.
Return to me, that I may see thee yet—
That I may love thee as in days gone by—
We'll foster joys, that ills of earth may die,
And not our paths beset.

Answer, my love, and tell it unto me
That thou wilt come and ease my aching heart.
What dost thou say? "Here, love, we never part,
Come up to me."
I must, for life without my youthful bride
Is tasteless, and I'd better far be there
And breathe the incense of the heavenly air,
When death hath died.

So wait for me, I'll soon be there with thee,
For I am getting tired, and down will lie,
And rest myself before the trip, I try,
To once more see
And love thee, more than I have loved thee yet.
And the trembling hand is weakening now,
As he guides the pen, and wonders how
He'll cross unto his pet.

But he loves to talk to his darling one,
And he talks on and tells her of his love;
Of how he'd die to meet her up above,
If otherwise it can't be done.
The pen is wandering o'er the page,
The scrawls are almost meaningless,
But love abounds in this rude dress,
And is not lessened e'en by age.

At last the pen drops from his hand;
The hand falls listless by his side;
The smiles of youth the aged furrows hide
Bespeak a better land.
They touch the wrinkled brow so clammy,
With death's stain stamped upon the clay,
They know that now his soul's begun the day
In regions ever balmy.
No more will sorrows crowd upon his head;
His dreams of Lena are now realized;
And all the good for man by Heaven devised
Are resting on his head.

A WASTED LIFE.

It was just after the conquest of Britain by William the Conqueror, when one morning a strange sight was to be seen upon the Thames at the point where now stand the Houses of Parliament.

A vast crowd was congregating on the northern bank—so vast that the Norman Guards on sentry on the spot where now stands Westminster Hall became doubtful of what was happening, and gave the alarm.

A company of Normans was at once marched to the palace.

They were but few men, yet quite capable of contending with a larger crowd of the Londoners, for the latter had been deprived of all arms, and had been forbidden, under pain of death, to assemble in numbers.

The Captain of the guard saw, however that the greater portion of the crowd was composed of women and children, and at once was reassured.

"What is the cause of the crowding?" he asked of a loud-tongued woman, who was haranguing those standing about her.

"It is Albra, the wife of Vindor, who wishes to prove that she is an honest woman."

"How so?"

"By the test of the shield."

The Captain turned to his men.

"Disband," he said, "and go among the people. At the least sign of a rising come to me with the news. Again, if ye hear the Castle bell, at once fall back and join me in the court-yard. Methinks the excitement has little to do with us or the King."

Near the water stood a man and woman, both of whom were young—the man handsome, the woman very beautiful.

Between them they carried a shield upon which was stretched an infant, whose age could not have been many days.

The man was evidently troubled and gloomy, while the woman, though pale, was perfectly calm.

Where they stood, the river ran at a rapid pace.

Around them the people stood eager and excited, for they knew what was about to happen.

"Who is he?" asked one.

"He is Vindor," was the reply; "and once master of the men-at-arms to the Thane of Buckingham. Now he is servant to his old master, who lives here in London. All he possesses of his old arms is the shield upon which the child lies."

"Whose child is it?"

"Ay, there is the point upon which Vindor is doubtful!"

"How so?"

"You see that he is fair, like most Saxons; while his wife is fairer still. Now look at the little child cooing in its strange cot, and you will remark that his hair is black, and that his skin is dark."

"That's so."

"Vindor, troubled in his mind by a suggestion of an old friend, doubts his wife, has told her so, and she is appealing to the old gods of Anglo-Saxonia to prove her innocence. But mark, they are speaking!"

Thereupon Vindor, growing still gloomier, approached his wife, and said to her, "Behold, the moment has arrived!"

"Thou wilt have it so?" asked Albra. "Is it still thy wish?"

"Yes," replied the gloomy man. "Let the old gods of the land decide whether or not this child is mine."

"Then let it be as thou wilt," said Albra, "and the shame and disgrace be with you."

The husband took the shield upon which lay the child—now dozing.

Vindor walked into the swift-flowing river, and up to his waist, raised the child and shield over his head for a moment, turned once again toward his wife, as though menacing her with the deed he was about to commit.

Meanwhile she, with head erect and an assured aspect, stood at the edge of the water, motionless as a statue, with arms crossed upon her breast.

As he looked at her, she stretched out her hand toward her husband, and said, in a loud and haughty voice:

"Do not hesitate!"

And now the crowd began to heave and rock, while a low murmur was heard, like a threat, ascending from among the assembled people. For, as the woman spoke, the gloomy man lowered the strange cradle, placed it lightly on the running water, and let it and the child out away down the stream.

Scarcely, however, had the shield moved a yard away from the doubting man, when Vindor (as though nature had suddenly reproached him) raised his clasped and trembling hands, imploring heavenly help.

He followed the course of the shield with great eagerness, despite his evident desire to control his emotion, and bending anxiously forward in the direction it was taking.

The mother, on the contrary, remained quite calm, her arms crossed on her bosom, her eyes following the course of the shield with a firm and tranquil look, so quiet and unmoved that she appeared to fear nothing for her child's safety.

Twice were the shield and child nearly swallowed up in the waters.

The mother alone did not flinch among all who watched this test.

Twice—then, again, the shield was seen tranquilly descending the current.

All present clapped their hands, and shouted, "The boat! the boat!"

Two men rushed forward, launched a bark into the river, and, rowing rapidly, soon reached the shield, and drew it from the water.

The motion of the water had soothed the child, and rocked it to sleep—a state of things which, in all probability, was the cause of its safety, for had the child moved at all the frail craft must have been overturned.

Now, as the shield was taken from the water, Vindor, whose face had become as bright and hopeful as it had previously been gloomy and foreboding, ran toward his wife, his arms outstretched, calling, "Albra, Albra, thou art my faithful wife!"

But she showed no sign of responding to his welcome.

"Stand back," she said. "I have been suspected, and cannot forgive!"

It was a custom with the wives of the ancient Saxons thus to prove their innocence when suspected by their husbands.

If the shield did not sink, then the wife was innocent; while if it and the child went below the water, then she was considered guilty, and, as a rule, leaped into the water after her sacrificed child.

They were, indeed, strange and terrible times in which to live.

As we have said, the wife Albra showed neither signs of joy nor forgiveness.

At this moment, a handsome, dark man thrust himself forward, crying, "Fair Sister Albra, what dost thou here by the side of the river?"

Vindor, looking at the new-comer, trembled.

"Did I not tell thee," said Albra, "that many of my people were dark? See, here is my brother, who has been in Gaul these five years. Is not he dark? Our infant is like my father's people."

"Wife—dear wife!" cried Vindor.

"No longer wife of thine," she said. "A woman outraged is a woman lost. Good-by—good-by!"

And, before any one there had a complete knowledge of what she was about to do, she had leaped into the fast-flowing river.

Twenty men rushed into the river after her, nor was she immersed during more than a score seconds. But when they removed her from the stream she was dead.

In all probability her heart had broken. Certainly she had not been long enough in the water to account for her death by way of drowning.

Sad, indeed, did the sun set upon Vindor that night. They had bound him with cords, that he might not do himself injury, perhaps even to the taking away of his own life.

He neither spoke nor stirred. Again and again his friends addressed him, reminding the wretched man that he was a warrior, and that he must live for the sake of that vengeance which it was hoped by the Saxons they would take against the Normans.

But he answered not, nor responded even by a look. His senses appeared to be completely dormant.

At last, his mother, an ageing and wise woman of her kind, took the infant and, placing the little hand upon the father's neck, whispered:

"Son, live for your child's sake."

Then he trembled, and the great downpour of tears saved him from the stony, horrid death which had been slowly creeping over him.

He lived, but lost the love, as he lost the habit, of work, and what little wealth he possessed dwindled away.

Fortunately his two brothers were men of steady industry, and, only one of them being married, the little child Roth was well cared for. Vindor lived only to be revenged.

No man yet who lived only for vengeance but punished himself far more than he did his enemy.

Therein lies the wisdom of forgiveness, which of course does not mean renewed trustfulness. By forgiving your enemy you clear the air for yourself.

"I will never cease to hate Sir Roland until I see him dead!"

This oath Vindor took over his wife's grave as they lowered her poor body to its last resting place.

Sir Roland, when riding past Vindor's house one day had seen him playing with his little child, and said that which had aroused the father's jealousy and had led him to accuse his wife of infidelity.

You know to what these few light words on the part of the Norman knight had led.

The sudden appearance of his wife's brother had more thoroughly convinced Vindor of the error of his mistrust than had even the test of the shield.

A month after the death of his wife he said to his mother, Ulfaa:

"I am going away from London, mother."

"Why, my son?"

"I cannot rest here."

"Go you to the North?"

"Ay, mother."

"To Richmount?"

"Yes, mother."

"That is whither Sir Roland de Bois has gone."

He nodded.

"Take heed, fair son. Thou wilt wear away thy life with the thought of vengeance. Perhaps the Norman meant no harm when speaking as he did."

"But my fair young wife died, good mother."

"That is true. But remember she was a haughty woman. Had she been wiser, she would have laughed at thee, and so cleared away thy jealousy."

"But she is dead!"

"Work for thy child. Do not waste thy life in thoughts of vengeance."

"I must follow Sir Roland de Bois into the North."

"Thou art thine own master, but dost use thy mastership unwisely."

"And wilt thou care for my little Roth while I am away?"

"Most surely. Is he not, dear son, as my own? Is he not my son?"

Next morning Vindor was gone, and never through five years did they once hear from him.

Even his mother Ulfaa had grown to believe him dead.

Little Roth, then nearly 6 years old, had heard of his father, had been told of his life, and often declared that he would be a brave man, like his sire.

Ulfaa and her husband loved the child, as indeed did Gurth and his wife Borsa, who had no children of their own.

Elsay, the youngest child of the old people, petted the boy, and her lover Edwy made his life happier.

One day, as the sun was setting on the other side of the river, Roth being at play near the house door of his former grandfather's house, saw a beggar approaching.

He looked old, and was bent. His long hair streamed over his shoulder, and his tunic was worn and tattered.

His bare legs were tanned by exposure to the sun, and his feet were cut and bruised.

"Will you have some bread and water?" asked the child.

"It is my son!" cried the beggar, falling upon his knees, and embracing the little child.

"Grandam!—grandam!" called the boy. "Father has come home, and he does not move!"

The unhappy man had fainted.

When again he knew himself, he was lying on a soft sheep-skin, spread over a mattress. His cut feet had been bathed, and his family had made him as comfortable as circumstances would permit.

"Mother!—father!" he said, looking about him wildly. "Ha! I am home once more before I die!"

"Die, my son?" said his mother.

"Yes! of remorse!" he replied. "I cannot live. I thank Heaven, which has allowed me to return home before I made an end of life. Above all, I bless Heaven that I can read my son a lesson, and that he is old enough and intelligent enough to comprehend me."

They gathered about him, his brother Gurth playing lightly with the stick which had accompanied Vindor in his wanderings, while his father, his sister Elsay and his youngest brother Edwy drew near.

"Where is my son?" he asked.

His mother, Ulfaa, who had not the courage to look her dying and favorite son in the face, and who was standing behind the bed, made a sign, and Borsa, Gurth's wife, led the bright little fellow forward.

Then thus spoke Vindor: "My son, never seek to be revenged upon your enemy. Leave him to himself. All bad men suffer, and by killing them you will relieve them from their sufferings. But that is not the danger. The desire for revenge kills you yourself. I am dying, first, by reason of my hate toward Sir Roland de Bois; and, in the second place, because my remorse is so great in having killed a good man."

All started.

"What do I hear?" asked his mother. "You have, in your blind vengeance, killed a human being?"

"Ay, mother! Sir Roland had a cousin of the same name, and much like him in appearance—though unlike him in character—for he was a good man. I followed Sir Roland for years, wearing out my life, and, only a month since, in the twilight, I mistook one for the other, and killed one of the few Norman gentlemen who have been kind and just in their dealings with us Saxons."

"Heaven forgive thee!" said Vindor's father.

"And now, my son," continued the victim of his own desire for vengeance, "I am come home to die! Do not forget what I say. Forgive! Do not bear vengeance, and be a good man. Come to me," he added, stretching out his hand.

The child held out his left hand, and approached his father.

"Remember!" he said; and then quietly his head fell back.

He was dead.

In the Great Tunnel.

A Vienna correspondent, writing about the St. Gothard tunnel, says: "Those who went into the tunnel before it was entirely pierced, all tell of their delight in having got out of it again unscathed. It seems that the heat, the bad smell, the mud, and the noise of the machines are simply unbearable. Of the work-people one-third were always on the sick-bed, and great numbers of the horses fell a sacrifice to the difficulties that had to be contended with. A great deal, it is true, still remains to be done, but from the moment the opening was made by dynamite, air began to pass through the tunnel, and although it may not yet be the most healthy place, still it will be supportable. The calculations of the engineers were right to two metres, the length of the tunnel being 14,918 metres instead of 14,920, as they calculated. When the opening was made every one stood awe-struck, and an Italian, Angelo Chiesa, was the first who passed to the other side. The trains will take a little more than half an hour to pass through the tunnel."

LOSS OF THE NARRAGANSETT.

Particulars of the Long Island Sound Calamity.

About midnight of Friday, the 11th of June two large steamers of the Stonington line came in collision in Long Island sound. Both boats were crowded with passengers. Competition had driven the fare between New York and Boston via the sound down to $1. Many persons took advantage of the small fare, and all the boats, since the reduction, have carried large companies. There was a dense fog, which swept in from the sea, and did not lift for two hours after daybreak. Veiled in this fog, the two steamboats, approaching from opposite directions, crashed into one another. The Narragansett left her wharf in New York at the close of the afternoon. The Stonington left her wharf in Stonington several hours later. There was a heavy fog the whole length of the sound when the Stonington started. This same fog overcrept the Narragansett. Both steamers plunged on at a good rate of speed, sounding their fog-whistles and trusting to the accurate hearing of their pilots and masters to find them a safe way. Every half minute the whistles shrieked. The faint sound of the Narragansett's whistle was first heard by the Stonington at a point near the Cornfield lightship, a few miles west of the mouth of the Connecticut river and five miles from the Connecticut shore. The Narragansett's signal said to bear to the left. The Stonington answered with the same signal.

The signals sounded as if there was a good distance east and west between the two boats; but in a moment more the lights of the two vessels shone through the fog, and they were going in the same course in opposite directions. The helm of the Narragansett was thrown sharp about, which brought her broadside to the Stonington. The Stonington plunged on and struck her on the starboard quarter just in front of the wheel. The shock was terrific. It shook the Stonington, which struck point on, in such a way as to throw all her sleeping passengers out of their berths. It ripped open a great hole in her bow, almost down to the water's edge. If the sea had been heavy she must have gone down at the shock. All the Narragansett's lights were instantly extinguished. Passengers found themselves locked in their staterooms in absolute darkness. The side of the boat was ripped open below the water's level, and she filled and sank immediately. A fire also broke forth, and so fiercely that in an hour and a half at farthest all the parts of the vessel remaining above water were destroyed. Fortunately, she sank in shallow water. She must have settled upon some bar, for the water rose only just high enough to submerge the saloon deck. The upper deck would have afforded a safe asylum had it not been for the fire. Many of the passengers on board the Narragansett waited neither for the sinking nor for the fire. In sudden terror they leaped into the sea, and, becoming numbed and exhausted, sank before the arrival of aid. Those who waited were saved. Immediately upon the shock the bulk of the passengers climbed upon the top deck. The boat sank, but it fortunately soon struck bottom, and they were still safe. Then the fire broke forth. It whipped so fiercely to leeward that the boats on that side could not be lowered, but the boats to windward were successfully let into the water, all save one, which was swamped with a considerable company.

The life-rafts were pushed overboard. They proved the salvation of scores. Passengers lashed themselves in life-jackets, and so protected leaped into the water to avoid the fire. Meanwhile assistance was at hand. The steamer City of New York, bound for the metropolis, came up and hailed the Stonington. Life-boats were manned from both boats, and soon the rescued were being lifted aboard the Stonington and the New York by the score.

The panic which followed the collision was terrible. Men, women and children jumped from their beds and rushed, shrieking, from their staterooms and berths—most of them in their night clothes. They filled the darkened saloon and pushed and jostled each other in their frantic efforts to get upon the deck. The officers seem to have lost their heads completely, and, with the exception of the purser, John Kiernan, not one of them, from the accounts of the passengers, seems to have done anything to stop the panic. Lights were finally procured, and the passengers fought for chairs, mattresses, life-preservers, and every article which would possibly aid to float them. These were heroic men in that struggling mass of terrified human beings, and there were, too, cowardly creatures, who took advantage of the weakness of women and children to save their own worthless lives.

In the confusion and terror of the moment husbands were separated from wives, and children from parents, and all fought but for one object—to grasp the life which was flitting from them. Some, weaker than the others, fainted; some prayed, while all shrieked wildly for aid.

In the midst of the tumult the Narragansett was discovered to be on fire. The bow of the Stonington had penetrated the boiler of the other boat, the burning coals of the furnace had been scattered on the oiled woodwork of the steamer, and now to the fear of death by drowning were added the horrors of a death by burning. This increased the panic, and a rush was made for the boats; but there were no officers at their posts to stop them, and the passengers cut them adrift and piled into them like sheep.

The first to reach the water was overcrowded, and it was swamped, but the others were put adrift with their precious cargoes. The steamer was settling, the heat from the fire was growing too severe to be borne, and men, women, and children plunged into the dark waters with chairs, mattresses, planks, and whatever they could lay their hands on. One mother had left her babes in her stateroom, and the fire and smoke fought her back as she attempted to rescue them, so that she was obliged to leave them to perish in the flames. Another jumped with her babe into the water, already filled with struggling men and women, and the little one was wrenched from her grasp and sucked beneath the waters.

The incidents of that terrible night are full of suffering and agony to scores of human beings. While these terrible scenes were being enacted on the Narragansett, the officers of the Stonington seemed to have lost their heads completely. The passengers, after being assured of their own safety—the fear of which had for a time filled them with horror—urged the officers to send boats to rescue the drowning passengers of the Narragansett. After a long delay the boats were lowered, and then it was found there were no plugs to stop the water-holes. To supply these created another delay, and all the time the cries for help were ringing on the night air. The boats were finally rigged and manned, but the men knew nothing of handling the oars, and the result was confusion and much loss of invaluable time. Once at work, however, the boats of the Stonington did well and rescued many of the drowning men and women. The men worked with a will, which made up in some degree for the lack of discipline. But other and more effective aid was at hand. Capt. Lanphear, of the City of New York, sighted the steamer, and bore down upon the disabled vessel. The boats of the City of New York were soon in the water, officered and manned by sailors who understood their work and did it heartily. For an hour and a half the boats floated around among the drowning passengers, whose struggles in the water were made visible by the light of the burning steamer, and the work of rescue was not given up so long as a head was to be seen or a cry for help heard. Women were pulled into the boats by the hair of their heads when they were just ready to give up the battle, and men who thought themselves strong fell down apparently lifeless on the decks of the Stonington and City of New York after being rescued.

Several persons who were taken on board the Stonington died from sheer exhaustion and fright after having battled in the water for nearly two hours.

The Narragansett was burned to the water's edge, and then the hull, with her entire cargo, sank in eight fathoms of water. No accurate list of her passengers was kept, and many who sailed in her are not now known. It is therefore impossible to estimate the exact loss of life.

At this writing no estimate of the loss of life approximating correctness can be made. The officials of the steamboat company are apparently bent upon suppressing the real facts as long as possible. The number of people burned or drowned is variously placed at from fifty to one hundred and fifty.

From all accounts of the disaster, it appears that there was a total lack of the appliances and the discipline which are supposed to be available on shipboard for the saving of human life in such circumstances—no officer to take in charge the business of rescuing the terrified passengers, no crew trained to lower, man, and work the life-boats.

The steamer Narragansett cost $330,000 in 1868. She was repaired last autumn at an expense of $30,000, and was in excellent condition. New boilers were put in about a year ago. Her value to the company at the time of her loss was not less than $300,000. She was insured against fire for $100,000, and there was marine insurance upon her for $30,000.

DESTRUCTIVE CYCLONE.

Twenty People Killed by a Tornado in Pottawattamie County, Iowa.

A wind-storm of unusual violence passed over a section of Pottawattamie county, Iowa, about thirty miles east of Council Bluffs, on the evening of June 10. We glean the following particulars from the telegraphic reports of the calamity: Persons living in the vicinity where the storm raged say it was first observed to assume an ugly and threatening form by citizens in the town of Macedonia, a small village in Macedonia township. The funnel, which is ample warning of coming danger, was seen to form about two miles to the west of Macedonia. Angry clouds rolled and tumbled, and passed in and out of each other, as if engaged in deadly combat. It is said that every person who beheld the final mobilization of the fierce and angry elements felt a keen realization of the near approach of eternity, but moments for reflection were very brief. In the twinkle of an eye, almost, the storm was upon them, and those that had not taken shelter in cellars and "dug-outs" stood in the broad road to death, and those who were saved feel that it was by special act of Providence. Buildings were either blown down or unroofed, while outhouses and small buildings were lifted bodily from their foundations and carried away entirely from the premises. A large number of small shanties, used for boarding and sleeping men who worked upon a railroad being built, were blown into splinters, not enough being left out of them to make respectable kindling-wood. Storehouses were leveled to the ground and their contents scattered to the winds of heaven. A number of two-wheeled scrapers used upon the railroad, weighing hundreds of pounds, were taken up as if but feathers and wafted away on ungentle zephyrs. Tires to wheels from three to four inches wide were twisted and rolled into knots as one would bend straw around his finger. Horses and cattle were taken up and carried away and dropped to the ground dead. One horse was carried forty rods, and when found its body was a perfect jelly. But little personal injury was done at this place, as people saw the storm coming and protected themselves by retreating to cellars and other underground places of safety. Land here is high prairie ground, and the people could see the storm from afar and use precaution for personal safety. But the storm continued to sweep forward in a northeasterly direction, and from Macedonia forward it was most destructive in its course; dead bodies, and demolished dwellings plainly marking its line of travel. Farm houses were in most cases totally destroyed, and farm machinery of all kinds broken into small fragments. About seven miles from Macedonia, on what is known as the "Osler settlement," great damage to human life was done. The house of Alex Osler was first reached by twisting wind clouds, and it fell before them and in the midst of them an easy, if not willing, prey. In this house were Mr. Osler, his wife and three children, and niece, two farm hands and a servant girl. They all died together. The storm swept them away in an instant. They probably perished amid the ruins of the wrecked dwelling, which was a large two-story frame. Not one was left to tell the story of their hasty destruction. One child, however, has not been found, and it either lies buried beneath the ruins or was borne away on the swift wings of the fatal cloud. Jesse Osler, brother to Alex, and who resides near by, suffered instant death, as did also his wife and two small children. William Osler, brother to the other two, escaped death but his wife and child were blown into the air fully 150 feet. The child is probably fatally injured. Other cases of death are reported, but details are not given. Twenty persons are known to have been killed in the Osler neighborhood, which is in Grove township, and six or eight persons are missing, and it is supposed their bodies will be found somewhere in the vicinity where they were last seen.

Bringing a Dead Man to Life.

A young officer of the English line, while passing through a native village, was annoyed by the importunity of a Hindoo beggar, whom no rebuff seemed to disconcert.

At length, when the filthy vagrant seconded his petition by laying his grimy hand upon the Englishman's arm, the latter, foolishly giving way to anger, repaid the freedom with a straightforward blow from the shoulder, delivered with such hearty good-will that the poor Hindoo fell like a log, to all appearance dead.

Before the assailant could recover from his bewilderment at this unlooked-for catastrophe, a howling swarm of natives came rushing to the spot, and with frantic cries for vengeance upon the murderer of their countryman, dragged him off to the local magistrate, carrying with them as evidence the body of the slain man.

Matters might well look gloomy for the prisoner, for the body showed not the slightest sign of life, while the culprit himself, overwhelmed with horror at the fatal consequences of his momentary passion, faltered and trembled in a way that would have made any ordinary judge convicted him on the spot.

But, happily for him, the magistrate was a veteran, whom no contretemps, however unexpected, could find unprepared.

He heard the story to an end without a word of comment, and then quietly remarked that before passing sentence, he wished to be quite certain that the man was really dead. The Hindoos broke in with a terrible outcry at the idea of the sacred remains being touched by an unbeliever.

"Oh, I don't need to touch him," quoted the judge, coolly; "I have a surer way than that."

Without appearing to notice the look of uneasiness that began to cloud the surrounding faces, he drew forth a stick of sealing-wax, lighted it, and let fall the burning drops upon the bare breast of the corpse.

Instantly the murdered man started up with an ear-piercing yell, and tossing his arms frantically, rushed out and plunged headlong into the river, while his inconsolable mourners vanished almost as quickly in the opposite direction.

Texas Cattle.

The number of these seems to be increasing astonishingly, as we may judge from an article in the San Antonio Express. It says the drive into the bordering States this year was not less than 300,000. The largest percentage of these were 1 and 2-year-old past steers, which are already contracted for in advance, at good prices, with the more Northern ranch-men. The animals are said to be in extra-fine condition, and the drive began much earlier this spring than usual, as the mild past winter has been extra favorable for the growth of pasturage. Yearling steers commanded $6 on the average; 2-year-olds and cows, $9; 3-year-olds, $10; beeves, $13. The average worth when market is reached, is estimated at $11 per head, making $3,300,000 for the lot—a goodly round sum for the Texas ranch-men to realize in a single year for their cattle.

GARFIELD.

The Public Career of a Machine Partisan.

His Connection with Boss Shepherd's District Ring.

His Responsibility for the Back-Pay Steal.

Some Highly Interesting Reading.

The New York Sun, of May 8, 1880—exactly one month before Garfield's nomination—contained the following article:

CREDIT MOBILIER AND DE GOLYER.

James A. Garfield is now serving his ninth consecutive term as a member of the House of Representatives. At the end of his term he will succeed Mr. Thurman in the Senate, as night succeeds day. Gifted with fine natural parts, possessed of some literary ability, given to study, popular in manners, and with a pleasing style of speech, few men have begun public life with such advantages. No public man has sacrificed his opportunities more unworthily.

Mr. Garfield entered the army in 1861 as a Colonel of volunteers, and left it a Major General in 1863, with a record which, though not shining, was quite creditable. The Republicans of the Western Reserve, who had sent Joshua R. Giddings to Congress until he became recognized as the father of the House, took up Garfield on his return from the war, at 32 years of age, and have clung to him since then, despite the most damning proofs of his venality and jobbery in legislation. Fidelity to party in its fierce and intolerant spirit seems, like the mantle of charity, to have covered a multitude of sins in his case.

Thrown into the midst of the reckless legislation for which the calamity of civil war furnished an opportunity, he soon developed the traits of character which have more recently made his name notorious throughout the country. He became the advocate and apologist of the huge land grants and subsidies by which millions of acres of the public domain and tens of millions of money were voted to great corporations and rings. That may be called the beginning of the organized corruption which flourished during Grant's two terms. Garfield voted for almost every job, and for almost every iniquitous scheme of the lobby that then controlled the leading committees.

The construction of the Union Pacific railroad furnished the opportunity for a gigantic fraud. Congress voted money and land enough to build it without any considerable issue of bonds or stock by the company. The Directors were forbidden by law from engaging in contracts or holding other interests of profit. Therefore they could not become beneficiaries by the abuse of their trust until that obstacle was overcome. They soon found a way to do it. A company known as the Credit Mobilier, organized upon the French plan, had procured a charter from Pennsylvania, which proved to be a failure in its hands. This charter was purchased. A ring of officers and Directors of the Union Pacific road obtained absolute control of its affairs. They contracted with themselves under another name for the construction at exorbitant prices. They swindled the United States, the bondholders and the stockholders for the benefit of their own close corporation.

In 1867, Oakes Ames, James B. Alley and others, known as the "Boston party," got possession of the Union Pacific and the Credit Mobilier. At that time Ames was a member of Congress, and a manufacturer of reputed wealth. The great contracts passed into his hands, and the dividends of the Credit Mobilier had already attracted attention. Elihu B. Washburne introduced a resolution in the House which alarmed the jobbers for their immense profits. Colfax, then Speaker, and one of the creatures of the ring, silenced this movement for a time by parliamentary tricks.

Still, the Credit Mobilier monopolists were uneasy, and proposed to buy off opposition. In January, 1868, Ames wrote to McComb, who afterward started the investigation from motives of revenge, "I have assigned as far as I have gone" (certain shares to different States); "the 80 per cent. increase I want for distribution here, and soon." A few days after, he was still more urgent. He wrote again: "In view of Washburne's move here, I go in for making our bond dividend in full. I want that $14,000 increase of the Credit Mobilier to sell here. We want more friends in this Congress." As he himself said, the object was to put the stock "where it would do the most good." The stock was then selling at $350 a share on a par value of $100. It was issued in blocks of thirty, twenty and ten shares to members of Congress at par, and the so-called purchase was more than extinguished by the accrued dividends. It was a nice stock to hold.

The first disclosure of the corruption was made in the Sun during the summer of 1872, implicating many of the Republican leaders. A Presidential election was then pending, and they all vehemently denied any connection with the fraud. Garfield's statement was more explicit and bolder than that of any of his confederates in the crime. An investigation was ordered by the House soon after the meeting of Congress; the examination of witnesses began on Dec. 12, 1872. At first Oakes Ames was disinclined to make any exposure; but when the incriminated members combined to swear him down and to free themselves by rank perjury, his blood warmed quickly, and he determined to let the truth be known, though in the end there was much concealed.

Garfield submitted to the committee a prepared statement on Jan. 14, 1873:

> I never owned, received, or agreed to receive any stock of the Credit Mobilier or of the Union Pacific railroad, nor any dividends or profits arising from either of them.

Ames was recalled Jan. 23, 1872, and testified to the stock he had issued to Garfield, the dividends allowed him, and the balance of money paid into his hand, which Garfield pretended was a "loan." He submitted a memorandum of the account in detail. It came to the knowledge of the committee that Garfield had visited Ames with the object of inducing him to retract or modify his testimony, and he was re-examined on the 29th of January, as follows:

Q. You may state whether, in conversation with you, Mr. Garfield claims, as he claimed before us, that the only transaction between you was borrowing $300? A. No, sir, he did not claim that with me.

Q. State all you know in reference to it. A. I told him he knew very well that that was a dividend. I made out a statement and showed it to him at the time. In our conversation he admitted it, and said there was $2,400 due him in stocks and bonds. He made a little memorandum of $1,000 and $1,400, and said there was $1,000 of Union Pacific railroad stock, $1,000 of Credit Mobilier stock, and $400 of stock or bonds.

Q. When was that memorandum made? A. It was made in my room. I cannot remember the date. It was since this investigation commenced.

Q. Have you the memorandum that Mr. Garfield made? A. I have the figures that he made. [Paper shown in Garfield's handwriting.]

Q. You say these figures were made by Mr. Garfield? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was his idea of what was coming to him? A. Yes, sir.

Garfield sought to tamper with and suborn Ames, and the attempt ended in his claiming a larger share in Credit Mobilier than had been allowed to him, after having solemnly sworn a fortnight previously that he "never owned, received or agreed to receive any stock of the Credit Mobilier nor any dividend or profit arising" therefrom. The climax was capped when Ames produced his diary with the original entry against Garfield, dated Tuesday, Sept. 19, 1868, setting forth his account for ten shares of Credit Mobilier.

These terrible revelations were allowed to pass unnoticed. Garfield did not dare to go before the committee and confront Ames, because he knew there were still other proofs in reserve. He waited until Ames was in his grave, and then, with Schuyler Colfax and others who had been bribed, he attempted to whitewash the infamy.

But, passing from that period to more recent times, let us examine his record after he became Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and, as one of his purchasers said, "held the purse strings of the nation." The forty-second Congress, in which the Republicans had large majorities in both houses, has gone into history as memorable for scandalous legislation. Among many disgraceful acts was that authorising the infamous Sanborn contracts, by which informers and spies were enabled to seize the books of merchants, and, by connivance, to blackmail them, and at the same time to plunder the treasury of immense sums. That law was the result of a corrupt combination between certain members of Congress, certain treasury officials, and one Sanborn, with one Jayne as the master workman. Some idea of the magnitude of their operations may be formed from the fact that Sanborn drew from the treasury nearly $175,000 for three months' service.

But for Garfield's direct complicity, that infamy would never have disfigured the statute book. The job was done in this way: Sawyer, then carpet-bag Senator from the South, afterward Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and a confederate of Sanborn's ring, introduced an amendment to the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial bill, authorising the contracts to be made. It was a "rider" and not in any way germane to the bill. But the Republicans then had the chronic habit of mounting their very worst legislation as riders on the regular supply bills. The bill, thus amended, was reported to the House April 8, 1872, and the job was badly beaten.

Then came the fine hand of trickery to play its part. Mr. Garfield, instead of allowing the bill to go back to the Senate, where the action of the House might be concurred in, moved directly for a committee of conference, so as to let six men legislate coercively for 300, with himself as Chairman of the House side. Of course the job was put back on the bill, and it passed the Senate where it had originated. But the House stood firm, and again, by a majority of one, refused its assent on a call of the yeas and nays. Twice defeated, the bill was recommitted to the same conference, and when reported the job had a long tail of verbiage, attached to deceive some and to operate as an excuse for others whose prejudices had meanwhile been conquered. Mr. Garfield then applied the previous question, and then drove the bill through by ten majority. Addition, division, and silence won the day.

Gen. Garfield is mainly responsible for the passage of the salary grab and back-pay steal the history of which may be briefly recited. Gen. Butler reported a bill from the Judiciary Committee, Feb. 7, 1873, to double the pay of the President, and increase the salaries of the Vice President, Cabinet, Speaker, Justices of the Supreme Court and members of Congress. The scheme had been thoroughly canvassed, and waited a favorable chance to be launched. Three days later Gen. Butler moved to suspend the rules, so as to attach this bill as a "rider" to the Miscellaneous Appropriation bill then pending. It was beaten by thirty-nine majority, which included some of the strongest friends of the proposed plunder, who voted that way for effect. The first fire was thus drawn, and Butler knew where to plant his batteries.

The Legislative Appropriation bill came back to the House, February 24, loaded with one hundred amendments. The natural course was to have had them printed, so that members might examine the new items. But there was a game to play, and Garfield took the lead. By virtue of his Chairmanship, he moved that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole on the special order. Suspicion had been awakened and adjournments had been voted down previously. Dawes was put in the chair, and the door was opened for the grab. Garfield had assured members that the bill would not be called up that night, and the House was thin except on the stealing side, which was in the secret of Garfield's treachery. A special vote was demanded on the Butler amendment, now moved as a "rider" to the pending bill. It was defeated by fifty-two majority, Butler himself voting against it. But he immediately moved to reconsider and to adjourn. Nothing was now wanting to rivet the vote but to refuse to adjourn, and then to clinch it by refusing to reconsider. The issue was clear, but right in the face of the large majority just recorded the House adjourned by a still-larger majority, leaving the reconsideration alive and kicking. The next day Butler's motion to reconsider was first in order, and when Farnsworth moved to lay it on the table and finish the business a majority of thirty-nine answered in the negative.

The next vote fixed the Congressional pay, and the bill, with this graft, was sent to the Senate, and thence to a committee of conference. On the last day of the session Garfield reported the bill back, doubling the President's salary from the 4th of March, instead of the end of the fiscal year, and raising the pay of Congress from $5,000 to $7,500, retroactively for two years, with a long catalogue of augmented salaries for public officers. He pretended that there was danger of an extra session unless the report was adopted and told the House, "It may be an unwise expenditure in some respects, but in most cases the increase is proper and ought to be made." It was finally driven through by a majority of six.

Garfield's connection with the Washington ring is also well known to the country. One of the most notorious of the corrupt contracts made by Boss Shepherd was that awarded to De Golyer & McClellan, of Chicago, for laying a wood pavement. The contract covered 200,000 yards, at $3.50 a yard, which the superintendent of contractors swore could be put down at $1.50, every item of cost included. So there was a clean profit of $400,000 to be divided. To further this job, which was preliminary to others to follow, the sum of $97,000 was expended. It was given out in the spring of 1872. At that time Richard C. Parsons was Marshal of the Supreme Court, and had converted that office into a headquarters for the lobby. He was known to be an intimate friend of Garfield, and the ring wanted Garfield's aid as Chairman of the Appropriations.

The agent of the contractors employed Parsons, with a fee of $15,000, as "counsel," although there was no cause to argue, no contest of any kind, and no tribunal to appear before. It was a sham to throw dust in the eyes of the public. Parsons paid Garfield $5,000 as his share, July 12, 1872, for which he was forced to admit before the last investigation that he made no argument, oral or written, had never appeared before the Board of Public Works, and had only once spoken to Boss Shepherd on the subject. That "fee" was a bribe out and out, and nothing else, as was subsequently shown. Garfield became the agent of the ring, and through his influence and activity $3,500,000 were voted to Boss Shepherd and his confederates in less than sixty days, between the 8th of January and the 3d of March, 1873.

It would be easy to continue this discreditable record, and to show that in almost every instance of venal legislation Garfield's name is to be found on the side of jobbery, stealing and fraud. These facts cannot be disputed, and they will stand to his dishonesty, whether he remains in public life or goes into enforced exile.

INDIANA DEMOCRATS.

The State Convention—A Harmonious and Enthusiastic Body—Hendricks for President, and Landers for Governor.

The Democratic State Convention of Indiana met at Indianapolis June 9. The hall, with a seating capacity of 3,000, was fully occupied. Nearly an hour was consumed in locating the delegates and visitors. The convention was called to order by Col. R. C. Shaw, Chairman of the Central Committee. Hon. Francis D. Hart, of Bartholomew county, was chosen temporary Chairman, and John W. Kerns, of Howard county, temporary Secretary. The Congressional districts were then called, and Committees on Credentials and Permanent Organization were selected. The Committee on Permanent Organization reported for permanent Chairman, ex-Gov. Thomas A. Hendricks, and John W. Kerns for permanent Secretary. The nomination of Gov. Hendricks was received with the utmost enthusiasm, the members of the convention cheering for several minutes, many delegates rising to their feet and swinging their hats. He spoke as follows:

> I know that victory will sit upon our banner. They nominated a candidate at Chicago yesterday. I should say a ticket, for it wouldn't be right to omit the last of that ticket. I take it that the ticket represents fairly the average strength of the Republican party. In every respect I think it so, and you and I, brother Democrats, don't lean upon the weakness of the ticket nominated yesterday. We lean upon the strength of indomitable Democracy. Some sad things took place at Chicago. I know you think I am referring to the many truths that they told upon one another—that was it. Yesterday the Republican party laid away forever the grim-visaged warrior and the plumed knight together. To-day they lie in the obscurity of defeat. The Republican party have said to the nation—of the world—that did Gen. Grant uncommon honor—that he is no longer worthy of sitting at the head of national affairs, and it was no uncommon thing when the statement was made to mankind that Gen. Grant was no longer worthy of support in the National Republican Convention. I have heard Democrats for the last two or three weeks inquiring who is the weakest man at Chicago. I care not for that. I repeat it, I care not for that. At the last election, when Tilden and Hendricks were elected, there was a majority on the Democratic side of the white voters of the United States of 1,000,000 men, and of whites and blacks together there was a majority of more than 250,000. Now, when we meet in Cincinnati to respond to Chicago, we meet with the assurance upon our side that we have this strength, this power, this sentiment of the American people, upon our side. I take it for granted that the great convention on the 22d of this month, representing the Democracy of this nation, will so organize our party that success shall continue with the contest in November.

Allusions to the election of Tilden and Hendricks in 1876 called forth the most furious demonstrations.

The contest between Landers and Gray, for Governor, was close but weak. On the first ballot Gray had 510½ votes, Landers 514½, and Downey 42. On the second ballot Henry county deserted Gray for Landers. Break followed break until before the roll was completed both Gray and Downey withdrew their names, and Landers was nominated by acclamation. He made a brief speech, and when calls were made for Gray he came forward. Before he had time to open his mouth a resolution was passed like a whirlwind nominating him for Lieutenant Governor, which he accepted. So the ticket is Landers and Gray.

After the excitement was over, and this incident passed, Judge John T. Scott, of Terre Haute, the present incumbent, was nominated for Supreme Judge of the Third district, and James Mitchell, of Goshen, for the Fifth district, to succeed Biddle. Manson, Shanklin and Fleming were renominated by acclamation for Auditor, Secretary and Treasurer, respectively. Gabriel Schunck, A. E. Martin, of Wells, and Thomas W. Woollen were nominated for Clerk of the Supreme Court, Reporter and Attorney General, respectively, and, on the second ballot, A. G. Goodwin, Superintendent of Schools of Clarke county, was nominated for Superintendent of Public Instruction, defeating J. H. Smart, of Allen, the present incumbent.

The convention was very large, very orderly, and transacted its business in the most creditable manner.

When Lieutenant Governor Gray said he was completely astonished at being given the second place on the ticket when he was a candidate for the first, Gov. Hendricks interpolated, "I can appreciate your position." At this sally the whole convention laughed uproariously.

The following platform was adopted unanimously:

1. We, the Democracy of Indiana, in delegate convention assembled, congratulate the Democracy of the country upon the harmony prevailing within its organization and upon its unanimity in its purpose to cast behind it every occasion and sentiment and discord and stand as a man for success in 1880; and we give assurance to the Democrats of the country that, accepting the declaration of principles and purpose that may be made at Cincinnati and the candidates who may there be chosen, we will give them an earnest and individual support.

2. We believe that laws should be enacted, executed and administered only for the public good, and all class legislation and all favoritism in the affairs of government should be defeated and made odious; that taxes should be levied justly, and the most rigid economy should control public expenditures; that the elections must be free from the control of army and party officials, so that they shall be fair and honest as they once were; that the rightful jurisdiction of the State courts must be restored in all cases where it has been usurped by the Federal authority, so that justice may be administered cheaply and speedily.

3. The coin and paper money of the country should be of uniform value and readily convertible, and should have as great purchasing power as the money of other first-class commercial countries of the world, and the paper money, like the coin, should be furnished by the United States, and should not be in excess of such quantity as will always remain at par with coin. Inasmuch as the outstanding treasury notes are no longer necessary to the Government in the use of its credit, and are useful only as money, they should be made subject to taxation the same as other money. As tax-payers, we declare our gratification at the action of the Democratic members of Congress in reducing public expenditures and in cutting off the allowance and payment of questionable and fraudulent claims, resulting in a saving to the treasury of more than $100,000,000.

4. We will stand with all our might against the aggression of the Republican leaders upon the rights of States, made for the purpose of building up a strong central power, dangerous to the liberty of the people. We will in all fidelity maintain the constitutional rights and powers of the United States, and as faithfully we will maintain and vindicate the rights of States as reserved by them in the constitution.

6. The Legislature of 1879 is entitled to honorable mention for having redeemed the pledges of the Democratic Convention of 1876, to provide by law for the comfort and safety of laborers in the mines, and securing their wages to the persons employed by corporations, and we are in favor of such legislation in the premises as may be necessary and proper. We congratulate the people of the State that by the action of the Democrats of the last Legislature, basing representation on population and contiguity of territory only, the shame and taint of fraud have been removed from the apportionment of representation, and that now the people will be equally and fairly represented.

7. The people of Indiana are justly proud of their system of free schools, and will maintain their full force and usefulness, and, to that end, we must see to it that the management thereof does not become wasteful or extravagant, and that no part of the munificent fund which they have provided shall be used for sectarian or any other purpose whatever than the support of common schools.

8. We are gratified that the Democrats in Congress have acted in respect to bounties and pensions for soldiers and their families in the spirit of justice and liberality.

9. We hold up to public detestation the conduct of the Republican party in placing Hayes and Wheeler, by criminal practices shocking to every honest sentiment and damaging to our institutions, in the offices to which they were not elected. It was an outrage upon free government and a crime against the elective franchise that cannot be forgiven and must not be repeated, and for which the guilty party must be driven from power and consigned to infamy; and we hold up to the public detestation the conduct of the President in rewarding the guilty parties by conferring upon them high and lucrative offices. To reward crime is itself criminal.

10. During the past few years our country has been blessed in a high degree with favorable seasons, and the production of our valuable staples has been enormously in excess of our own consumption. We have sold in foreign countries many hundred millions more than we have purchased from them. Gold and silver have come to us; business confidence has been restored, and we have the hope and promise of good times again. In all this we recognize the blessings of God upon our country; and we denounce it as false and blasphemous when partisan leaders claim that this is the work of their hands, and that the people shall be thankful to them, and not grateful to Heaven for our returning prosperity.

11. We approve the sentiment expressed by Gov. Hendricks in his letter of acceptance in 1876, that the iniquitous coolie system, which, through the agency of wealthy companies, imports Chinese bondsmen, establishing a species of slavery and interference with the just reward of labor on our Pacific coast, should be utterly abolished.

12. Our State administration is entitled to the respect and support of the people. The Government of Indiana is efficiently administered, and more cheaply than that of any other State.

13. That we recognize the rights of colored citizens as well as whites, who immigrate into Indiana; but we condemn and denounce the action of the Republican party in importing into this State pauper negroes for the sole purpose of using them as voters.

14. We hereby instruct our delegates in the National Convention at Cincinnati to present to that body the name of Thomas A. Hendricks as a candidate for President of the United States—one who has at all times faithfully maintained the cause of Democratic truth and justice acceptably to the Democracy of the whole Union, thus securing the election of a Democratic Legislature and a United States Senator in 1881, and a just, pure and constitutional administration of the General Government.

15. We favor the continuance of the two-third rule in the National Convention, and the delegates this day chosen are hereby instructed to vote for the Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks as our candidate for the Presidency, and to vote as a unit on all questions in said convention.

A Baltimore paper suggests that, inasmuch as the sight of a horse-car invites all pedestrians to tremendous exertions, it might be a good plan to utilize the vehicle in walking matches, infusing new life into the contestants now and then by bringing a car into sight at the other end of the track.

ILLINOIS DEMOCRACY.

The State Convention at Springfield—Trumbull for Governor, and Parsons for Lieutenant Governor.

The Democratic State Convention of Illinois met in Representative Hall, at Springfield, on the morning of June 10, and, before the close of the day, had completed the work which had called them together, and the majority of the delegates were on their way home.

The convention was one of the largest, most harmonious, best natured, and most enthusiastic political delegate gatherings ever assembled in the State of Illinois.

The convention was called to order by Hon. T. W. McNeiley, Chairman State Central Committee, who, after the call had been read, nominated Hon. Samuel S. Marshall, of Hamilton, for temporary Chairman. Marshall was unanimously elected, and made a brief speech.

Hon. Lyman Trumbull, who had just entered the hall, was loudly called for, and responded.

Hans Haerting, of Cook county, was chosen temporary Secretary, with several assistants.

Committees on Credentials, Permanent Organization and Resolutions were then appointed, and a recess taken till 2 o'clock.

When the convention reassembled, the Committee on Credentials reported all the delegations fully represented and no contests.

The Committee on Permanent Organization recommended making the temporary organization permanent, with a Vice President and Secretary from each district.

The adopted roll was then called, and the District Conventions reported the following delegates to Cincinnati:

First District—Henry F. Sheridan, John R. Hoxie.

Second District—Carter H. Harrison, Patrick Howard.

Third District—Perry H. Smith, Franklin L. Chase.

Fourth District—A. M. Herrington, Joseph Glidden.

Fifth District—J. M. Potter, J. M. Stow.

Sixth District—Chas. Dunham, B. T. Buford.

Seventh District—William Reddick, Andrew Welch.

Eighth District—Geo. C. Harrington, Geo. V. Huling.

Ninth District—L. W. Ross, L. W. James.

Tenth District—J. H. Stewart, S. B. Montgomery.

Eleventh District—Walter E. Carlin, Scott Wike.

Twelfth District—H. M. Vandeveer, William H. Barnes.

Thirteenth District—Luther, Dearborn, Benj. Howard.

Fourteenth District—Wm. A. Day, James W. Craig.

Fifteenth District—Wm. M. Garrard, S. L. Whitehead.

Sixteenth District—Jacob Fouck, W. S. Foreman.

Seventeenth District—Geo. A. Bayle, Seymour F. Wiles.

Eighteenth District—Wm. H. Green, Wm. K. Murphy.

Nineteenth District—J. M. Crebs, G. B. Hobbit.

The committee appointed for that purpose named Melville W. Fuller, of Cook; Samuel S. Marshall, of Hamilton; John O. McClernand, of Sangamon, and W. T. Dowdall, of Peoria, as delegates-at-large, which was adopted.

W. C. Goudy, of Cook, offered a resolution eulogistic of Horatio Seymour, and instructing the Illinois delegation to Cincinnati to support him for President. The mention of Seymour's name was greeted with great applause and three cheers. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

After these committees reported, nominations for State officers were taken up. Mr. Harland, of Clark, offered a resolution declaring that the convention nominate by acclamation Lyman Trumbull for Governor, James C. Robinson for Lieutenant Governor, and Gen. J. C. Black for Secretary of State, Gustavus Koerner for Auditor, Samuel G. Marshall for Treasurer, and John M. Palmer for Attorney General.

This occasioned great confusion. Harland insisted on his resolution, but it was finally ruled out of order amid great uproar.

Harland then nominated Lyman Trumbull, of Chicago, for Governor.

Trumbull declined, and nominated Gen. Lewis B. Parsons. Several delegates insisted upon Trumbull accepting, as did Parsons himself, and Trumbull was finally nominated by acclamation, and the State ticket was composed as follows: Lieutenant Governor, Lewis B. Parsons, of Clay; Secretary of State, John H. Oberly, of Sangamon; Auditor, Louis Starkel, of St. Clair; Treasurer, Thomas Butterworth, of Winnebago; Attorney General, Lawrence Harmon, of Peoria.

The following is the platform adopted:

Patriotic duty and interest demand peace and reconciliation through all the land, and we pledge ourselves to the following principles:

1. No tariff for protection.
2. No third term.
3. A substantial reform of the civil service, so that Federal officers shall be the servants of the people, and not of a party.
4. Equal rights to all the States, and no Federal interference with the constitutional functions of States.
5. A constitutional currency of gold and silver, and of paper convertible into coin.
6. No more land grants to monopolies.
7. The will of the people must be supreme, and majorities must rule under the constitutional methods. No more such frauds as that of 1876; no more schemes like that of eight to seven.
8. That laws shall be enacted to protect laborers in the more prompt and certain collection of their wages.

The following were selected as electors from districts: William C. Seipp, W. J. Hynes, F. A. Hoffman, Jr., T. B. Coulter, Patrick Stone, J. S. Eckles, B. E. Daily, Lewis F. Feilitzsh, J. W. Butler, George Huhn, W. G. Ewing, L. F. Hamilton, A. M. Miller, W. M. Bandy, Robert McKinley, John Wescott, J. M. Gill, M. C. Crawford, E. D. Youngblood.

At Large—William J. Allen, of Jackson; James S. Ewing, of Adams.

The following is the State Central Committee:

First District—Richard Pendergast.

Second District—M. B. Bailey.

Third District—C. E. Crofts.

Fourth District—H. B. Enoch.

Fifth District—W. O. Wright.

Sixth District—A. K. Truesdale.

Seventh District—James R. Walsh.

Ninth District—A. M. Brown.

Tenth District—Charles H. Whittaker.

Eleventh District—J. M. Bush.

Twelfth District—T. W. McNeeley.

Thirteenth District—J. A. Mallory.

Fourteenth District—E. A. Barringer.

Fifteenth District—W. A. Cochrane.

Sixteenth District—Samuel L. Dwight.

Seventeenth District—G. R. Gilham.

Eighteenth District—Thomas F. Bouton.

Nineteenth District—M. M. Pool.

At Large—T. E. Courtney, R. W. Alexander, Wm. G. Ewing, A. Orendorff, C. D. Holles, J. M. Darnell, J. O. Campbell, and W. J. Mize.

A resolution was adopted instructing the delegates to Cincinnati to favor the two-thirds rule.

Mr. Goudy, of Chicago, then precipitated a lively contest by offering a resolution instructing the delegation to vote as a unit at Cincinnati. After modifying this to apply only to President and Vice President, the Seymour men succeeded in suspending the rules and passing the resolution by 334 to 283.

Speeches were then made by Lyman Trumbull and Gen. Parsons, accepting the nominations, and by Carter H. Harrison. Judge Trumbull's speech was one of the happiest efforts of his life, and we regret that we have not room for a full report of it. He said he had been honored repeatedly by this people, but he had passed the meridian of life. He had made mistakes, perhaps, but had acted wholly, as he believed, for his country's good. Now he had hoped for quiet. That wish he must forego. The two parties confronting each other now were, to his view, like the Whig and Federal parties of old. Their positions and their views were relatively like those occupied and held by those parties. The Republican party was in favor of a strong and a splendid and an expensive Government. That party passed laws favoring one class as against another. These things were undemocratic and the opposite of those held by the Democratic party. The Democratic party believes in the constitutional currency of the country, gold and silver, as expressed in the constitution itself. It was to prevent the gradual centering of power in the Government that he had taken an interest in the present canvass, but without any thought of looking for aught higher. They had, nevertheless, seen fit to urge this place upon him. He accepted it at a personal sacrifice to himself. For himself, he felt it would have been better had they selected some younger man; yet he felt he had no right to set up his individual wishes and opinions against the wishes of those who desired his aid. There were times when, even though a man knows he is going to destruction, he must advance with resolute eye to the cannon's mouth. "What is left of me and what I am is at your service."

Three cheers were given for Trumbull as he retired.

INDIANA NEWS.

It is a settled fact that Fort Wayne is to have a Government building costing $100,000.

One party at Indianapolis has purchased 200,000 1-cent stamps within the past two weeks.

Alfred Lee, living near Kokomo, owns a well-developed calf that weighs only four pounds.

It is said that there are at least seven new railroads projected at present through Northern Indiana.

A wild animal of immense size, new to that region, is creating great excitement in the vicinity of Vincennes.

Mrs. James Logan, of New Albany, was very seriously hurt by being bitten upon the breasts by a vicious horse, owned by Jacob Kusler, while passing in front of the animal.

The Government office at Indianapolis has received a photo-lithograph of the statement of a census taken in Indiana when it was a Territory, and when it comprised but thirteen counties.

The dinner pails of workmen at Kilgan's pork-house, at Indianapolis, were dosed with croton oil by some scoundrel. Four of the men were made seriously sick, and all were more or less affected.

During the performance of John Robinson's show, at Madison, an elephant attacked and would have killed a young man serving as waiter, but for the heroic conduct of the keeper, who beat and conquered the animal. Terrible alarm prevailed in the audience, ladies screaming, fainting, etc.

Jacob Hammersmith, of Madison, was shot through the heart and instantly killed, a few days ago, by Ransom Smith. The tragedy resulted from a quarrel about a chicken claimed by Smith. The latter was promptly arrested and placed in jail. He is 60 years old. Hammersmith leaves a wife and two daughters, aged respectively 12 and 14 years.

A German named Mertz, a resident of Cambridge City, has instructed his lawyers to bring suit against Mrs. Kambesky, a wealthy widow of Richmond, who is ten or fifteen years his senior, for breach of promise. He estimates his damages, in which he includes railroad fare and the cost of the beer consumed during the courtship, at $2,000. He has made due allowance for offsets in the shape of fuel and lights.

Albert Hauger, who lives several miles from Salem, got very drunk and went into his stable loft to sleep off his potions. He slipped off the hay and down through a lot of harness hanging on the walls of the stable, one of the lines noosing itself around his neck and hanging him. He would have died in this condition but for the fortunate arrival of a neighbor at the barn, who cut him down.

Gen. James A. Ekin, Deputy Quartermaster General, in charge of the United States depot at Jeffersonville, has received an order for the following army clothing, commencing July 1: 16,769 blouses, 3,500 stable-frocks, 7,000 pairs overalls, 55,000 flannel shirts, 40,000 jeans drawers, 7,000 pillow-sacks. This will be good news for the operatives of that place, as they have been idle for several weeks past. This contract will keep 800 women busy all winter.

Capt. John Box died at New Albany last week, aged 66 years. Our readers will remember that about a month ago Capt. Box, his wife, two nephews, a niece, sister-in-law and a colored farm laborer were stricken with illness with all the characteristics of lead poisoning. All the family recovered, including the colored man, except Capt. Box, his wife and nephew, Sidney Box. Capt. Box is now dead, and his wife and Sidney are helpless from paralysis caused by the poison.

The Man with a Glass Eye.

A one-eyed man in St. Louis has a glass eye. This is the way he uses it. He says: "A man came into my office once to give me a thrashing about a little difference we had in regard to the settlement of a small estate. I listened to him coolly and deliberately. Then, when I saw he was about to strike, I pulled out my eye and laid it on the table, as if it were a disposed-of motion. That man went down stairs on the outside of the building. Still he could have got away with me if he had persisted. I was out the other day for a walk, when a couple of ladies approached me, asking for alms. As if to cogitate upon the ailments of the world, I took out my knife and unconsciously picked on the glass optic this way (illustrating). They left their baskets on the ground, and, though I offered to put up for their cause, nothing could head them off. But it is in the street-car that I have the most fun. Taking my 6-o'clock car at the starting point, of course I secure a seat. Very soon the seats are crowded with men, and ladies come in. I shut my good eye, so (illustrating), and level the dead eye on the man I want to have raised to make room for the lady. In time it will bring a man to his feet. There's something in the stare of a dead eye that will make a man's blood like it was put on ice. I have cleaned a whole car out this way, and had the thanks of the ladies voted."

Advise About Betting on Horses.

[New York Express.]

"Farmer" writes to know what we think of the horse races, and asks if we can name the winners. Ruralistic friend, we have thought day and night of the horse races. We had even picked out the winners, and put our week's salary on the result. And lo! the horse we backed stopped to scratch its left ear at the quarter mile post, and fell in a faint as the other horses passed under the wire, three-quarters of a mile ahead Since then we don't name winners. It's not in our department. But, friend, you can make more money hoeing cabbages in one week than you can make on a horse race in four decades. This advise is free gratis. Take it, as it doesn't cost you a copper.

A Perilous Descent.

A romantic young man asked his sweetheart to take a walk with him by moonlight on the river bluff at East Dubuque, Iowa. She went gladly. When half way up the extension they halted to admire the prospect. Suddenly a stone slipped underneath the young man's feet and he went down like a curtain-stick. He caught hold of some vines which clung to the rocks and hung for dear life, expecting to fall a hundred feet and to be dashed in pieces on the rocks below. The young woman could not pull him up, so she fell on her knees and prayed for him. The young man united with her after this fashion: "Help! Murder! Oh, Lord! I know I'll be all broke up. Now I lay me. Coundfound it all, I forget. Oh, Jerusalem! I've got to let go pretty quick. Give us some daily bread. Oh, that ain't right! Oh, Lord! Send somebody to help me out of this scrape. Help! Thunder!" At this point he could hold on no longer, but went down. But not a hundred feet, for he landed on a ledge which neither he nor she had seen in their excitement. A small fragment of cuticle rubbed off his knee was his sole injury.

The Executioner's Revenge.

Our Parisian contemporary, the Figaro, has lately told a terrible story of a headsman's revenge. Fourteen years ago the murderer Alvinain was condemned to death. When, on the morning of his execution, "Monsieur de Paris" entered the cell for the purpose of making his usual preparations for conveying him to the scaffold, the culprit received him with an outburst of abuse, couched in the foulest imaginable language, to which the "executioner of high works" listened impassively, apparently paying no attention to the torrents of insults and imprecations that flowed from Alvinain's lips. Arrived upon the scaffold, however, he bound his "patient" to the plank, and then deliberately lowered the death-dealing knife within a few inches of the murderer's neck, examined its edge, raised it again to its usual hight, and finally loosened the catch with the customary result. As the remains of the decapitated assassin were being removed from the scaffold, one of the officials present observed to the executioner that he had not performed his task as quickly as usual. "No," replied the latter, with an indescribable smile, "I let him wait a little." Experience had taught the practiced headsman how dire is the agony of the last few moments preceeding the dreadful passage from life to death; so, mindful of the wrong inflicted upon him by the doomed man's insults, he avenged the outrage with hideous completeness by "letting him wait a little."

Love in Two Languages.

[Cleveland Press.]

Even the dingy, uninviting emigrant-car is not without its little romance. Yesterday there arrived, among a large party of emigrants, a young Swedish woman. She was a blonde, and marvelously handsome. The peasant women of that nationality are noted for good looks. Sitting by her side was an intelligent-looking German. Neither could understand a word that the other spoke, but the eloquent language of love was at the command of both. They had met and fallen in love on the outward voyage. He toyed with her hand, and she told him by not drawing it away, even though the blushes mantled her fair face, that she loved him. He had a ticket to Dubuque, Iowa; she was booked to Kansas City. They supposed they could journey westward together for many happy miles yet, and trusted to fate that something would happen to enable them to stay together always. But cruel fate separated them. The emigrant agent told the young woman that their routes diverged at this point, and that she would have to leave the Lake Shore road and take a Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis train. She begged to be allowed to ride with her lover a few miles further, but the emigrant agent was obliged to separate them. Half an hour later the agent went through the train again to look after his charges, when he discovered the young woman again with her lover. She nervously clung to his hand and bowed her head, hoping to escape the notice of the official, but he was inexorable and compelled them to part. She threw herself wildly into the young German's arms, and wept bitterly. He told her, in his native tongue, that he would be true to her, and when he earned enough money would come and claim her for his bride; but, alas! she could not understand him, and they parted, never, perhaps, to meet again.

A Kiss and its Result.

Our readers shall have the benefit of a good story we once heard. Traveling into town one night about dusk, Parson K. had occasion to call at the mansion of an esteemed parishioner, who had, among other worldly possessions, two or three very fine daughters. He had scarcely knocked at the door when it was opened by one of these blooming maidens who as quick as thought threw her arms around his neck, and before he had time to say, "O don't," pressed her warm delicate lips to his, and gave him as sweet a kiss as ever heart of swain deserved. In utter astonishment, the worthy divine was endeavoring to stammer out something, when the damsel exclaimed, "O, mercy, mercy! Mr. K., is this you? I thought as much as could be it was my brother Henry."

"Pshaw!" thought the parson to himself, "you didn't think any such a thing." But taking her hand, he said, in a forgiving tone, "There is no harm done. Don't give yourself any uneasiness; though you ought to be a little more careful."

After this gentle reproof, he was ushered into the parlor by the maiden who, as she came to the light, could not conceal the deep blush that glowed upon her cheek, while the bouquet that was pinned upon her bosom shook like a flower-garden in an earthquake. And when he rose to depart, it somehow fell to her lot to wait upon him to the door; and it may be added, that in the entry they held discourse together for some minutes, on what subject it is not for us to say.

As the warm-hearted pastor plodded homewards, he argued with himself in this wise:

"Miss J. knew it was me who knocked at the door, or how did she recognize me before I spoke? And is it probable that her brother would knock before entering? She must be desparately in love—pshaw! Why, if she loves a brother at that rate, how must she love her husband; for, by the great squash, I never felt such a kiss in my life!"

Three weeks after the above incident Parson K. was married to Miss J.

Tight Shoes.

The wearing of shoes which compress and distort the feet is a signularly injurious custom. Suppose I said that nine-tenths of the feet were rendered misshapen by the boots and shoes worn, the statement would seem extreme, but it would be within the truth. The pointed shoe or boot is the most signal instance of a mischievous instrument designed for the torture of feet. In this shoe the great toe is forced out of its natural line toward the other toes, giving a reverse curve from what is natural to the terminal part of the inner side of the foot, while all the other toes are compressed together toward the great toe, the whole producing a wedge-like form of foot which is altogether apart from the natural. Such a foot has lost its expanse of tread; such a foot has lost its elastic resistance; such a foot has lost its strength of its arch to a very considerable degree; such a foot, by the irregular and unusual pressure on certain points of its surface, has become hard at those points, and is easily affected with corns and bunions. Lastly, such a foot becomes badly nourished, and the pressure exerted upon it interferes with its circulation and nutrition. It ceases to be an instrument upon which the body can sustain itself with grace and with easiness of movement, even in early life; while in mature life and in old age it becomes a foot which is absolutely unsafe, and which causes much of that irregular, hobbling tread which often renders so peculiar the gait of persons who have passed their meridian.

It sometimes happens for a time that these mistakes in regard to the boot and shoe are increased by the plan of raising the heel, and letting is rest on a raised impediment of a pointed shape. Anything more barbarous can scarcely be conceived. By this means the body, which should naturally be balanced on a most beautiful arch, is placed on an incline plane, and is only prevented from falling forward by the action of the muscles which counterbalance the machanical error. But all this is at the expense of lost muscular effort along the whole line of the muscular track, from the heels actually to the back of the head—a loss of force which is absolutely useless, and, as I have known in several cases, exhausting and painful. In addition to these evils arising from the pointed heeled boot, there are yet two more. In the first place, the elastic arch being broken by the heel, the vibration produced by its contact with the earth at every step causes a concussion which extends along the whole of the spinal column, and is sometimes very acutely felt. In the second place, the expanse of the foot being limited, the seizure of the earth by the foot is incomplete both in standing and in walking, so that it becomes a new art to learn how to stand erect or to walk with safety.—Harper's Weekly.

Dental authorities estimate that half a ton of pure gold is used every year in filling teeth in this country, costing a half million dollars, besides about four times as much cheaper material, such as silver and platina, worth $100,000 more. All the papers are printing this. Strange that they should publish as news what is in everybody's mouth.

WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF OUR NEXT PRESIDENT.

His Army Service of Thirty-Six Years and His Record as a Champion of Civil Law—How, as a Hard-Fighting General He Became a Shield for His Native State—Personal Characteristics.

[State Sentinel.]

Few men have served their country better than Winfield S. Hancock, and few deserve more from their countrymen. A big man, with a big head, a big heart and a big brain, Hancock is the very personification of honor, honesty and capacity. Gallant and unassuming, a soldier in three wars, the hero of a hundred battles, he is a man on whom all democrats might consistently unite for president, and who, as a candidate, will perhaps command a larger degree of respect and support from republicans than any other man in the democratic party. Clear-headed and self reliant, his career as a judicial statesman and military governor, while in command of Louisiana and Texas, gives evidence that, if a strong man is needed for the president, there is no man in the nation more fit for that position than Winfield S. Hancock. With him as the candidate the democrats will have nothing to explain or defend, and can proudly point to his record and challenge a comparison of it with that of the republican candidate. The people of this country will not soon forget there was a day in its history when, if General Hancock had not shown the highest capacity as a military commander, there might be no republic to govern. It was on that day when the gallant General Reynolds fell at Gettysburg and Lee's forces were driving back the Union army. Like a thunderbolt Hancock precipitated his troops upon the victorious enemy, hurled them back, and seizing Cemetery Heights and Round Top, wrested order from confusion and restored confidence to our half-beaten army.

A YOUNG PENNSYLVANIAN.

Winfield Scott Hancock was born in Montgomery county, Penn., Feb. 14, 1824, and is therefore fifty-six years of age. His mother's father was a revolutionary soldier and was captured at sea and confined in the Dartmoor prison, England. His great-grandfather on his mother's side was also a soldier under Washington, and rendered good service, dying at the close of the revolution from exposure and hardships endured in the field. Hancock's father served in the war of 1812 and afterward became a lawyer of distinction in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. At the age of sixteen Hancock was sent to West Point and had for classmates U. S. Grant, George B. McClellan, J. F. Reynolds, J. L. Reno, Burnside, Franklin and W. F. Smith. He graduated in 1844, June 30, and in 1845-6 served with his regiment in the Indian Territory as a second lieutenant of the sixth infantry. In 1847 we find him in Mexico and conspicuous for gallantry at the Natural Bridge, San Antonio, Contreras, Cherubusco, Molino del Rey and the capture of the City of Mexico. He was breveted for gallantry at the battles of Contreras and Cherubusco. In 1849 and 1850 he served with his regiment as quartermaster and adjutant, and in the fall of 1850 was married at St. Louis to Miss Almira Russell, the daughter of a prominent merchant of that city. He took part in several Indian campaigns in the west, and in 1857 was engaged in the southern Florida war. He served in the expedition against Utah and in 1859 went to California.

When he heard of the rebellion he took high ground in favor of the Union and did much in 1861 to check the secession spirit then seizing upon California. He applied to Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, for a commission in the volunteers, but the governor being slow in replying to his application he obtained a leave of absence and came east. His earnestness impressed General Scott, who ordered him to report to General McClellan, and on the formal recommendation of McClellan, President Lincoln, on the 23d of September, 1861, commissioned Hancock a brigadier general of volunteers. He was assigned to a brigade in the division of General Baldy Smith, and reported for duty at Chain Bridge, Virginia, in the army of the Potomac.

HIS FIRST BATTLE.

His first battle in the rebellion was at Warwick Court-House, near Yorktown, and he led his brigade in person, driving the enemy before him. At Williamsburg Hancock bore a conspicuous part. The rebels having repulsed Hooker and exposed Hancock's left flank he determined to retire and ordered the batteries back to the slope, where his brigade line stood. The rebel commander, seeing the movement, at once advanced his troops, and they came down on Hancock's right in two superb lines of battle, cheering tremendously and calling out, "Bull Run! Bull Run! That flag is our." Hancock sat on his horse behind the center of his line, waiting with imperturbable coolness the favorable moment. Calling on the men to stand fast and keep their pieces loaded, Hancock waited until the rebs were within 100 yards, then dashing forward on his horse, with head bared and swinging his hat, he shouted: "Forward! forward! forward!" The men saw the towering form of their general leading them, and springing up with a shout that made the hills ring, they precipitated themselves upon the enemy. The great, irregular mass of rebels faltered, halted for a moment, wavered and then fell back slowly. Every inch of ground was stubbornly contested; still, Hancock forced them off the field, nor did they again advance until the Union reinforcements came up and rendered the victory secure. It was almost night when Hancock repulsed the enemy, and no pursuit could be ordered in the darkness. The ground was covered with rebel dead and wounded, and many were cut off and captured. The action of Hancock had rendered Williamsburg untenable, and that night the enemy abandoned it. Hancock's name was heralded from Maine to California, and in a few hours, from an unknown subordinate, he had leaped into fame and assumed a national reputation. McClellan telegraphed the president, "Hancock was superb to-day," an expression which all who saw him towering above his men leading them to battle knew to be only just."

HIS SERVICES IN THE PENINSULA.

On the 27th of June, 1862, Hancock, who was then at Golding's farm, in the peninsula, received a severe attack from the enemy. He repulsed it and continued the fighting far into the night, the contending forces firing at each other at close quarters in the dark. This battle of Hancock's was one of the grandest spectacles of the war, and will never be forgotten by the army of the Potomac. On the 28th of June, 1862, Hancock was heavily engaged at Garrett's Hill, as he was at Savage Station on the 29th and at White Oak Swamp on the 30th. His troops fought four battles in as many days, and in every one of them were led by Hancock in person. He never knew fear himself, and could not tolerate it in others. An officer, who had his men in a tight place, rode up to the general and said: "General, my men are all being killed; may I not withdraw them a little out of the fire?" "No," replied Hancock, "I hope we shall be able to advance soon."

"Then we shall all be killed," despondingly replied the officer.

"Very well," said Hancock; "return to your troops, and if you fall you will have the satisfaction of knowing you have died for your country."

For his services in the peninsula campaign General McClellan recommended Hancock for promotion to the rank of major general of volunteers and the brevets of major, lieutenant-colonel and colonel in the regular army.

ALWAYS AT IT.

In September, 1862, Hancock commanded his brigade in the battle of South Mountain and afterward at Antietam. In this latter engagement, when General Richardson fell, Hancock was sent to take command of that gallant officer's division. In November, 1862, Hancock received his commission as major-general, and on the 13th of December was engaged in the desperate and bloody assault on Mayre's Heights. His behavior on this occasion was in keeping with the high reputation he had achieved. He was, with his division, in the thickest of the conflict, leading his men as far as it was possible, under the circumstances, for men to go, and only falling back when attempts at further advance was foolhardy and useless. In this fight, as, in fact, in almost every one in which he was engaged, he seemed to wear a charm on his life. He received in the "slaughter pen," as the rank and file were wont to call the position they occupied in this fight, a slight flesh wound, coming out otherwise unharmed, though with uniform perforated with the enemy's bullets. In this battle Hancock lost one-half of his command, killed and wounded, and all his aids were wounded.

At Chancellorsville, in May, 1863, he commanded his division and covered the roads leading toward Fredericksburg, where, amid surrounding disaster, although constantly attacked, his troops maintained their position to the last, and formed the rear guard of the army in moving off the field. The general had his horse shot from under him in the battle. Early in June he relieved General Couch in command of the second corps, and later in the same month was assigned by Mr. Lincoln to be its permanent commander.

In one of his battles General Hancock placed one of his brigades in a certain position and said to its commander: "General, whatever happens, I want you to hold this ground." The brigade commander was never very strong on the battle-field, and on that occasion seemed particularly weak and anxious, and as the general turned to ride away to another part of the field he followed him a short distance and called out: "General, where are my reserves?" General Hancock turned and riding up to where the officer was standing, said, severely: "General, it is none of your business where your reinforcements are; that is my business. I have placed you here to hold this ground; that is all you are required to do, and I want it done, sir." The brigade commander returned to his line with a sad step and sorrowful expression of countenance.

AT GETTYSBURG.

It was at Gettysburg Hancock again loomed up before the country as a hero. He was commanding the rear guard of the army in its advance on Gettysburg, and had reached Tarrytown, the place where his grandfather, 100 years before, had started to escort 1,000 Hessian prisoners of Burgoyne's army to Valley Forge, when General Meade sent him an order to hasten to the front and assume command of all the troops there. The report had reached Meade of the fall of General Reynolds and the check and repulse of the advance, and his mind at once turned to General Hancock as the man above all others best qualified to replace Reynolds and restore order to the head of the army. Hancock was not the ranking general, but in the critical state of affairs Meade, knowing him to be the best man, did not hesitate to assign him.

On his way from Tarrytown to the battle-field General Hancock met the ambulance containing the dead body of General Reynolds. When he arrived on the field he found the army in confusion and a retreat had already begun. Planting some infantry and batteries on Cemetery Hill he threw his whole energy into the battle and checked the enemy. Schwerin and Saxe were said to be worth such a reinforcement of 10,000 men to an army; Torstensin was rated as equal to 10,000, and the Duke of Wellington said the arrival of Napoleon on the battle-field was a better reinforcement to the French army than the accession of 40,000 fresh troops. What, then, shall we say of the value of General Hancock's arrival at the critical moment on the battle-field of Gettysburg, a battle that by common consent is now admitted to have decided the fate of the Union and fixed the final result of the war?

Of General Hancock's individual action at Gettysburg it would requird a volume to tell. His was really the action of the army, and Round Top, Culp's Hill and Cemetery Heights were his creations. He sent word to General Meade that was the place to fight, and seizing the favorable positions, with the eye of a consummate general, hung on to them with the advance until Meade brought up the whole army and delivered the battle.

THE INCARNATION OF WAR.

Hancock was grand and magnificent in the battle of Gettysburg and seemed the very incarnation of war. On the second day he was at Cemetery Heights during the frightful cannonade when the rebels concentrated the fire of 150 guns on our lines. The air was full of missiles, shot and shell screamed and hissed everywhere; it seemed as though nothing could live under that terrible fire—men and horses were torn limb from limb; caissons exploded one after another in rapid succession, blowing the gunners to pieces. The infantry hugged the ground closely and sought every slight shelter that the light earth-works afforded. It was literally a storm of shot and shell, like the fall of rain-drops or the beat of hailstones. Those who had taken part in every battle of the war had never seen anything like that cannonade, and the oldest soldiers began to be uneasy for the result. Hundreds and thousands were stricken down; the shrieks of animals and screams of wounded men were appalling; still the awful rushing sound of flying missiles went on and apparently never would cease. It was then, when the firmest hearts has begun to quail, the army witnessed one of the grandest sights ever beheld by any army on earth. Suddenly a band began to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and General Hancock, with his staff—Major Mitchell, Captain Bingham, Captain Parker, Captain Bronson—with corps flag flying in the hands of private wells appeared on the right of his line uncovered and rode down the front of his men to the left. The soldiers held their breath, expecting every moment to see him fall from his horse pierced by a dozen bullets, but still he rode on, while the shot roared and crashed around him, every moment tearing great gaps in the ranks by his side.

Stormed at by shot and shell,
Boldy he rode, and well.

Every soldier felt his heart thrill as he witnessed the magnificent courage of his general and he resolved to do something that day which would equal it in daring. Just as Hancock reached the left of his line the reble batteries ceased to play, and their infantry, 18,000 strong, were seen emerging from the woods and advancing up the hill Hancock knew the artillery fire had been intended to demoralize his men and cover the advance of their infantry, which was to make the real attack. Turning his horse, he rode slowly up his line from left to right, holding his hat in his hand, bowing and smiling to the troops as they lay flat on the ground. Hardly had he reached the right of the line when the men, who, inspired by the courage of their general, could now hardly retain themselves, received orders to attack the advancing rebels. Eighty guns which Hancock had concentrated opened their brazen mouths and streams of blue bullets flew from the muzzles of our rifles to the breasts of the confederates. It was an awful day, and Longstreet's 'Old Guard of the South' melted away like wax under that terrible fire. Of the 18,000 who came to the attack, 8,000 fell or were captured on the hill-side. Thirty stand of colors and an immense number of small arms were taken. Hancock was everywhere, riding the storm of battle as if he bore a charmed life. At last, just in the moment of victory, he was seen to reel in his saddle and would have fallen to the ground had he not been helped from his horse. A ball had pierced his thich, and for a time it was thought the wound was mortal.

"Tell General Meade," said Hancock, addressing his aide, Colonel Mitchell, "that the troops under my command have repulsed the enemy and gained a great victory. The enemy are now flying in all directions in my front."

When the aide delivered this message to General Meade, and added that his general was dangerously wounded, Meade said: "Say to General Hancock that I am sorry he is wounded, and that I thank him for myself and my country for the services he has rendered to-day.

General Meade afterward, in commenting on the battle of Gettysburg, said to General R. C. Drum: "No commanding general ever had a better lieutenant than Hancock. He was always faithful and reliable."

UNDER GRANT

Hancock did not recover from his wound until December, 1863, when, although still quite lame, he reported for duty, and was sent north to recruit his corps. He was tendered a reception at Independence hall by the citizens of Philadelphia, and received the hospitalities of the cities of Boston, Albany and New York. In March, 1864, he joined his corps and participated in the battles of the Wilderness with Grant. He commanded the second and parts of the fifth and sixth corps, amounting in all to 60,000 men. He fought at Alesop's house and at Spottsylvania court house, capturing "Stonewall" Jackson's old brigade, 4,000 prisoners and thirty colors. He was at North Anna, and did most of the fighting there. He commanded at the bloody assaults on Cold Harbor, and did his best to execute Grant's orders. fighting was desperate, and Hancock's loss could not have fallen far short of 12,000. He was on the south side of the James river, and made the assaults on Petersburg. He was with Sheridan, and attacked the enemy at Deep Bottom, taking four pieces of artillery, 600 prisoners and four stands of colors. He was at Petersburg and witnessed the explosion of the mine on the morning of July 30. The advance up the James river, August 12, 1864, was under his command, and he handled the second and tenth corps of the army of the James and Gregg's division of cavalry with such consummate skill as to elicit expressions of admiration from even General Grant. He fought the battle of Reams' Station, August 25, and had his horse shot under him. He fought the battle of Boydton Road, capturing 1,000 prisoners and two stands of colors.

With the battle of Boydton General Hancock's active fighting in the war ceased. President Lincoln, who had learned to place a high estimate on Hancock's abilities, ordered him to Washington and directed him at once to proceed with and organize an army of 50,000 veterans from discharged volunteers who had served an enlistment. The use of this army was alone prevented by the surrender of Lee and the ending of the war. At the close of the war Hancock commanded the army of the Shenandoah, relieving General Sheridan. This army consisted of 35,000 men of all arms, and was destined to move south with Hancock's 50,000 veterans and join General Sherman, but Joe Johnson threw up the sponge and rendered the movement unnecessary.

SINCE THE WAR.

General Hancock's career since the war is so well known it needs but little mention here. For his services during the war he was appointed a brigadier and afterward a major general in the regular army, and assigned to command of the middle department. In 1866 he took command of the department of Missouri, and conducted two campaigns against hostile Indians, taking the field in person at the head of 1,500 men of all arms.

In 1867 he was sent by the president to New Orleans to command the states of Texas and Louisiana. It was in this field of labor that he distinguished himself by setting the example of an officer of the army, with extraordinary powers, strenuously insisting upon the entire subordination of military to civil authority in time of peace. Among the military commanders during the reconstruction period he was conspicuous in this regard, and the positions then laid down in his general orders and correspondence did more, perhaps, than anything else to make him the ideal soldier in the minds of constitutional democrats. In 1868 he was relieved at his own request, and in 1869, 1870, 1871 and 1872 commanded the department of Dakota. Since then he has commanded the military division of the Atlantic, composed of the department of the lakes, the department of the east, and department of Washington, with headquarters at Governor's Island, New York city.

HIS PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

Hancock, in personal appearance, is tall, well formed and very handsome. His height can not be less than six feet two inches, and his weight fully 240 pounds. He would make the finest looking president who ever sat in the White House, except, possibly, George Washington. His form towers above other men, and he attracts the attention by his mere looks wherever he goes. His eyes are blue and have a benignant and mild expression when in repose, but inspired when in danger. His manner is dignified and knightly and he is courtesy itself. He is always magnetic, and draws men to him by his kindness and gentle interest in their affairs. His sympathies are easily aroused and he becomes intensely concerned for the sorrows and misfortunes of others, striving in every way to relieve them, as though their troubles were his own. Hancock's kindness to his subordinates always was not only their love, but also their confidence, and caused them to rely on him as a friend as well as a commander. He gave a man a good opinion of himself, and made each one feel he was of more importance than he ever before suspected. It was this which caused him to have such power over his officers and men in battle, and made them prefer rather to die than forfeit the good opinion of their leader.

General Hancock had two children, Russell Hancock and Ada Elizabeth Hancock. The latter died in New York, of typhoid fever, when eighteen years of age. She was a young lady of great promise. Russell Hancock, the general's only son, is living and is a planter in Mississippi.

A volume would not contain an account of all the heroic deeds of a man like Hancock. His is a noble character, and it is a pleasure to write of such a man. A glorious soldier, a steadfast friend, a useful citizen, he is all that is noble, manly and grave in poor fallen humanity. Thousands upon thousands of his old soldiers will gladly vote for him, and almost every citizen in the land will think twice before refusing his suffrage to such a candidate as Winfield Scott Hancock, the patriotic soldier, accomplished gentleman, consummate general and fair-minded statesman.

The citizens of St. Louis and Indianapolis are greatly indignant because the census enumerators do not find as many people within their respective limits as had been claimed were located there.

A recent dispatch from Leadville says: "William Cunningham was killed and J. P. O'Brien severely wounded, while the latter was quarreling with Tom Hogan. O'Brien fired at Hogan, missing the latter and killing Cunningham, when 'Doc' Norton, who was present, fired at O'Brien, with the above result."

The American Association of Nurserymen, Seedsmen and Florists held their annual meeting in Chicago last week. His aged widow resides at Lititz, Lancaster county, to which place his remains were taken for interment.... The Gulnare, Capt. Howgate's Arctic vessel, has left for the Arctic regions. The vessel is British, and cannot carry the American flag. The expedition will be the personal enterprise of Capt. Howgate, who will bear all expenses.... Again the rumor is revived that Gen. Grant will be offered the Presidency of the Nicaraguan Canal Company, which has recently obtained concessions from the Government of Nicaragua. The money to carry out the plans of the company will be subscribed by New York, Boston and Philadelphia capitalists, many of whom are personal friends of the ex-President.

De Freycinet has introduced into the French Chamber of Deputies a general amnesty bill. Instead of passing the summer at Balmoral and Osborne, as usual, Queen Victoria will go to Ireland for a change of scene. She will leave England about the middle of August, and while in Ireland will be the guest of Lord Kenmare, who is having his mansion at Kilberg refitted for her entertainment. She last visited Ireland thirty years ago.... Charles Bradlaugh, the Radical agitator, has been unseated by the English House of Commons, by a vote of 275 to 230..... Swiss papers state that the St. Gothard tunnel is in danger of falling in. Land-slips continue to threaten the masonry, and the engineers think the only way to avert the danger is to modify the line traced out for the tunnel.

Bradlaugh created an exciting scene in the British House of Commons the other day. When he attempted to address the Speaker he was met with cries of "Withdraw!" from the opposition. He was afterward accorded the privilege of speaking in his own behalf from behind the bar. He made a vigorous but vain appeal. Labouchere's motion to allow him to take the oath was overruled. Bradlaugh was then called to the table and informed of the decision of the House. Being requested to withdraw, he twice refused, in a respectful manner. The Speaker, by an overwhelming vote, was authorized to enforce his removal. Bradlaugh continued obdurate, and had to be forcibly removed beyond the bar, returning twice. He was finally arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms and confined in the tower.

The warlike intentions of Russia are disclosed by the imperial ukase, which provides for the enrollment, during the current year, of 235,000 men.... South American advices, via London, report a revolution in progress in the Argentine Republic, and the city of Buenos Ayres besieged by the national forces. THE DEMOCRACY.

Proceedings of the National Convention.

The National Convention of the Democratic party, called for the purpose of nominating candidates for President and Vice President of the United States, convened in Music Hall, in the city of Cincinnati, on Tuesday, June 22. Senator Barnum, of Connecticut, at 12:40 p. m., called the convention to order, and, without any preliminary remarks, announced that prayer would be offered by the Rev. C. W. Wendte, of the Unitarian Church.

Senator Barnum then announced that he had been unanimously requested by the National Committee to nominate the Hon. George Hoadley, of Ohio, for temporary Chairman. This being approved by the convention, the chair appointed William L. Scott and J. D. McEnery as a committee to conduct Mr. Hoadley to the stand. As Mr. Hoadley ascended the platform he was greeted with hearty applause. He spoke as follows:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the National Executive Committee: I obey this call to the chair of this convention with grateful acknowledgment of the confidence reposed in me. It shall be my sedulous care to prove worthy of your nomination.

Fellow delegates, fellow Democrats, thanks for your welcome, your generous welcome, my best response to which will be, and my only adequate response can be, the strictest impartiality in the exercise of the power during the brief period it is committed to me. I shall make mistakes. I trust you will forgive them. I am sure you will, as soon as I satisfy you that, although as a delegate I am the zealous friend, even the partisan, of my favorite candidate, as your officer I shall know neither friend nor foe of any candidate, but discharge my duty with absolute fairness and fidelity of purpose. Of this you have my pledge.

Gentlemen of the Convention, our fathers, distrusting popular choice, established in each State an Electoral College, to whose unpledged action they sought to intrust the election of the Chief Magistrate of the republic. Their children, taught by experience, have wisely modified the constitutional scheme by an unwritten amendment which combines the advantages of the electoral system with the direct popular vote, while it preserves to each State its just weight of influence upon the result. Conventions of delegates, chosen by the people of two or more parties, have already presented candidates for popular acceptance at the coming election, and another great college of electors is now assembled in this hall. The office you now fill, though not defined by law, is of transcendent legal consequence. I need not say that in this assembly it will not be doubted that you are not delegates from Congressional districts, but representatives of those indestructible units of our indestructible Union, the States. Custom has defined your duties. They are to construct a platform and to nominate candidates. You are not, however, called together to create a creed, but to apply a known principle to present public affairs. The Democratic principle does not date its birth from your assembling, and will not perish with the success or defeat of the candidates you nominate. It is eternal—a divine fire burning in the hearts of men. It quickens the thought of the statesman, nerves the arm of the soldier, and doubles the energies of the toiler. It is found in the Roman precept, "Suum cuique tribuere," and in the self-evident truth of the American patriot, that all men are created equal. It is the unrelenting foe of despotism and of Communism, whether open or sought to be hidden under the disguise of paternal governments. Its beneficent office in political affairs is to secure to every man the utmost possible liberty of action consistent with equal liberty to every other.

Yours is not, therefore, the office of invention, but of promulgation; not to discover, but to declare and to apply the Democratic principle to the changing affairs of human society, and that this principle may have living force in public concerns you will nominate candidates whose election will insure its full fruition during the next Presidential term. These duties no Democrat doubts that you will worthily perform.

But you are called to their discharge this day under circumstances of no common moment—circumstances which, may God in His mercy grant, shall in the history of our republic never recur.

Four years ago the Democratic party, in convention assembled at St. Louis, announced to the country its platform, and nominated as its candidates two of the foremost statesmen of the nation. Both then and now they are worthy of the most enthusiastic political devotion and the most ardent private friendship. And Samuel J. Tilden and Thomas A. Hendricks were elected President and Vice President of the United States—elected as fairly as was George Washington or James Monroe. That they were not inaugurated; that the Chief Magistrate of this nation has for more than three years been one whom the people and electors rejected, is a living monument seen now of all men, and to be remembered in all generations, of the fraud of the Republican party, of its infidelity to republican principles, of its willingness to sacrifice the right of popular election, that vital principle of republics, rather than lax its hold upon power, and of the loyalty of the Democratic party, even to the forms of law, of the confidence that the will of the people must finally prevail, abiding in which it patiently waits for the full fruition of its hopes until March 4, 1881, but no longer—no longer, unless defeated at the polls. If beaten fairly, we shall submit and again wait, but, if again successful, no cunning device of dishonest arbitration shall deprive us of our rights. The Democratic party will never again appear before a tribunal falsely called of justice—a tribunal deaf to the appeal of testimony, but not blind to the beckoning fingers of fraud. But, though we failed to inaugurate our candidate, our cause was not, even for the moment, wholly lost. Retributive justice visited without delay the immediate author of this infamy. The courts of Florida had thwarted the conspirators who proposed the theft of its State Government, and the stern refusal of the Democratic House of Representatives to appropriate a man or a dollar to continue the subjugation of South Carolina and Louisiana soon forced the oppressor to relax his grasp. No trace now remained of the carpet-bag governments of the South, except the $170,000,000 increase in the public debt, which they contrived in the seven years of misgovernment to heap upon its impoverished people. Yes, another trace remained. Louisiana, entitled by the constitution to two Senators, is represented by one. The seat of the other is filled by a delegate from a band of villains, never recognized as a Government, and long since disposed of—some to fatten upon the Federal treasury, and some to eat the bread of exile. The years that have passed since the theft of the Presidency have been years of plenteous harvest. The labor of the husbandman has reaped a rich reward. The earth has been "tickled with the hoe and has laughed with a harvest." The benison of the Most High has been upon us, and the opportunities offered by His gracious favor, wisely employed in the economies of two successive Democratic Congresses, have made possible that partial measure of resumed payment of the national floating debt, and that equalization of values called by the Republican party the "resumption of specie payments." But the new prosperities awakened by foreign demand and the abundant domestic products were given to the American people from a higher source than any agency of the Republican party. No soldiers kept the peace of the corn-fields; no Returning Boards canvassed the wheat sheaves; no Supervisors or Deputy Marshals assisted at the gathering into the garners, and no Electoral Commission gave its blessing to the harvest. They were the fruits of labor, the gracious gifts to the laborer of Him who is the largest benefactor in society, the high priest in the Democratic hierarchy. We have been spared one great danger since the 8th day of June, 1880. It has been certain that the usurper will not be immediately followed by the monarch, but the third term is postponed, not averted, and the real danger is not in the third term so much as in the Republican party, which makes the third term possible. Bonaparte did not crown himself Emperor until Bonapartism had corrupted France. When more than three-fifths of any political party invoke a "savior of society," that party is already so poisoned with imperialism that it has become itself a menace to the republic far more formidable than any mischief it professes to fear, or any danger it was organized to repel. The remedy, gentlemen, for this and all other ills of state is in eternal vigilance. This is at once the price and the protector of liberty. This vigilance, already newly quickened among the people from whom you come, continued here and hereafter is sure to bring victory to the Democratic principles and the Democratic candidates—a victory so full of hope for the republic that even the "melancholy days of November" shall be radiant with joy, and on the wings of the stormy winds of March shall be wafted blessings.

Mr. Biedler, of New York, offered a resolution that the rules of the last Democratic National Convention be the rules of this body until otherwise ordered. Adopted.

Mr. Martin, of Delaware, offered a resolution that the roll of States be called for appointment of members of the Committees on Permanent Organization, Credentials, and Resolutions.

Mr. Watterson—Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand an application from the delegates of Territories, asking for recognition and seats in this convention, which I desire to have referred to the Committee on Permanent Organization, with the request of the convention that it be favorably considered.

The Chairman—It is so referred, unless there is objection.

Mr. Pulitzer, of Missouri—No, no, no. I protest.

The Chairman—What, protest against a reference?

Mr. Pulitzer—Not against the reference, but against the balance of the motion.

Mr. Watterson—I move that it be referred without the expression of the convention, since there is no objection.

The Chairman—So referred, unless there be objection.

Mr. Jacobs, of New York—I move that the convention do now adjourn.

The motion was withdrawn temporarily, and the chair announced the meeting of committees.

The Chairman—The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. The delegate from Connecticut, Mr. David A. Wells, has the floor.

The following resolution is offered by David A. Wells, of Connecticut:

Resolved, That a committee of one delegate from each State, to be selected by the delegation thereof, be appointed to report resolutions in relation to the platform of the Democratic party, and be referred to said committee without debate.

The Chairman—So much of this as provides for a committee has already been acted upon, and is out of order.

Mr. Wells—I will strike that part out.

The Chair—The delegate from Connecticut offers the following resolution:

That all resolutions in relation to the platform of the Democratic party be referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.

Mr. Preston, of Kentucky—I move you that the convention now adjourn.

The Chair—Let us dispose of this resolution.

Mr. Preston—I withdraw the motion.

The Chair—It is moved and seconded that the resolution offered by the delegate from Connecticut be adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Jacobs then renewed his motion to adjourn till Wednesday at 10 a. m., and it was carried.

Second Day.

The convention reassembled and was called to order at 10:40 a. m., Wednesday, June 23. After prayer, by Chas. W. Taylor, of Covington, Ky., Mr. Young, of Georgia, Chairman of the Committee on Credentials, submitted his report.

In the Massachusetts case it unanimously recommended the admission of both contestants, and that the two delegations united cast the vote of the State.

The sitting members from Pennsylvania were reported as entitled to their seats.

There was great cheering when the clause was read declaring that the committee had, with singular unanimity, decided in favor of the sitting members from New York, and against the admission of Tammany.

Delegate Carroll, of Kansas, submitted a minority report recommending the seating of fifty anti-Tammanyites and twenty Tammanyites. The case of the former was argued by George W. Miller, of Albany; Amasa J. Parker, of Albany; Gov. Hubbard, of Texas, and F. L. Westbrook, of New York. John R. Fellows, of New York city, Rufus W. Peckham, of Albany, and Gen. Young, of Georgia, spoke in behalf of the majority report. John Kelly was invited by the Chairman to take the stand and present his view of the case, but it was announced that he was not present. A motion to substitute the minority for the majority report was voted down by 205½ yeas to 457 nays. The majority report was then adopted by a nearly unanimous viva-voce vote.

Mr. Martin, of Delaware, Chairman of the Committee on Permanent Organization, moved that the report of his committee be adopted. Agreed to, and the chair named Senator McDonald, of Indiana; Senator Butler, of South Carolina, and Thomas O'Conner, of Tennessee, as a committee to conduct ex-Gov. Stevenson to the chair.

Senator Stevenson assumed the gavel, and addressed the convention at considerable length.

Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, moved that the convention proceed to the business of nominating a President.

Mr. Preston, of Kentucky, moved to allow each person placing a nominee before the convention to have ten minutes for the purpose. This was adopted, and Breckinridge's motion as amended was also adopted.

The call of States was then ordered for the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency.

CALIFORNIA—FIELD.

The first State called which responded was California. John E. McElrath took the stand to present the name of Justice S. J. Field for the Presidency. Mr. McElrath said:

Mr. President: We have met on this occasion, an occasion to be forever memorable in the annals of the Democratic party, for the purpose of nominating the next President of these United States. And why is it, let me ask, is this vast hall filled with representatives of the people from all the States? Is it not that we may, by our actions this day, preserve for ourselves and our children, and transmit to a distant posterity, the priceless heritage of liberty? This it is that has called us together. We are intensified in our purpose to accomplish the ends I have suggested because we are justified in believing that the policy of the Republican party will, if continued, ultimately subvert the principles upon which our Government was founded, under which it has grown great and prosperous, and by the maintenance of which it can alone continue in its career of liberty and advancement. To achieve these results, we must continue in the pathway of the fathers who formed the republic. We want an indestructible union composed of indestructible States. We want the General Government to exercise only the powers that have been expressly delegated to it, and such others as by a fair construction of the constitution are necessarily incident to those expressly delegated. Within its proper sphere we want it honestly administered. We shall never again suffer the Legislature of a sovereign State to be invaded and the members arrested by military despotism. We would not have our Congressmen implicated in corrupt schemes, nor would we wish to elevate men to high positions who have been removed from public office for the reform and purification of the civil service. We want purity, judicial purity, in the Executive Department of the country. It has been said that westward the star of empire takes its course, and now from beyond the far West comes that great country that lays between the summit of the Rocky mountains and the calm waters of the Pacific, a country that a Democratic administration added to the Union, and presents one of her best sons to this convention as a candidate for the highest office on earth. New England nurtured his infancy, and California developed his manhood. Delegates of Connecticut, he is the son of your own soil. Californians, he is your Justinian. Virginians—sons of the Old Dominion; gentlemen of the suffering South—he threw around you the protecting shield of your country's constitution. Removing to California at a time when that great State was in its early infancy, he gave to her salutary and beneficent laws. To him the poor man of the Pacific slope owes the protection from forced sale of the roof that shelters his family, and the miner the protection of his pick from the rapacity of his creditor. He has shaped the laws of those great Territories in the West that are yet to become radiant stars in the galaxy of States. He is not only the founder of States, but also the preserver of States. Appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States as a Democrat, at the time when the country was in the desperate throes of civil war, he holds a commission from President Lincoln as an evidence of his devotion to the Union. On that bench he has been as pure and upright as Lord Hale. He has expounded the laws with the logic of Marshall and with a style superior to that of Brougham. He has protected the lawyer in his profession and the minister of religion in his holy calling. Finally, Mr. President, he imbibed his principles from the teachings of that great apostle of Democracy who sleeps at Monticello, and he promulgates them with the energy and fearlessness of the hero, the patriot, and the sage of the Hermitage. If nominated by this convention he will sweep over California like the irresistible northers that come from the snowy mountains. I have the honor to nominate for President of the United States the Hon. Stephen J. Field, of California. He is a man without fear and without reproach, a Corinthian column in the temple of Democracy; one who, if elected, will wipe out the only stain upon the banner of Democracy.

DELAWARE—BAYARD.

When Delaware was called the audience cheered heartily, and George Gray, of that delegation, proceeded to nominate the Hon. Thos. F. Bayard. Mr. Gray said:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I am instructed by the Delaware delegation to make on their behalf a nomination for the Presidency of these United States. Small in territory and in population, Delaware is proud of her history and her position in the sisterhood of the States [applause, and cries of "Good"], always devoted to the principles of that great party that maintains the equality of the rights of the States as well as of the individual citizen. She is here to-day to do all that in her lies for the advancement of our common cause. Who will best lead the Democratic hosts in the impending struggle for the restoration of God's government [Cries of "Bayard," "Bayard"], and the constitutional rights of the States and their people, is the important question that we are here to-day to decide. Delaware is not blinded by her affections when she presents to this convention as a candidate for this great trust the name of her gallant son, Thomas Francis Bayard. [Loud and long-continued applause.] He is no carpet knight, rashly put forth by us to flesh a maiden sword in this great contest. He is a veteran covered with the scars of many a hard-fought battle where the principles of constitutional liberty have been at stake in an arena where the giants of radicalism were his foes, and his bruised arms, not hung up, but wielded still with stalwart arm and burnished bright, are the monuments of his prowess. Thomas Francis Bayard is a statesman [applause] who will need no introduction to the American people. [Applause.] His name and his record are known wherever our flags float—aye, wherever the English tongue is spoken. His is no sectional fame. With sympathies as broad as this great continent, a private character as spotless as the snow from heaven [great applause], a judgment as clear as the sunlight, an intellect as bright as a flashing saber, honest in thought and deed, the people all know him by heart, and, as I said before, need not be told who and what he is; but you, gentlemen of the convention, you who, with me, have the duty to perform of keeping in view the success that is so important to be achieved next November, pray consider with me for a moment the elements of his strength. Who more than he will, as a candidate, appeal to the best traditions of our party and of our country? In whom more than in him will the best interests of this great country, now reawaking to new life and hope, confide for that security and repose which shall send capital and labor forth like twin brothers, hand in hand, in the great work of building up our country's prosperity and advancing her civilization. Who better than he will represent the heart and intellect of our great party or give better expression to its highest and noblest aspirations? Who will draw more largely upon the honest and reflecting and independent voters than he whose very name is a synonym for honest and fearless opposition to corruption in every form and everywhere, and who trod the path of duty with a chivalrous devotion that never counted personal gain or loss? Who has contributed more than Mr. Bayard to the commanding strength of the Democratic party of the United States to-day? Blot out him and his influence, and who would not feel and mourn the loss? Pardon Delaware if she says too much. She speaks in no disparagement of the distinguished and illustrious Democrats whose names sparkle like stars in her political firmament. She honors them all, but she knows her son, and her heart will speak. Nominate him, gentlemen of the convention, and success is assured. His very name will be a platform. It will fire every Democrat's heart with new zeal, and will place a sword in the hands of every honest man, to drive from place and power the reckless men who have held both for four years against the expressed will of the American people. [Applause.] Do not tell us that you admire and love him, but that he is unavailable. Tell the country that the sneer of Republican enemies is a lie, and that such a man as Thomas Francis Bayard is not too good a man to receive the highest honors of the Democratic party. Take the whole people into your confidence, and tell them an honest and patriotic party is to be led by as pure a man as God ever made; that a brave party is to be led by a brave man, whose courage never falters, whatever may be the danger or whatever the emergency; tell them that our party has the courage of its convictions; that statesmanship, ability and honesty are to be realities once more in the Government of the United States, and the nomination of Thomas F. Bayard will fall like a benediction, and will be the presage of a victory that will in November sweep from the gulf to the lakes, and from ocean to ocean. [Applause.]

ILLINOIS—MORRISON.

Samuel S. Marshall (Ill.) presented the name of Wm. R. Morrison, of Illinois. Mr. Marshall said:

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Convention: I must ask of you to-day your indulgence, because I am here in no condition, on account of either preparation or the condition of my health, to do justice to the duty assigned me by the united voice of the delegation from Illinois. We are assembled here to-day in the discharge of a very high and important responsibility. No body of men assembled together on this broad continent since the 4th day of July, 1776, has had greater responsibilities resting upon it and more important duties to discharge than the convention assembled here to-day in this hall. The eyes of the entire American people are turned to-day toward the beautiful city of Cincinnati, and millions of hearts are throbbing with anxiety and offering up prayers to Almighty God that this convention shall not err in the discharge of the important duty devolving upon it. We are assembled here to-day as the representatives of the great Democratic party of this country, representing the party that has been at all times and everywhere the defender and preserver of the constitution and the rights and liberties of the people. [Applause.] My countrymen, we should remember in the discharge of our duties here that we are but the representatives of the great body of the American people, at least, bound as it is represented by that great body of the constitution, and that our voices here will not be final as to the result of the canvass that is so rapidly approaching and throwing its duties upon us. Neither Cincinnati nor Chicago can make a President. The man who will make the next President of the United States to-day are laboring in their harvest fields, toiling in their shops, following the plow, and engaged in all those industrial occupations that make up the grandeur and the glory of this great country, and we must remember that they will have a voice in commendation or in disapproval of the manner in which we discharge the responsibilities imposed upon us. We have a duty to perform at this time greater, higher, more important than that which has developed on any previous day of this kind. Four years ago the American people, in the exercise of their right as freemen, by their ballots at the polls, made a selection of the man who should fill the great office of President of the United States. The verdict of the people was emphatic and undeniable. By the constitutional and legal modes presented by our constitution, they elected a majority of the electors whose duty it was to elect and place in office the President of this great republic, but by a conspiracy of unexampled character, and unequaled in the annals of the world, the verdict of the people was falsified, and a number of so-called visiting statesmen went on their way southward to hold up the hands of that organization of unmitigated scoundrels assembled at New Orleans, under the name of Returning Board, that they might have the courage in that city to hold up the office the greatest on earth, in open market, to hold out to the world the great office of President of the United States to be put up to the highest bidder, as the Pretorian Guards, in Rome, in an early day, put up at auction the office of Emperor of that great empire. We have the unmitigated shame and scandal presented to the world, that, in the face of the world, this great crime was consummated. It has been frequently remarked, my countrymen, that the Democratic party on that occasion, and its leaders, were guilty of cowardice in not asserting the right and duty imposed upon them by the action of the great body of people at the polls. But I think this has been too thoughtlessly and flippantly charged against the party. They were not guilty of cowardice. They were guilty of the highest act of patriotism known to man on earth. The Democratic masses of the Democratic party knew that a conflict of arms to determine the right to the office of President would result, in all probability, in the destruction of all liberty and the muniments of liberty on this continent. There is, my countrymen, a higher, nobler courage than that of the battlefield. There is a courage of patience, a determination, in defiance of public sentiment, to see that the right is done in a practicable manner, under the forms of the constitution. [Cries of "Time," "Name your man," and "Order."] Gentlemen, pardon me; I will get through within the time if you will indulge me. I was not aware, when I came into the stand, that the time was limited as it is or that I was occupying the time I have. The American people now demand a leader worthy of ourselves and worthy of the cause in which we are engaged. They demand for that leader, in the first place, a man of inflexible and aggressive honesty; a man who is not only honest himself but who will not permit crime to be perpetrated with impunity in his presence. They want a man of the most indomitable courage, a man of his convictions, a man that will dare to do right under all circumstances, a man who comes from the people, and sympathizes with the people, a man who is a legislator and a good citizen. [Cries of "time" and "Name your man."] Now, gentlemen, begging your pardon for the transgression upon your time, allow me without further words, by the unanimous voice of the delegation of Illinois, to present for your consideration that golden-hearted man and citizen, that gallant and indomitable soldier, fearless in battle, and yet generous and sympathizing in the hour of victory, and upright statesman.

At this point there were loud cries from the gallery of "Time," and great confusion, during which a delegate asked the Chairman to instruct the Sergeant-at-Arms to clear the building of all persons not connected with the convention unless the interruption should cease. The chair stated that he should use his efforts to preserve order, and the Sergeant-at-Arms notified the crowd that they must keep silent or go out. Mr. Marshall, continuing, said:

Gentlemen, with your indulgence a moment, I will conclude the remarks that I have to say. I will repeat, as I was interrupted, that a man authorized by the united and unanimous vote of the Illinois delegation to present for the consideration of this convention that indomitable, that most worthy and golden-hearted citizen; that man of the people; that man of inflexible honesty; that man of indomitable courage in civil life and in military life; that man who has followed the flag of his country in two wars. Although apparently a young man to-day, he distinguished himself as a private soldier in the Mexican war in his very boyhood, and distinguished himself as an officer in the late civil war. That most worthy citizen and legislator is Col. William Morrison, of Illinois—[applause]—and, if you will put him in nomination, I will guarantee that a voice of approbation will come from every valley and every hill-top in this land, and we will make him the next President of the United States. [Loud applause.]

INDIANA—HENDRICKS.

The most general and enthusiastic applause heard during the convention was witnessed when Senator Voorhees, responding to the call for Indiana, took the platform. He spoke as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen: I have the honor to present the name of a distinguished citizen of Indiana, who is fit to be President of the United States. I have listened with pleasure to the recitals appertaining to the names that have already been announced to you. I know each gentleman well. I know the accomplished jurist of California. I know the able and distinguished Senator from Delaware is worthy of all acceptance, worthy of your support, and that his administration of higher affairs than those to which he has been called will be as true and as pure as those through which he has passed. In every occasion of life he has risen to a level with everything to which he has ware. I know the gallant, iron-hearted, brave man from Illinois (Morrison). [Applause.] I know them well. I am proud to pay them honor. Every name thus far is worthy of this great presence, and yet I venture in this comparison to announce the name of Thomas A. Hendricks. [Great cheering continued for some time.] No word of disparagement falls from my lips on this occasion. I honor the names that are presented here, and I honor the name of that great and noble man, whose name has been withdrawn from the consideration of this convention, from the State of New York. [Applause.] But, looking over the career of public men, there is no man who comes into this presence who has met with more commendation in the work of his life than Gov. Hendricks, of Indiana. Whether looking at him in his early life as a legislator in the affairs of his State, as a member of the constitutional convention which framed the fundamental law of the State, whether afterward as a member of Congress representing a large, populous and intelligent district, whether as Commissioner of the Land Office, passing upon great questions connected with the public domain, or whether afterward, viewing him as a Senator, battling, struggling for the constitutional rights during the great reconstruction period of this Government, the constitutional rights of broken and conquered States, or whether, still later, viewing him as the Chief Executive of that fifth commonwealth of this great Union, everything in his record, is full of honor and full of admiration to those who may come after him in the position which he will occupy. [Applause.] Mr. President, shall we wonder that his State is for him? Indiana has been the battle-ground for twenty years of the Democratic party. Whenever you wanted to give back a note of victory you have looked to Indiana for the last thirty years, and Indiana, has she faltered? Sometimes borne down, but often triumphant, and always with the plume of Thomas A. Hendricks in the front. [Applause.] Here, sir, his State does come for him, and from the Ohio line to the Illinois line on the west, from the lake on the north to the river on the south, but one voice is heard here, and that is upholding and presenting the name of the honored citizen whom I am now speaking of. There is no divided cause in Indiana, no treachery, none. Why am I for Mr. Hendricks? I have fought by his side. I have struggled with him through many contests in times gone by. I have seen his valor, his steady course in the charge, and his wisdom in counsel, and I can stand with what little reputation I have before the assembled Democracy of the Union and say this been called, and now, gentlemen, to the South who has been more faithful? To the North who has been truer? To the East who has been better, wiser, more considerative, and more faithful? To the West I need not appeal, for he is our own son. [Applause.] And here, come what will, gentlemen, we plant our standard in your midst. We nail his colors to the mast, and, come the battle or the breeze, though those colors may be torn and shivered they will not go down except in honor, and we will go down with them if that should come; but if, on the other hand, you see fit in your generous confidence to honor the State of Indiana with this nomination, I can tell you in advance that her trumpet tone of victory will ring out over all this land, and to all its borders encouragement, everywhere arousing and supporting the Democratic party in the remotest townships. When the October sun goes down on the election, and from that on until November, you will have the enemy in full retreat. You will have a running fight, for the front line of the enemy will be broken, and all you will have to do is to charge along and enter into a full and complete victory in the Ides of November. I thank you, gentlemen. [Great and prolonged applause.]

OHIO—THURMAN.

John McSweeney, of Ohio, presented the name of Allen G. Thurman, as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN: The Democracy of Ohio in convention assembled with absolute unanimity expressed their preference for Allen G. Thurman as their candidate for the Presidency, and the duty has fallen to me to present his name to you to-day. I come before you with a profound sense of the responsibility and with a feeling of utter inability to fittingly perform the duty assigned me. I won't detain you with pompous eulogy—it would not be pleasing to the man I present—nor with tedious biography. You all know the man of whom I speak.

You know his deeds,
And the name that dwells on every tongue no minstrel needs.

For the past twelve years he has stood as the acknowledged leader of the Democratic party in the Senate, and to-day I think I can truthfully say, without disparagement of any of the other great names mentioned in this convention, and without plucking a single leaf from their garlands, that no man stands higher than he in the estimation of the American Democracy. He has on every proper occasion, in the forum, and on the bench, and in the Senate, stood faithful as the people's champion against every form of oppression and wrong. His patriotism is bounded by no mere State lines, and, when it was recently demonstrated that a far-off portion of our common country was being overrun by a barbarian horde, with not a link of sympathy with our American civilization, he raised his mighty voice against the further continuation of the demoralized innovation and proved himself the friend and protector of the American laborer and the purity of the American home. [Applause.] Great in genius, correct in judgment, of unrivaled eloquence in defense of the right, with a spotless name, he stands forth a born leader of the people, whom they will delight to honor. It is expected of this convention, and the times peculiarly demand the presentation of a ticket for the suffrages of the people which will be clean and free from spot or blemish, or any such thing—one around whom no dirty scandals cling. People demand a name that will be itself a platform. You are waiting for your platform. I announce it—Allen G. Thurman—[applause]—a name that bespeaks public integrity and chivalric honor. It is platform enough for me and all who know the unrivaled Senator. In these days, when corruption in high places has stalked unrebuked at noonday, his name has silenced skepticism on the reality of patriotism, and demonstrated that chivalric honor and unsullied integrity are considered well the highest title of American statesmanship. We would not be driven, if we nominate him, to commence our campaign by defending our standard-bearer against charges, either well or ill-founded, of moral obliquity or official malpractice. We would not go before the people asking condonation for past offenses, nor with the plea of the statute of limitations against the fullest scrutiny [laughter and applause] and most searching investigation of all his official career. Some men are able to say that the arrows of defamation have fallen thick and fast but harmless at their feet. I can say more. Against Allen G. Thurman the furious tongue of slander and of most audacious calumny in an era of slander has not had the boldness to speed from its weakened bow even one blunt arrow against the spotless shield of the chief I name to-day. He has borne the brunt of battle in the cause of Democracy when even the bravest might well have shrunk from the contest. He has fought the good fight and has kept the faith, but he has not yet finished his course of usefulness and glory. [Laughter and applause.] Under his administration the rights of all, high and low, rich and poor, capitalist and laborer, would be vindicated. Real fraternity would then be established between all sections, love between us like the palm would flourish, and peace her wheaten garland wear, and State should only differ with sister State as one star of glory differs from another star in glory. [Laughter and applause.] I find my time is passing away. [Cries of "Go on."] Thank you; I was going on to say something of Ohio. The enemy have been accustomed to call it a Republican State. I deny it. [Great applause.] I will prove it by the opposition in their recent convention. They have already an incumbent—an incumbent, mark you—of Tilden's chair down there from Ohio. [Laughter and applause.] They have him from Ohio, and that would have been thirty-seven out of the possible thirty-eight reasons why they should not have another fellow there—[laughter]—and yet so weak is their hold upon Ohio that they gave another to Ohio. Insatiate archer, would not one Rutherford the ruthless suffice, but you must have another? [Laughter.] Did they do that because it was a Republican State, or were they simply carrying black Republican coals to Newcastle? [Laughter.] Not by a long deal. No, sir, in 1876—that dark year at the close of our first century, marked by that deed without a name, that infamy for which every man engaged in it should be framed in the world's art gallery of roguery for all time to come—[great applause]—in 1876, with our glorious Tilden and Hendricks, God bless them both—[great applause]—we gave our largest vote, and Hayes only carried Ohio by 7,000 in a vote of nearly 70,000. Fellow-citizens, I have had some thoughts here prepared, but I will not weary you. [Cries of "Go on; go on."] Somebody will be calling "time." [Laughter.] Time at last makes all things even. Let me here remark that, if you give us a candidate that will concentrate the affections of Ohio, we will march forth in battle array. Let me call also your attention to a fact. Recently Gen. Garfield, better known by the euphonious epithet given to him by our post laureate Governor, "Gen. G."—you remember when the prosaic post broke down on his way from Chicago with the Republican nominee, he was announcing to the highways and by-ways who their candidate was, and, paraphrasing Conkling, he said:

'If you ask me whence our candidate comes,
My answer first shall be:
He's from the State of Ohio,
And his name is 'Gen. G.'"

[Spoken with a dancing accompaniment that created intense merriment.]

They say a poet is born, not made. The Latin of it is "Nascitur non fuit." But if that nascitur was fitted up by Foster, where was it? [Laughter.] But to return to the subject. [Laughter.]

Gen. G., when engaged in nominating somebody in Chicago—somebody thought it was Sherman, but around that there hangs a reasonable doubt, and I will not, therefore, go into that—but just before the nominator and nominee became inextricably blended in one indissoluble unity, Mr. G. made one remark. "Brethren," said he, "all I expect of danger—all I want to get through with is the current year, for on the next year the stars will fight for us in their courses, and organized stars and a returning board for us," and the census, he says "will continue us in power." Now, fellow-citizens, give us our glorious standard-bearer with the gonfalon thrown out in God's bright sunlight of Thurman to the rescue, and I propose anticipating one year of Garfield's sidereal campaign, and will show him more falling Republican stars in the gloomy and melancholy days of November—[great laughter and applause]—the like of which had not been seen since Garfield's Confederate Brigadier, Gen. Xerxes, led those mythical Greeks against Leonidas at Thermopylæ. [Great laughter.] Well, he did lead them, didn't he, or was that all Greek to them there? Now, then, if you will help us to make Thurman's calling we will make his election, and then the calling and the election, my brethren, we will proceed to make sure of by a little ceremony that happened to be omitted four years ago, and here let me serve notice that every Returning Board shall be a cooling board for the miscreant that attempts by that device to again rob the people of their choice, and in spite of Returning Boards and in spite of Electoral Commissions, all the gates of hell, even though the Republican party should carry the keys thereof, shall not prevail against us. [Applause.]

PENNSYLVANIA—HANCOCK.

Daniel Dougherty, of Pennsylvania, responded when that State was called, and spoke as follows:

I propose to present to the thoughtful consideration of the convention the name of one who, on the field of battle, was styled "the superb"—[cheers]—yet won still nobler renown as a military Governor; whose first act, when in command of Louisiana and Texas, was to maintain the constitution by proclaiming that the military rule shall ever be subservient to the civil power. [Cheers.] The plighted word of a soldier was proved by the acts of a statesman. I nominate one whose name will suppress all factions—[cheers]—will be alike acceptable to the North and to the South—a name that will thrill the republic—a name, if nominated, of a man that will crush the last embers of sectional strife, and whose name will be the dawning of that day so long looked for, the day of perpetual brotherhood among the people of America. With him as our champion, we can fling away our shrouds and wage an aggressive war. With him we can appeal to the supreme majority of the American people against the corruptions of the Republican party and their untold violations of constitutional liberty. With him as our standard-bearer, the bloody banner of Republicanism will fall palsied to the ground. Oh! my countrymen, in this supreme hour, when the destinies of the republic and the imperiled liberties of the people are in your hands, pause, reflect, take heed, make no mistake. I say I nominate one who will carry every State of the South. I nominate one who will carry Pennsylvania—[loud cheers]—carry Indiana—[cheers]—carry Connecticut—[cheers]—carry New Jersey—[cheers]—carry New York—[loud cheers]—I propose the name—[a voice, "Carry Ohio,"]—aye, and carry Ohio—[cheers]—I propose the name of the soldier statesman, whose record is as stainless as his sword—Winfield Scott Hancock. [Loud cheers.] One word more—if nominated he will take his seat. [Loud cheers.]

Permission was accorded, when Mr. Dougherty corrected his speech as follows: "Gentlemen of the convention, I pray your pardon for one word. I said that 'if nominated,' I should have said that, 'if elected,' Gen. Hancock will take his seat." [Cheers.]

HAMPTON ON BAYARD.

When South Carolina was called Wade Hampton stood up and was enthusiastically cheered. Upon taking the platform Gen. Hampton addressed the convention as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE CONVENTION: Until within a moment ago I did not know that I should be called upon to say one word to this convention, because South Carolina has no candidate to present, but I have been invited to second a nomination which has been made, and I know not why that honor was conferred on me, except that, as Massachusetts has first seconded the nomination of Delaware, it may not be inappropriate that South Carolina should reach out her hand to that great State of the East. [Cheers.] They were in the past, perhaps, the two States most widely separated in political opinion, and it is a happy omen now, after all these years of trouble and of bloodshed, that those two great States—the one from the East and my own little Palmetto State of the South—should come together for the peace, prosperity and happiness of the whole American continent. [Cheers.] We say, sir, that we have no candidate to present. We came here bringing as an offering to the Democratic party 138 electoral votes. We say to you if you give us a man, pure, spotless, perfect, one who represents all the best elements of American character—if you give us such a man, we will give you our votes. We say to you, and we say it to prove our sincerity, that we have none to offer. We come and say to the great East and to this overflowing Northwest: Place your best man in the field and we of the South will support them. We ask for no place, for no position, for no pledges, for no patronage, no promises. We come simply as Democrats to sustain a great country—[applause]—and perhaps, my friends, we may be the most impartial judges, not of the merits of the respective candidates, because we recognize in all whose names have been presented to-day that they are each and all worthy to bear the great Democratic banner. We know that, and, recognizing the enthusiasm which greeted the name of Hancock—[applause]—we of the South will feel that we would be safe in his hands, because we were safe when he had the power. [Applause.] We know that the Nestor of our party, the guide, the leader of the Senate, that Thurman would add dignity to the place. We know that Indiana's son is worthy of the honor. We know that all those whose names have been presented here are worthy to be the standard-bearers of our great party, and it is therefore in no invidious mood that I say to you that we take Bayard because we believe that he is the strongest man. [Applause.] We believe he will bring more Republican votes, conservative Republican votes, to his support than any other man in America. We believe that he will get the young vote of the country. We know that he will get every Democratic vote in America; and we know that he can be elected—[cheers]—and we know that if elected, he, too, would take his place, for he is as brave as Hancock. [Applause.] You remember, my friends, it has just flashed across my mind, and, if my classical reading has not all left me, you remember that when the Greeks were returning from their great victory, and were about to lay their offerings upon the altar, the Generals were called on to vote for two men—the first and second man—who, in their opinion, they thought most worthy of honor, and the name of Themistocles was found upon every ballot. The name of Thomas Francis Bayard, if not always placed first, is always second, and we choose to take the second man.

It was then moved that the convention proceed to ballot for a candidate for the Presidency. The motion was adopted, and balloting began—the first ballot resulting as follows:

Scattering votes were cast as follows: California—Seymour, 2. Colorado—Loveland, 5; Payne, 2. Iowa—McDonald, 2. Kansas—Ewing, 10. Kentucky—McDonald, 1. Michigan—Seymour, 1; Lathrop, 1; McClellan, 2. New Jersey—Randall, 3; Parker, 1. North Carolina—Seymour, 1; Jere Black, 1. Pennsylvania—Jewett, 1; Seymour, 1; McDonald, 1. Rhode Island—Seymour, 1; English, 1. Wisconsin—McDonald, 1.

The convention, immediately after the announcement of the ballot, adjourned until 10 o'clock, Wednesday morning.

Third Day.

The convention was called to order at 10:30 a. m., Thursday, June 24. Prayer was offered by Rev. Charles Taylor, of Covington, Ky.

Mr. Peckham, of New York, rose to make a statement in behalf of the State of New York. That delegation had heard with great sensibility the votes in the convention yesterday for the honored statesman of New York, Samuel J. Tilden. The delegation received a letter from Mr. Tilden, in which he had renounced himself before this convention, and the delegation, knowing his honesty of purpose, had considered it final and conclusive, and had this morning agreed on another candidate than Tilden. He was requested to announce that New York's choice before this convention was Samuel J. Randall, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

At this point a motion was put and lost to read Tilden's letter.

The roll-call of States then proceeded. Alabama, at the opening of the second ballot, cast 11 votes for Hancock. California followed with 5 for Hancock. When Illinois was reached, the vote came, for Hancock 42 votes. Wild enthusiasm followed the announcement, as yesterday she had voted solid for Morrison. The cheering was repeated when the clerk announced the vote. The same demonstrations followed the announcement of the vote of Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, and Minnesota. When Missouri's 28 for Hancock were given there was another rousing cheer. The delegates rose and waved their hats and fans. New York's 70 votes went for Randall, and the Randall Club, whose white hats and canes were used in their cheers, were met with hisses. When Ohio was called, Alexander Long said the delegation asked leave to retire for consultation. The State was passed. Pennsylvania also asked to retire, and was passed. When Ohio was called again, Mr. Hill said the most of the delegation was absent, and the Chairman was also absent, but, in obedience to the instruction of 800,000 Democrats of Ohio, he would cast the 44 votes of Ohio for Allen G. Thurman.

The Chair refused to recognize Mr. Hill's right to cast the vote.

Ohio returned and cast 44 for Thurman. There was no sensation at the announcement. Wisconsin got permission to change her vote, and cast 20 votes for Hancock. Here another wild scene of excitement ensued. New Jersey followed, casting her 18 votes for Hancock.

Instantly the whole convention and the galleries became wild with enthusiasm.

The chair struck a base staccato accompaniment to the anthem of enthusiasm, but it required several minutes to enable anyone to hear an individual voice. When, at last, peace was partly restored, Mr. Hale, of Pennsylvania, mounted on a chair, and shouted out, "Pennsylvania is proud of her son." He went on to eulogize Hancock, and closed by changing the vote of Pennsylvania, making it 58 votes for Hancock. Again the anthem of enthusiasm, and again in vain the weakened staccato of the Chairman's gavel, until it was wholly drowned by the overwhelming tide of sound.

Louisiana's banner, with Hancock's portrait, which had been at the organ, was borne to the front of the stage. The State banners over the whole house were waving in the air. Above all was the monotonous anthem, only swelling and falling as the efforts of the Chairman to stop the uproar increased or slackened. The climax of excitement was reached when all the banners of the States rushed to the Chairman's desk and surrounded the banner bearing the portrait of the choice of the Democracy.

When something like ten minutes had been spent in this exciting outburst, the banners went back to their places. Then W. C. P. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, with great difficulty, changed the vote of the State to 18 for Hancock, 5 for Bayard, and 1 for Thurman. Nebraska changed her 6 votes to Hancock. Virginia then changed to Hancock; then Nevada, then Rhode Island, and the work was done.

The Chairman, weary of the excitement, sat down and said he would recognize nobody until the delegates took their seats.

At length a delegate from New Hampshire moved to make the call of the States anew. This motion was quickly adopted, and the new call began. It began with State after State voting solidly for Hancock, but there were many hisses mingled with the applause as the votes were announced. Indiana asked for a moment's consultation, and then voted for Hendricks. Iowa created a sensation by casting one vote for Tilden.

The ballot for President, as finally recorded, was as follows:

Whole number of votes	738

The announcement of the result of the ballot was made at 10:50. The band played "Hail Columbia" and "Yankee Doodle," and again the house rang with cheers of the thousands.

William Mack, Chairman of the Indiana delegation, took the stand, and asked to be heard. [Hisses.] After rebuking those who hissed him, he moved to make the nomination of Hancock unanimous, promising that Indiana would cast her vote in November for Hancock.

Samuel J. Randall then was presented to the audience to second the nomination. Mr. Randall said he was here to second the nomination of Pennsylvania's son, Gen. Hancock. The action had been unanimous. The nomination was strong, would bring victory, and would add the keystone of the Federal arch to the Democratic States. He closed by promising his untiring efforts for the election of the nominee. Hancock's nomination means that, if elected, he will be inaugurated.

Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania, followed, tendering the thanks of his delegation and of his State for to-day's action. He said that history repeats itself. In this goodly city, twenty years ago, the Democracy named its last President, and here now it names its next. The duty of the Democracy now is aggression, aggression, aggression, aggression.

Senator Wade Hampton, of South Carolina, on his crutches, came to the platform and was greeted with loud applause. He said that, on behalf of the solid South—that South that was once arrayed against Gen. Hancock—he pledged the solid vote of the South to the gallant nominee of the convention. Recognizing Gen. Hancock's gallantry in war, and his true observance of the rights pertaining to civil life, he pledged to him the earnest, true and energetic support of all the South, and for his State of South Carolina, so lately redeemed from misrule, he promised a decisive Democratic majority.

Judge Hoadley followed, promising the support of Ohio, and that by aid of the silver-tongued orators of other States its electoral vote would be cast for Hancock.

The chair then put the motion and it was adopted unanimously. Immediately the band struck up the "Star-Spangled Banner." The great organ added the overpowering volume of its tones in accompaniment and the effect was thrilling.

Hon. D. W. Voorhees took the platform and said that, though somewhat sore-hearted, the Democracy of Indiana knew its duty, and would perform it. This nomination was an evidence of that coming reconciliation among the States so much to be desired. Gen. Hancock knew well the Confederate Brigadier; and it was a pleasure to be able to say that, in the coming contest, Gen. Hancock would have no more hearty supporters among his own followers in the late war than among the Confederate Brigadiers. They recognized his ability as a soldier; and, more than that, they appreciated his just views of the subordination of the military to the civil law.

Mr. Falconer, of New York, followed. Then came W. C. P. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, who began by saying: "We have this day beaten our swords into pruning-hooks, with which we shall reap in November the autumnal harvest of success." He had loved the South, he had been willing to lay down his life for her, but to-day he stood on a higher plane—that of American citizenship. To-day the banner unfurled is the star-spangled flag of the nation, made sacred by the blood of the man chosen this day as the leader of the Democratic party. He appealed to New York, Pennsylvania, Indiana and Connecticut to answer for their part in the coming contest, and closed by invoking God's blessing on this day's work.

At this point John Kelly appeared, coming down the main aisle. Instantly a great shout arose, the organ chimed in, and the band also took part. By the time Kelly had reached the stage the excitement was almost equal to the scenes of the earlier moments of the convention. The Chairman, in introducing Mr. Kelly, said that by to-day's action the Democracy of New York had been reunited.

Mr. Kelly was greeted with the wildest outburst of applause, and, when quiet was partly restored, he said that by nominating Hancock the convention had reunited the Democracy of New York. He had no doubt his brethren and those with whom they had been fighting politically for the past five years would agree to let past differences be forgotten. [Great applause.] He promised to say nothing hereafter of the bitterness of the past. Union of the Democracy in New York was essential to success, and he now had no doubt that New York would vote for Hancock in November. He then proceeded to eulogize Gen. Hancock and pronounced him a soldier, a gentleman, and a man of honor. He counseled organization in the State of New York, and asked that whoever in New York hereafter spoke of the differences in that State should be regarded as a traitor. There was a higher duty than fighting each other politically. For himself, he pledged the heartiest support to the ticket, and predicted its success.

After Kelly had concluded there were loud calls for John R. Fellows, of New York, representing the other side of the political strife in that State. He appeared at length, and, while the house was cheering and the Chairman rapping for order, he took his place at the speaker's desk. A proclamation for special quiet was made by the chair, and repeated by the Sergeant-at-Arms, to enable him to be heard. Mr. Fellows spoke as follows:

Gentlemen of the United States: your action to-day has been superb. [Applause.] You have restored all differences existing in the ranks of the Democratic party. You have healed all wounds. We may march under the division banner of different Generals, but we march to one battle-field, to fight one common foe. [Applause.] Henceforth, that man is our friend who best assists in carrying the banner to victory. That man is our enemy, and only he, who lags in his duty in that respect. [Applause.] But you have done more, aye, infinitely more, than to have settled the dissensions of a State. You have strangled by your strong hands, to-day, the giant of discord and strife which has dominated our great country. [Great applause.] The South and the North clasp hands now in no unmeaning ceremony, and Hancock shall hear again the roar of Hampton's guns in friendly strife. [Loud applause.] All over this land, by the success of this ticket, comes the return of fraternal concord, of brotherly love of the olden time. [illegible] us to a common Union, [illegible] the great works of prosperity [illegible] upon the stricken and impoverished, upon the graves of our dead [illegible] mourn [illegible] descendants [illegible] just, [illegible] [Applause.] As I [illegible] say that New York [illegible] make to the Democratic nomination. She gives Democratic majorities. [Applause.] We shall march over that State as though we were sweeping it with a tornado with Hancock at our head. [Applause.] Montauk will call to the cataract of Niagara and everywhere along the route the swelling chorus of Democratic voices shall make a theme for the entire nation till we write on our banner in November 50,000 majority in the name of a united Democracy as the tribute of the Empire State. [Loud applause and cheers.]

At the close of Mr. Fellows' speech John Kelly stood up beside him, and the two, with grasped hands and faces covered with smiles, made the formal sign of reconciliation. The scene was heightened in impressiveness when the band struck up "Auld Lang Syne," and was supported by the ponderous tones of the great organ.

Susan B. Anthony was now escorted by Hon. Carter Harrison to the stage, who presented, through the Chairman, an address to the convention in favor of legislation for woman suffrage.

Hon. Henry Watterson, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, was recognized by the chair, and, after order was restored, proceeded to read the platform, as follows:

The Democrats of the United States, in convention assembled, declare:

1. We pledge ourselves anew to the constitutional doctrines and traditions of the Democratic party, as illustrated by the teaching and example of a long line of Democratic statesmen and patriots, and embodied in the platform of the last National Convention of the party.

2. Opposition to centralization and to that dangerous spirit of encroachment which tends to consolidate in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of Government, a real despotism. No sumptuary laws; separation of church and state for the good of each, and common schools fostered and protected.

3. Home rule, honest money, consisting of gold, silver, and paper convertible into coin on demand; the strict maintenance of the public faith, State and national, and a tariff for revenue only.

4. The subordination of military to the civil power, and a genuine and thorough reform of the civil service.

5. The right of a free ballot is a right preservative of all rights, and must and shall be maintained in every part of the United States. The existing administration is the representative of conspiracy only, and its claim or right to surround the ballot-boxes with troops and Deputy Marshals to intimidate and obstruct the electors, and unprecedented use of the veto to maintain its corrupt and despotic power, insults the people and imperils their institutions.

6. We execrate the course of this administration in making places in the civil service a reward for political crime, and demand a reform by statute which shall make it forever impossible for a defeated candidate to bribe his way to the seat of a usurper by billeting villains upon the people.

7. The great fraud of 1876-'77, by which, upon a false count of the electoral votes of two States, the candidate defeated at the polls was declared to be President, and for the first time in American history the will of the people was set aside under a threat of military violence, struck a deadly blow at our system of representative government.

8. The Democratic party, to preserve the country from the horrors of civil war, submitted for the time in the firm and patriotic faith that the people would punish this crime in 1880. This issue precedes and dwarfs every other. It imposes a more sacred duty upon the people of the Union than ever addressed the conscience of a nation of freemen.

9. The resolution of Samuel J. Tilden not again to be a candidate for the exalted place to which he was elected by a majority of his countrymen, and from which he was excluded by the leaders of the Republican party, is received by the Democrats of the United States with deep sensibility, and they declare their confidence in his wisdom, patriotism, and integrity unshaken by the assaults of the common enemy; and they further assure him that he is followed into the retirement he has chosen for himself by the sympathy and respect of his fellow-citizens, who regard him as one who, by elevating the standard of public morality, and adorning and purifying the public service, merits the lasting gratitude of his country and his party.

10. Free ships, and a living chance for American commerce, upon the seas; and on the land no discrimination in favor of transportation lines, corporations or monopolies; the amendment of the Burlingame treaty, so as to permit no more immigration, except for travel, education and foreign commerce, and therein carefully guarded; the public money and the public credit for public purposes solely, and the public lands for actual settlers. The Democratic party is the friend of the laboring man, and pledges itself to protect him alike against the cormorants and the Commune.

11. We congratulate the country upon the honesty and thrift of a Democratic Congress, which has reduced the public expenditure $40,000,000 a year; upon the continuation of prosperity at home and the national honor abroad; and, above all, upon the promise of such a change in the administration of the Government as shall insure us genuine and lasting reform in every department of the public service.

The resolutions as read were unanimously adopted.

Mr. Pulitzer, of Missouri, moved to proceed to the nomination of Vice President. Agreed to.

The call of States for the nomination of candidates then began, and Pettis, of Alabama, nominated Wm. H. English, of Indiana.

Arkansas, when called, seconded this nomination, and in turn all the remaining States seconded the nomination of English, until John P. Irish, of Iowa, nominated R. M. Bishop, of Ohio, as a man who had never been defeated when a candidate for office—as one who would equip, in Mr. Garfield's State, a campaign which would sweep the State in October and November.

William F. Vilas, of Wisconsin, seconded the nomination of English in an eloquent speech.

Iowa withdrew the name of Bishop, and, the vote being put by the chair, the nomination was declared unanimously agreed to.

The announcement was greeted with applause and cheers.

Mr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, moved that a committee of one from each State be appointed to notify the nominees of the convention of their nomination, and in the name of the convention and of the party to request their acceptance of the nomination.

Mr. Preston moved to amend so that the committee notify the nominees in writing, so as to have a record of the answer. The amendment was accepted, and the resolution adopted.

A resolution was offered that the District of Columbia and the Territories have one representative each in the National Committee. Tabled.

The various delegations were instructed to send up to the chair the names they desired to represent them in notifying the nominees of their nomination.

The following names were announced for members of the National Executive Committee:

Alabama, Levi W. Lawler; Arkansas, John J. Sumter; California, J. T. Farley; Colorado, T. M. Patterson; Connecticut, William H. Barnum; Delaware, J. C. A resolution was offered by Mr. Irish, of Iowa, that the basis of representation in the next National Convention be the same as at the present, and that the National Committee be authorized to determine the place and time of holding the convention. Adopted.

After further resolutions of thanks and transaction of some routine business, Mr. Preston, of Kentucky, moved to adjourn, and the hall being now nearly empty, it was carried without dissent, and at 3 p. m. the convention adjourned without day.

"I DIDN'T at all expect company to-day," said a lady to her visitors, with a not-very-pleasant look, "but I hope you will make yourselves at home." "Yes, indeed," replied one of them, starting off, "I will make myself at home as soon as possible."

SCHOOL-DAY MEMORIES.

A Postoffice Class in History, Geography, and Grammar.

[From the New York Sun.]

Fifty-eight applicants for appointments in the New York postoffice were notified to appear for civil-service examination. Eleven of the number failed to report, and nine were rejected on the certificate of the examining physician. One of the medical questions, as to the age, if living, of the father and mother of each candidate, or the age at death, was made to determine the vital powers of each candidate. The question, "Do you chew tobacco?" was also asked. In the class of thirty-eight that was examined the youngest was 16 years old, and was small for his age. The eldest was 44 years of age, and had been a Colonel in the army. He had for classmates two other Colonels, about whom there was the coincidence that they had been commanders of the same New York regiment at different times. The questions and examples in arithmetic were written on a large blackboard, and the members of the class were required to fill out the answers and solutions on blanks spread before them on their desks. The subjects for the examination were arithmetic, geography, grammar and history. Thirty minutes were allowed in which to write the answers in arithmetic, and fifteen minutes for the other subjects. In arithmetic the first example was: "Write nineteen million two hundred and ten in figures," and the others were sums in addition, division and multiplication. In geography the class was required to say "what States border on the Atlantic ocean and Long Island sound, north of the mouth of Chesapeake bay;" also the names of the States touched by the Mississippi river south of the mouth of the Ohio, and to give the boundaries of the State of Massachusetts, as well as the names of the capitals of Wisconsin, Mississippi, Georgia, New Jersey, and Ohio. The names of the principal seaports on the Atlantic coast were required to be given.

"What is grammar?" "What is a verb?" "Name the different parts of speech of the following sentence: 'John strikes a horse,'" were some of the questions about grammar. The class was also given the sentences, "We lay down our burdens and then laid down ourselves," "Neither wealth nor honor can secure happiness to their votaries," "The rapidity of his movements were beyond example," and "He was exceeding careful not to give offense," to correct. Such questions as "What foreign nations once had territorial possessions which are now owned by Great Britain or the United States?" were asked in history. Most of the answers omitted "Alaska," and one or two of the examiners were found to have momentarily forgotten that William H. Seward had purchased that land from Russia twelve years ago. "What independent nation voluntarily consented to becoming a State in the Union?" and "What nation was that State a part of previous to its admission to the United States?" seemed sticklers for most of the junior members of the class. In naming the "three memorable wars in which the United States had been engaged since the acknowledgment of its independence," many gave the Revolution as one of the wars, and one or two fixed the date as 1772. One of the class complained of a violent headache and quit in the middle of the exercise. Abercrombie was named as a prominent General of the United States.

The Education of Wild Beasts.

The veteran animal tamer, Alfred Still, says that too much whipping makes a wild animal sulky and vicious, but a certain amount of whipping is necessary. To train a wild beast, he said recently, you must "first make its acquaintance from the outside of the cage, and get the animal acquainted with your face; but, above all, with your voice. They become accustomed to voices sooner than faces, and are governed more by sound than by sight. Having got accustomed to your beasts, and they accustomed to you, your next step is to train them to their tricks. Though these tricks are simple, they require a great deal of time and patience, and a good deal of whipping to accomplish them. The lions are the smartest of the wild beasts. You can train a lion to do the ordinary tricks of the trade: jump through hoops and over gates, standing on his hind legs, and so on—in about five weeks' constant work. It will require about a week longer to teach a lioness, and a leopard, which comes next to a lion in intelligence, about six weeks to learn the same feats. It takes about seven or eight weeks to teach a tiger, and a tigress from eight to nine weeks, while you can keep on beating and teaching a hyena for four months before you can do much with him. The most difficult thing to do is to teach a wild beast to let you lie down on him without his trying to make you lie in him by eating you up. Kindness—that is, anything but ordinary civility—is absolutely thrown away upon a wild beast. With a tiger or tigress especially all affection is literally wasted. A tigress is a likely to eat you up after an intimate acquaintance of six years as one of six weeks. As a rule, the whip is the most efficacious instrument for training. It can be used quickly and it hurts. If I were to drop my whip the beasts would fancy I had lost my power over them and would pounce first on the whip and then go for me. The four tigresses trained in that cage are estimated to be worth $32,000; but a good tiger, unbroken, is not worth more than $2,500. Lions are worth about $2,000 to $2,500 each; panthers, $600; jaguars, $400; hyenas, $250, if untrained; leopards, $250 to $400, according to their kind."—Scientific American.

No Fun in Being a Princess.

The position of the Princess of Wales is too exalted a one to permit of much social enjoyment, yet has not the splendid potentialities of reigning royalty. The Princess, too, is peculiarly unostentatious, and evidently finds the magnificent loneliness of her position an actual trial. To be young and beautiful, and idolized, and yet to be shut out from most forms of social amusement, can be by no means delightful. Yet, there are, of course, very few houses, even among those of the highest nobility, to which the Princess of Wales can go as an invited guest. And, when she does go, an awful state hedges her around. She is passionately fond of dancing, yet no gentleman can ask her to dance. She it is who signals out the personage whom she desires as a partner, and, when she stands up to dance, all other dancers must sit down. After circling around the room some half a dozen times, she pauses and sits down to rest, and then the remainder of the waltzers may take a turn, but as soon as she stands up again they must stop. This solitary Grand Lama kind of performance cannot be very amusing to this kindly, gentle, amiable lady. She is, I am told, a most accomplished dancer, despite her slight lameness. But, of all the recreations of her life, she most enjoys driving in the park. In her little victoria, with her dame de compagnie beside her, she is free to enjoy the testimonials of affection and enthusiasm that meet her everywhere, and no one that notes the gracious smile and bow wherewith she returns every salutation can doubt her delight at her own popularity.

The Dignity of Housekeeping.

Where is there any station higher than the ordering of the house? While the husband has to vex himself with outward matters, while he has wealth to gather and secure, while perhaps he takes part in the administration of the State, and everywhere depends on circumstances; ruling nothing, I may say, while he conceives that he is ruling much; compelled to be but politic where he would willingly be reasonable, to dissemble where he would be open, to be false where he would be upright; while thus, for the sake of an object which he never reaches, he must every moment sacrifice the first of objects, harmony with himself—a reasonable housewife is actually governing in the interior of her family; has the comfort and activity of every person in it to provide for, and make possible. What is the highest happiness of mortals, if not to execute what we consider right and good, to be really masters of the means conducive to our aims? And where should or can our nearest aims be but in the interior of our homes? All those indispensable and still-to-be-renewed supplies, where do we expect, do we require to find them, if not in the place where we rise and where we go to sleep, where kitchen and cellar, and every species of accommodation for ourselves and ours is to be always ready? What unvarying activity is needed to conduct this constantly recurring series in unbroken living order! How few are the men to whom it is given to return regularly like a star, to command their day as they command their night; to form for themselves their household instruments, to sow and to reap, to gain and to expend, and to travel around their circle with perpetual success and peace and love! It is when a woman has attained this inward mastery, that she truly makes the husband whom she loves a master; her attention will require all sorts of knowledge; her activity will turn them all to profit. Thus is she dependent upon no one; and she procures her husband genuine independence, that which is interior and domestic; whatever he possesses, he beholds secured; what he earns, well employed; and thus he can direct his mind to lofty objects and, if fortune favors, he may act in the State the same character which so well becomes his wife at home.—Goethe's Wilhelm Meister.

What Has Been.

Our youthful illusions linger with us still, to a certain extent, world-worn though we are. The friends of our childhood stand forth boldly in our memory. None other were half so true, so kind, so witty, so clever. There was that sweet young poet who might have become a second Tennyson, if only he would have condescended to give his music to the world, but who preferred instead to inscribe his matchless gems in albums and the like—how devoutly we believed in him! how profoundly we admired him! The other day we turned up a batch of his lucubrations, and re-read them with the light of thirty years in between. We found them sickly in tone, false in sentiment, halting in their feet, and of impure or feminine rhymes. And we were foolish enough to regret that the illusion of years had been shattered! What boundless wealth with his $2,000 a year had the Crœsus of our modest village! We have since known men only tolerably well off on $10,000—men who envied their neighbors who had $20,000, and thought themselves poor by comparison. The local beauty of our young days would, we are very sure, prove herself to have been an ill-dressed, simpering, milliner-like young person, could we but see her now, with our experience of what real, high-bred, well-dressed beauty is; the clever young lady who used to talk in hexameters, who confessed in Latin and was suspected of Greek, and whose learning we took to be as deep as the sea, would turn out to be only a voluble young blue stocking, who floundered boldly where she could not swim. The Hebe of our youth would reveal herself as the hoyden of our age; the self-made local scientist with his discovery of perpetual motion, his balloon that would not collapse, his locomotive that was as safe as a church—he was only a poor dreamer; and the village Hampden, whose arguments were so convincing, was a purblind partisan, who never saw more than half of any question he took up. But we see nothing of all this. Memory has crystallized all these forms and characters; and we see them by the light of youthful imagination even now in the twilight of our decay, and, seeing them as we thought they were, we love them for what they never have been.

Rather Had Brady.

When James T. Brady first opened a lawyer's office in New York, he took a basement room, which had previously been occupied by a cobbler. He was somewhat annoyed by the previous occupant's callers, and irritated by the fact that he had few of his own. One day an Irishman entered. "The cobbler's gone, I see," he said. "I should think he had," tartly responded Brady. "And what do you sell?" he said, looking at the solitary table and a few law books. "Blockheads," responded Brady. "Begorra," said the Irishman, "ye must be doing a mighty fine business—ye hain't got but one left."

HAVING asked his girl for a kiss as a tonic, she replied that there was such a thing as being too tonic.

Judicial Convention.

FRIDAY AUGUST 6th, 1880,

for the purpose of nominating a prosecuting attorney. The ratio of representation will be the same as that in the joint representative convention, which will be held at the same time and place.

By order of the district committee.

Hon. Walpole G. Colerick.

The Fort Wayne News gives the following account of the welcome extended to our faithful representative in congress, upon his arrival at home last week:

"Upon the arrival of the train, the band began to play, and upon Mr. Colerick's appearance upon the platform he was seized by four or five of his more enthusiastic friends, who raised him from the ground and carried him to a carriage which was in waiting. In the carriage were Judge Lowry, Judge O'Rourke and A. C. Trentman. The carriage headed by the band then started up Calhoun street, followed by a large procession of citizens in rank. At the house, Judge O'Rourke made an address of welcome to the young congressman, thanking him for what he has done and assuring him that his efforts in behalf of Fort Wayne would not soon be forgotten by his constituents. Judge Lowry then, in his own spontaneous manner, introduced the congressman. He spoke of his services in the house, and knew that he would add fresh laurels upon his return. Mr. Colerick said he could not upon this occasion, express his thanks and his gratitude for the kind reception given him. If he had accomplished any good, or was likely to accomplish any good for the city of Fort Wayne, or any other part of this district, he was glad to now it was appreciated ; he had many nds, he believed, but this kindly uring of their generous natures tirely unexpected. At the con- of his address Judge Lowry ree cheers for the venerable congressman, 'David H. his democratic family,' tven with a will, after 'spersed."

Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock will be America's first twin president.

There is nothing left of the bloody shirt but the button holes.

A number of large hickory poles have already been raised in Indiana, in honor of Hancock and English.

In the east, west, north and south, there is universal gratification at the nomination of Hancock and English.

Will our republican cotemporaries have the brazen effrontery to say that Gen. Hancock was a rebel sympathiser?

The wife of Governor Williams died at his home in Knox county last Sunday. Mrs. Williams had been sick for some time.

Gen. Hancock is not connected with any religious denomination. His father and mother were Baptists of the strictest school.

Kid-Glove Porter, the republican candidate for governor of Indiana, has been enjoying the emoluments of a government office in Washington City for the last three years.

Our republican friends might just as well get into the big wagon and ride with the democrats, for we are bound to win. Only death can prevent the election of Hancock and English.

How many of the soldiers who served under Hancock and saw him ride in front of the line at Gettysburg, in the midst of shot and shell, will vote against him? Echo answers, not one.

There seems to be a general stampede from the republican to the democratic ranks, all over the country; prominent republicans everywhere are predicting Gen. Hancock's election. All right, let them come; democrats will treat them well.

Half the republicans in the state don't know that their obscure state ticket is in the field. Ask the republicans who their candidates for governor and lieutenant governor are, where they live and what their business is, and see how many of them can give you a correct answer.

If Hancock is elected, will Nelson or Morss be postmaster at Fort Wayne.—Fort Wayne News.

Hancock will be elected, and inasmuch as Morss of the Sentinel would fit the Arcola postoffice to a dot, he will probably be located at that point, unless Doctor McDowell objects. Nelson will probably supercede Spice.

A number of Gen. Hancock's friends in Cincinnati, recently sent him a handsome tribute of remembrance in the shape of a floral piece. It was a locomotive and tender made of immortelles and fresh flowers, and measured eight feet long. On the front of the engine a flag is flying, on which is inscribed "On To The White House." It was sent "With compliments of Cincinnati friends," and was shipped by express.

Hon. John W. Forney, of Philadelphia, Pa., one of the most prominent republicans in this country, will openly advocate the election of Gen. Hancock. He speaks of Hancock as "the living hero of Gettysburg, the Murat of Pennsylvania," and says that "Hancock will deliver the great commonwealth of Pennsylvania from the terrible curse that has polluted its fair fame, destroyed the hopes of its young men, and enriched its insolent politicians."

Our esteemed friend, Thomas R. Marshall, of Columbia City, has been nominated by the democrats of Whitley and Kosciusko counties for prosecuting attorney. Mr. Marshall ranks high in his profession, and enjoys a lucrative practice in the courts of Whitley and and adjoining counties. His ability is unquestioned, his honor unsullied and his democracy unimpeachable. He deserves to be elected by a handsome majority.

The insinuation that Senator McDonald planned for his own success at Cincinnati, as against Hon. T. A. Hendricks, ought to be resented as an insult by every admirer of our worthy senator. We believe that Senator McDonald was true to Mr. Hendricks, and would have remained so until Mr. Hendricks was withdrawn, no matter how long the contest, notwithstanding the use of Senator McDonald's name might have brought the nomination to Indiana.

When we learned of the nomination of our old friend Hon. Daniel McDonald for congress, in the 13th district, we felt as though we would like to reach away across to Plymouth, grasp his hand and congratulate him. We have known Mr. McDonald since our first connection with politics; we knew him as plain Dan. McDonald; we knew him as a fraternal brother; we knew him as the editor of the Plymouth Democrat; we knew him as Hon. Daniel McDonald, and we have always found him the same unassuming, intelligent gentleman. He is a tried and true democrat; as a politician he is above reproach, and an honest and conscientious business man. Dan's ability and personal popularity will elect him, and he will represent his constituents faithfully and honestly in the next congress. He will have the honor of serving under the first democratic administration in twenty years. Hurrah for Hancock and Dan. McDonald.

The Nomination of Hancock Saves the Democratic Party and a Free America.

The Case of Honesty vs. The Bar'l" was Tried in the Cincinnati Convention. Verdict in Favor of Plaintiff.

HANCOCK AND ENGLISH.

The grand council of the democratic party has deliberately and wisely chosen the leaders for 1880. The name of General Winfield Scott Hancock electrifies the people of the whole country. Every democrat, every liberal and thousands of republicans will enlist under the great military chieftain and able statesman. No blot or stain upon his private character or public record. His nomination is a harbinger of peace, prosperity and happiness throughout the land. His election is a foregone conclusion. His administration will be as renowned for honesty and ability as the present administration is for fraud and corruption. General Hancock will be President Hancock, and military power will be subordinate to civil power.

For vice-president no better selection could have been made than that of Hon. Wm. H. English of our state. His recognized ability as a statesman gives him prominence; his honesty and purity of character lend influence to the ticket and will make Indiana 20,000 democratic at the October election. Hancock and English will receive 1,000,000 more votes than Garfield and Arthur at the November election.

What Prominent Republicans Say About Hancock.

Postmaster General Key, says: "The nomination of General Hancock is the strongest the democrats could have made. He has a good record as a soldier and has no political record to answer for."

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., June 27.—Hon. O. P. Davis, national senator from Park and Vermillion counties, announces his purpose to support Honcock and English, and to wield all his influence in their behalf.

General Sherman, when asked what he thought about it, replied that he did not have anything to do with politics. "But if you will sit down," he added, "and write the best thing that can be put in language about General Hancock as an officer and gentleman I will sign it without hesitation."

Thurlow Weed said: "As a republican, I wish that any other candidate had been chosen; but I know that if General Hancock is elected the country is safe. This is the first time in twenty years that the democrats have not blundered in such a crisis."

Dr. L. W. Read, Surgeon Gen., said "I am a republican, but Hancock will get my vote, and there are thousands more like me. Why, there is George Bullock, the owner of the immense mills at Balligomingo—in fact, the owner of the village. He has thousands of employes, who live upon his land and to whom everything is provided in the way of necessities—yes, and the luxuries of life. He, in a word, is a philanthropist in the true sense of the word, and wields an immense influence. He is a radical republican; but he has announced his determination, if Hancock was nominated to raise a Hancock flag on the top of his mills, where it should wave throughout the campaign. Why, here, sitting right side of me, is C. L. Nyce, a republican. Now, what are you going to do Nyce?"

"I shall vote for Hancock," said Mr. Nyce.

Hancock and Mrs. Surratt.

A few of the loud-mouthed republicans who applauded the hanging of Mrs. Surratt for complicity in the assassination of President Lincoln, are now reiterating the falsehood circulated by the Indianapolis Journal some time since, to the effect that Gen. Hancock caused Mrs. Surratt to be hung, and that he absolutely refused to let her see her priest, or any clergymen of the Catholic church, after she was sentenced. All persons of ordinary intelligence know that Gen. Hancock had nothing to do with sentencing Mrs. Surratt, and as to the other charge, no better evidence can be offered than that of Rev. Father Walter, Mrs. Surratt's spiritual adviser just previous to her death, and the priest whom Gen. Hancock is said to have refused admission to the prison. Father Walter has written the following denial:

"Truth and justice compel me to deny the statement with reference to Gen. Hancock's participation in the execution of Mrs. Surratt. I attended Mrs. Surratt on that occasion, and met with no interference on the part of Gen. Hancock. Gen. Hancock had great sympathy for this unfortunate lady, and waited until the last moment, hoping for a reprieve. I consider it an act of justice to Gen. Hancock that this statement should be made.

J. A. WALTER,
Pastor of St. Patricks church, Washington."

In addition to the above written statement, Father Walter suggests that while the matter is being disposed of, it might be as well to place the blame for the execution where it belongs—upon Andrew Johnson. Father Walter said "when the time for the execution had been fixed, I went to President Johnson to urge a postponement for a few days. Mr. Johnson peremptorily refused to postpone the execution, and acted as though he suspected I would be led to hope that one favor might be followed by others and that eventually a reprieve might justly be demanded. I tried to disabuse him of such an impression by declaring that if he would grant us but ten days no other favor would be asked of him. Shortly before the execution I called at the White House a second time. My card was returned with a message that Mr. Johnson would not see me. I asked him then for a hearing of ten minutes, but he refused; then for two minutes, and he still refused. There was no reason in his refusal, and I hope he felt at the time of his impeachment trial that the refusal of the senate to grant him ten days in which to prepare a defense was in a measure retributive." The arsenal at Washington contains photographs of the scaffold at the time of the execution which show Father Walter at Mrs. Surratt's side.

General Hancock not only sympathized with Mrs. Surratt and permitted her priest to see her, but it has been proven that so strong was his hope that she would be reprieved that on the day of the execution he stationed relays of cavalry along the streets from the White House to the arsenal that no delay might ensue in communicating the fact.

Gen Hancock was not a member of the court which sentenced Mrs. Surratt; neither was she in his charge as a prisoner. He was merely an official whose final duty was to order the execution of the sentence, concerning which Hancock said: "I am carrying out the death sentence, and it is the most painful act of my life. I would rather take chances on the battle-field, but I am a soldier and must obey orders."

The Census.

Unfortunately, there are three townships yet to hear from as regards their enumeration, no reports having been thus far made by the enumerators. The population of the entire county, therefore, can not be given, but can only be estimated, the delinquent townships being Newville, Stafford and Wilmington.

The enumeration thus far, by townships, is as follows:

Butler township		819
Jackson	"	1,848
Concord	"	1,692
Newville	"
Stafford	"
Wilmington	"
Auburn precinct		2,154
Waterloo	"	1,906
Keyser township		2,252
Richland	"	1,312
Fairfield	"	1,502
Smithfield	"	1,518
Franklin	"	1,811
Troy	"	606
Total		16,[illegible]85

This, exclusive of the three delinquent townships, gives a population about equal to that of ten years ago, so we have gained three good-sized townships in population since the last census was taken. The population of the town of Auburn is given at 1,542; of Waterloo, 1,380; of Garrett, 1,857—and as a matter of course, there is much dissatisfaction, weeping, wailing and "snatching of teeth."

The only way county money can be spent is through an order from the democratic commissioners or judge. What did Van Auken mean when he talked about a "corrupt court-house ring?"—Waterloo Press.

Van Auken did not say "corrupt court-house ring," as the Press well knows. He did say, when alluding to his candidacy for sheriff, that in the event of his nomination he would use his utmost endeavors to clean out "one of the most corrupt rings that ever infested the court-house." Judging by the applause created by the remark of Mr. Van Auken, it was well understood by the convention whom he alluded to, and it was not the commissioners or judge, either.

An Interesting Mistake.

About as good a joke as any one has perpetrated lately in Auburn, so far as we have heard, is that which Attorney R. D. Tefft got off on himself a few nights since, and he makes it the more ludicrous by frankly relating the adventure himself. He may think the laugh is on the other parties in the transaction, but we have no hesitancy in saying that it is overwhelmingly on Mr. R. D. Tefft. While returning home at a late hour, and in passing the residence of Supt. McIntosh on south Main street, he imagined he saw a man stealthily preparing to enter one of the front windows, and, with the former robbery of Mr. McIntosh's house still fresh in his memory, Mr. Tefft determined to defend the premises at the peril of his life—and pulverize the "burglar," if advisable. So he came to a dead halt and demanded, in his sternest tones, "What are you doing there?" No answer. This was convincing proof that all was not well, Mr. Tefft thought, so he gathered in a convenient weapon of warfare, in the shape of a top to one of the gate-posts, and was just getting his muscle ready to fire it right bang into the burglar's physiognomy, when the latter, having sufficiently recovered from the scare and gained enough wind to speak, said he was "doing nothing." An investigation revealed the fact that the supposed burglar, midnight prowler and assassin was a young man engaged in a friendly chat with a young lady member of Mr. McIntosh's family! She quietly informed Mr. Tefft that it was "all right," and the latter silently replaced the head of the gate-post and slid out into the darkness.

Matrimonial Mixings.

The marriage act has been performed by fifteen happy couples this month; that is, the record of the clerk shows that the above number of licenses have been taken out, and it is but reasonable to suppose that thirty people were thrown into bliss thereby. Their names are hereto appended:

Amos Frederick and Julia Ann Myers, James A. Hammond and Mary E. Wilkins, Frank B. Draggoo and Laurentine Gibford, Christopher Apple and Hannah J. Showalter, John E. King and Sarah Crummey, Thos. L. Fales and Inona Belle Jones, Phenis Hebel and Edith Reed, Alfred Haynes and Ida A. Swander, Arthur Wilmot and Josie Allen, Jeremiah Lewis and Jennie E. Graham, William A. Morrow and Rosa A. Deforest, Oliver P. King and Maggie J. Depew, John Baltz and Laura Murray, Wm. C. Mathews and Hattie Malone, Charles M. Dickinson and Mary A. McEntarfer.

A Mother's Cruelty.

Information has been received from the neighborhood of Auburn Junction stating that a woman of that locality had been guilty, on several occasions, of most cruelly abusing her own child—a little girl who is but eleven years old. The report states that the child recently committed some trifling offense for which the unnatural mother beat her most unmercifully over the arms and shoulders with a broomstick, breaking the latter on the poor child's body. Such inhuman treatment can not be tolerated in a community of enlightened, christian people, and unless this woman takes timely warning and desists, her name will be made public and the law will handle her without gloves.

They Will Be Mad.

About six months ago, there appeared in Mike Long's family a new male heir—destined, perhaps, like his father, to become also a mail clerk some day—and up to the time of the republican convention it had lived without any name. Its front name now, however, is Garfield, and when Mr. Arthur hears that Mike didn't name his boy Garfield Arthur Long, he will be mad; and when Mike hears the result of the fall election, he will be mad; and when the boy gets old enough to study the biography of the party for whom he was labeled, he will be mad; in fact, there is trouble brewing in Mike's family. (And when Mike reads this, perhaps he will be mad).

Another Loaded Revolver.

One of those distressing accidents which we see daily accounts of in nearly every newspaper, took place last Sunday evening at the residence of Charles Hunt, in Altona, five miles west of here. A little son of Mr. Hunt's, only four years old, discovered a revolver concealed about a bed which was occupied by a gentleman who boards in the family, and while playing with it the weapon was discharged, the ball passing through a portion of the unfortunate little boy's side. At this writing he is very low, as the wound is a dangerous one, and it will be miraculous if he survives it.

—The new census gives Fort Wayne a population of only about 26,000, while the citizens have claimed 35,000, and of course there is a grand "kick" about it.

—Charlie Hoff says, "de tam tramp he gif Frank's tog a leedle tsu much teffy." Taffy never did agree with dogs and "Watch" now watches in dog-land for the coming of other taffy-fed curs.

—There will be a large frolic at Fremont to-morrow, July 2, consisting of a picnic through the day and dancing at night. The Jackson road will sell round-trip tickets for one fare on that occasion.

—New sidewalks, which are always desirable, have sprouted out numerously within the past ten days, the result, probably, of the late heavy rains. Old sidewalks should be well watered in dry weather.

—Something is going to happen in Auburn to night, but we musn't say anything about it, however necessary it is in our business; next week, though, all creation couldn't keep us from "giving it away."

—The South Bend men who have been engaged here in laying their concrete walks, for some time past, are good workmen, and we wish they could find similar employment around the town all summer.

—Mr. J. J. Van Auken was fortunate enough to secure from Messrs. Hauselman & Gillingham, of Angola, Ind., one of their beautiful White Bronze monuments. More of the same kind on hand. Illustrated circulars free on application. 27-3w.

—Jay Van Auken, our will-be sheriff, is at present wearing a very sore foot, caused from having been poisoned a few days since while surveying. He went home and to bed Tuesday afternoon, "all broke up" and said he didn't want to wake up again until the fourth.

—Messrs. Davis, Davenport, Van Auken and Potter went to Waterloo, Monday evening, for the ostensible purpose of taking part in some masonic proceedings, but, upon their return at midnight, the real object of their visit was divulged. Oh, the naughty, naughty men!

—A. J. Little, jr., of this office, leaves to-day for a long ride on the "steam keers." He says he has scarcely been out of the coporation in seven years, and he purposes to go and see whether or not Pennsylvania is as big a town as Auburn. He will be gone a month.

—It has been reported this week that Jas. Draggoo, who moved away from here about a year ago, was shot and seriously injured, a day or two ago, in Pennsylvania, by a boarding-house keeper with whom he had some difficulty. We are not prepared to vouch for the truthfulness of the rumor.

—Several boys were arrested at Waterloo, last Saturday, at the instance of Agent C. W. Gillett, for loafing around the depot and jumping on passing trains. They were fined one dollar each and costs. The defacing of the depot buildings by cutting, obscene writing, etc., was also embodied in the complaint.

—Last Sunday afternoon, at Elkhart, a young man named George Elliott, in a fit of insane jealousy, shot his affianced, Miss Minnie Darcy, injuring her so that she cannot recover. He then placed the revolver to his own head and shot himself dead. He had seen another young man walking with Miss Darcy that afternoon, which is assigned as the immediate cause of his rashness and cruelty.

—J. A. Provines, the republican nominee for clerk of this county, was heard to remark, a day or so ago, that "if any democratic votes were necessary to elect him, he didn't want the office." Mr. Provines need give himself no uneasiness on that score. It isn't likely that he would have secured many democratic votes even before he made that little speech; and besides the loyal democrats of DeKalb county are determined to place their own worthy nominee in that office this year.

—Cherries and raspberries are as abundant as water, and that is saying "a heap."

—Mrs. Spencer Dills, of Butler, and Mrs. John L. Davis, of this place, went Tuesday afternoon to Ann Arbor, where they will remain until Saturday or Monday.

—One of the new concrete walks has been laid across Seventh street, at the intersection of Main, which is to be paid for jointly by Sherm. Hollister, W. H. Kiblinger, Tom Scott and the town of Auburn. If it proves a success as a cross-walk, more will be put down.

—Messrs. Miller & Getrost, W. H. Kiblinger, and S. C. Swineford have each put down new sidewalks in front of their respective business places this week. That of the Swineford house is the same as those in the court-yard—cement—and it makes a handsome walk. Let more of our business men and property owners go and do likewise.

—Rachel Darr, Hannah Gasbey, Edward Howdard and Edward Sawvell were conveyed last Monday to the insane asylum by Sheriff Leas and Deputy Somers, the former for treatment and the latter three as incurables. A certain per cent. of the incurable insane are now admitted from each county, and DeKalb, we understand, is entitled to five.

—Matson's hardware-store at Pleasant Lake was burglarized Friday night, and about seventy dollars' worth of knives, razors, revolvers, etc., were stolen. The thieves, two men and a boy, were captured at St. Joe, and while conveying them to Angola in a wagon the boy leaked out through a crack in the wagon-bed; at all events, he turned up beautifully scarce. The men will doubtless go "over the road."

—Mr. Murray, the agent at Pleasant Lake for the Jackson road, had a little episode last Sunday which, though serious for the time, turned out happily and was highly ludicrous. While boatriding on the lake, in company with Miss Williamson of Waterloo, he made a few dextrous strokes of his oars, by which the boat was capsized and the occupants piled into the refreshing waters of the lake. A bath, in warm weather, is delightful, but such impromptu affairs are always unpleasant, to say the least.

—In spite of his protestations to the contrary, we knew it was coming—knew it all the time. We refer, by-the-way, to the marriage of Brother E. Zimmerman, editor of the Valparaiso Messenger, which occurred Thursday evening of last week, at Valparaiso. Ah, Zim, you sly old coon, you worked it very "slick," and that all the undertakings of yourself and wife may be equally happy and successful in the future, bringing ducats to your pockets and pleasure to your home, is the sincerest wish the COURIER can make for you.

—A number of the youngsters here are talking of attending the celebration at Garrett, July 3d.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealousy is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-tf

THE WORD OF THE KING.

BY MARY H. KROUT.

The King said "Nay:"
The reapers sang among the corn,
The grapes turned purple on the vine
And when the fruitful fields were shorn
There was no dearth of bread or wine.

The old man by his fireside dreamed,
His wife beside him sat and spun;
Across the shining waters gleamed
The red sails in the setting sun.

They who had plighted troths were wed;
The babe untroubled, smiled or wept
Upon its mother's breast; the dead
Were buried where their kindred slept.

The city's crowded streets were filled
With busy throngs that came and went,
The nation's heart with joy was thrilled,
And songs with all its prayers were blent.

The King said "Yes:"
And war stretched forth its vengeful hand;
The fields with the unburied slain
Were strewn; in all the prosperous land
Were desolation, woe and pain.

Where peace had been, went sword and fire,
In ruin town and city shared;
The wife, the wailing babe, the sire
Together died and none were spared.

A LOVER'S QUARREL.

I could not hear all that they must have said;
But as I sat beside the little stream
I watched them part with just one angry word.
She passed me quickly, with a down drooped head,
Red cheeks, eyes flashing with a scornful gleam,
A hasty step, as by deep passion stirred.
She did not turn, nor look back where he stood,
But vanished quickly in the thick green wood.

I watched him sigh, then noted how he gazed
At her retreating form; he whistled low
And softly to himself; in deepest thought
He whispered, "Is she vexed?"—then was amazed
That 'twas, in truth, she really meant to go.
He looked once more, as if indeed he sought
To bring her back, but on she went that day—
Then he went too—but 'twas the other way.

They never met again; but oft I see
The girl, a woman grown, come by this seat,
And gaze into the stream with tear worn eyes!
And then I wonder why such things should be!
If she had turned her head, or stayed her feet,
Life would have altered, love's bright sunny skies
Shone o'er her forever! 'Tis but things like this
That form our lives, and make our woe or bliss!

DOLLY AND DAN.

"Dorothy—Dorothy Waldo!" screamed Miss Lorinda Cross ("cross by name and cross by nature," the children—yes, and many of the grown-ups—of the neighborhood declare her), as she pounced upon the huge loaf of bread which she had taken from the oven and put into the big stone crock only half an hour ago, just before she turned her straight-up-and-down back on the kitchen, to stalk to the garret after "that idle hussy, Molly"—the maid-of-all-work—"who had been twice as long as she ought to have been making the beds there."

I said the huge loaf. I should have said half the huge loaf, for only that proportion of the newly baked bread remained.

"Dor-o-thy Wal-do!" again screamed Miss Cross, in an ascending scale, with an ominous tremolo on the last note.

"Yes, aunt," replied a sweet, fresh young voice; and a pretty young girl came in from the garden, with a basket of cherry-red currants in her hand.

A tiny thing she was, with round dimpled, rosy face, innocent child-like blue-gray eyes, and fair hair, some short tresses of which had escaped from the braid into which they had been bound, and were making a delightful use of their freedom by curling in the most charming manner about the low frank brow and little pink-tipped ears.

About "sweet sixteen," a stranger would have pronounced her; but Dolly, as her youthful companions, much to the disgust of her aunt Lorinda, called her, was older than that by a year and a half.

An orphan at the age of twelve, she had been left to the care of the only relative she knew, her mother's elder sister—a woman hard of speech and manners, and anything but soft in heart. This maiden lady soured irrevocably on her twenty-fourth birthday, which should have also been her wedding day; but at the very moment she was fastening the orange blossoms in her hair, had come the news that her betrothed had eloped with the girl-friend she had chosen for her bridesmaid. Lorinda tore the bridal wreath into fragments, and scattered it to the winds; never mentioned the false pair from that hour, banished forever all the womanly grace and tenderness she had ever possessed (truth to tell, she had never possessed much), and became the hardest worker of her sex that ever worked upon a farm. In a man's boots, coat, and hat, early and late, hot or cold, wet or dry, with set mouth, lowering brow, and silent lips, she toiled side by side with her sturdy old father, until the day he was struck down by the pitiless sun, and died a few hours after—died just in time to be saved the pang of hearing that his youngest and favorite daughter was lying at the point of death, widowed and friendless, in a far-away city. Lorinda buried her father—if she wept for him, none saw her—promoted a man who had been long in his employment to the position she used herself to occupy, and started for her sister's bedside. When she returned to Fernville again, she brought dear little fair-haired, soft-eyed Dorothy with her, and some of her neighbors fancied that since that time she had been a shade less stern; but if she had been, it was so slight a shade that it was almost impossible to perceive it. True, she did less out-of-door work, and devoted part of the time thus saved to teaching her niece to sew and cook and churn, and other like accomplishments; but never were the lessons accompanied by an approving smile or kindly word, much less a loving kiss. Even to the gentle, winning child, Lorinda Cross remained a cold stern woman. But Dorothy was so sunny in disposition that the stern ways and dark face of her aunt could not cloud her young life. And though shut out from that inflexible woman's heart, she found the doors of all other hearts wide open to her. The dogs, the cats, the hens, the chickens, the horses, the cows, the calves, the very geese, regarded her with adoration. The farm laborers blessed her pretty face whenever she came among them; and as for Molly—poor hard-worked Molly!—she would have kissed the ground the little feet trod upon.

What wonder, then, that Dan Howell, the young surveyor, who lived half a mile away, in the old stone cottage, and whom she had known from the very first day of her arrival in Fernville (when he, then a tall, bright-faced boy of fifteen, passing her aunt's gate, and seeing the sad-looking little girl, in her black dress, standing by it, silently offered her the prettiest white rabbit she had ever seen—a rabbit he had been coaxing Abner Brown for a month past to sell him, and which now he parted with, without another thought, at sight of those lovely tearful eyes and that sweet wistful face)—what wonder, I say, that he "thought of her by day, and dreamed of her by night?"

But to go back. Dorothy came smiling into the kitchen, her lips and cheeks as red as the currants she carried; but the smile faded away when she met her aunt's irate gaze.

"Did you cut this loaf, and then leave it here in this hot room to dry to a chip?" demanded Miss Cross; and then she added, emphatically, without waiting for an answer: "But of course you did. No one else would have dared to do it. And how dared you, knowing that I never allow bread to be cut in my house until it is at least a day old?"

"I am sorry, aunt," began Dolly; "but he looked so hungry!"

"'He!'" screamed her aunt, regarding her with a look of horror. "You gave it away, then! And to a 'he!' A tramp, I've no doubt, who will come back some night, to rob the house, and murder us all."

"Please, aunt," entreated the young girl, "don't be so angry. He wasn't a tramp; indeed he wasn't; but a handsome young fellow with long golden hair—"

"A wig," snarled Miss Cross.

"And the most beautiful blue eyes," Dolly went on, "I ever saw in all my life. And he wasn't near the house. And he didn't ask for anything. Oh, do listen, aunt, while I tell you all about it. I was on my knees in the path, picking up some currants I had let fall, when I saw him, through the hole in the hedge Brownie's calf made the other day, coming slowly up the lane—"

"If you had been looking at what you were doing, you wouldn't have seen him," said her grim listener.

"He didn't see me, of course," said Dolly, "or I shouldn't have looked at him so intently. And, oh, Aunt Lorinda, it was just looking at a picture!"

"Stuff!" said Miss Cross.

"He was so handsome, and so dusty, and so shabby, poor fellow! And he sat down under the old tree, took a crust of bread out of his pocket, and began to eat it as though he was very, very hungry. That went to my heart."

"Rubbish!" said her aunt.

"And I got up softly and ran into the house, and cut a slice—"

"A slice! Great grief!" interrupted Aunt Lorinda. "A piece big enough for the breakfast of a whole family."

"And I buttered it."

"You buttered it."

"Yes aunt; I only took the butter that was left in the dish."

"Half a pound! You go without butter for a week."

"And I ran out again, and into the lane, as fast as I could," continued Dorothy, apparently undismayed by this threat, "for fear I might lose courage; and stopping suddenly before him, I put the bread in his hand, and said, 'I am so sorry for you!' and turned to run away, when he seized my hand and kissed it," (Miss Lorinda Cross became rigid as marble) "and said, 'These are the first kind words I've heard since I came to this beastly country. Tell me your name little one.' 'Dorothy Waldo,' said I. 'Dorothy Waldo,' he repeated; 'I shall never forget it;' and he raised his hat and went away. Dear aunt, had you been in my place, would you not have done as I did?"

"I?" cried Aunt Lorinda—"I carry meals to strange men on the public highway? I let a foreigner who called my country 'a beastly country' kiss my hand? No, indeed; he never would kissed my hand."

"Perhaps not," said Dolly, with a momentary twinkle in her eyes, and then she added, pleadingly, "But don't be angry any longer, aunt. I'll make another loaf of bread right away."

"But that won't bring back what you have wasted," said her inflexible relative. "A pretty wife you'd be for a man who hasn't a dollar to call his own, giving away bread by the loaf and butter by the pound" (Miss Cross had retained at least one womanly trait—a slight tendency to exaggeration) "to all the thieves and tramps who happen to come along."

"Oh, aunt!" exclaimed her niece; "he looked like a prince."

"A prince!"—with a snort of scorn. "Your head is turned by that trashy poetry you read. A prince! A likely story—in shabby clothes and nibbling a crust! A disguised burglar, in my opinion. But burglar or no burglar," she continued, it must be confessed with some irrelevancy, "you shall never marry a man who hasn't a dollar to call his own, with my consent, and if ever you marry without my consent you make a liar of your mother in her grave."

"Aunt, I have told you again and again," said Dorothy, firmly but gently, "that I never would. I have not forgotten my mother's last commands."

"Then don't be encouraging that Daniel Howell to meet you every tack and turn; and if you must have some one to walk home from church with you—I can go and come by myself, thank heaven!—there's Arthur Brown, and he has a thousand dollars in the bank."

"But, aunt, I've known Dan so long, and he is away so much, that when he is at home I feel as though—I mean, I mean, I wouldn't like to hurt his feelings."

"Bah!" retorted the grim maiden. "Men have no feelings. And as for knowing him a long time, I think you've known him quite long enough."

"But if he had a thousand dollars, instead of Abner Brown?" questioned Dolly, with more spirit than she had yet shown.

"That would be in his favor, certainly. But he hasn't and never will have, with that old father and mother depending upon him. A thousand dollars, indeed! Where would he get it? The sooner you forget Daniel Howell and the sooner Daniel Howell puts you out out of his head, the better."

"There's no need for you to talk so loud, aunt" said the little girl, indignantly; and then, startled by the look of malicious triumph on her aunt's face, Dorothy looked around, just in time to receive a farewell bow from Daniel Howell as he turned from the door.

"He heard me," said Miss Cross, "I'm glad he did; 'twill save trouble."

"Oh, Aunt Lorinda, how can you be so cruel?" said poor Dolly, bursting into tears.

A year and a half passed away, during which, owing to his frequent absence and Miss Lorinda's watchful care, Dolly and her lover had met but three or four times. "It's hard," said the young man, on the last of these occasions, "to know that I can not ask your aunt for your hand because I have not a thousand dollars of my own, when I know that there is plenty of room and love and everything for you at the old stone cottage. Oh, Dolly, I'd make you my wife this moment!"

"Dan," interrupted the girl, with dewy eyes, "it isn't her anger—though I feel that it would be most ungrateful in me to provoke it—but the promise my mother made for me on her deathbed. And if it had not been for that promise, Dan, you must remember, I should have been the inmate of an orphan asylum, and we would never have met." Adding, the sunshine coming back again, "Don't you see how much worse things could have been?"

"You are right, my darling, as you always are," said Dan; "but think—it may be years before I have 'the bond.'"

"I can wait, Dan. Yes"—with a mischievous little laugh—"I can wait until I am as old as Aunt Lorinda."

"God forbid, love!" he said, catching her in his arms and kissing her sweet lips. "And now good-bye; I am going away again to-morrow, to be gone I can not tell you how long. Oh, Dolly, heaven speed the time when a little wife shall be waiting with the old father and mother at the stone cottage to welcome me home!"

She raised herself on tiptoe, clasped his face between her two tiny hands, gazed into his eyes with a wealth of tenderness in her own, and said, "Who knows? Good fortune may at this very moment be on its way to us."

And the very next day, January 3d, 1880, as Dorothy, with a crimson shawl thrown over her head, was out in the garden scattering crumbs on the snow for the sparrows, she heard the jingling of sleigh-bells, and Farmer Beers came down the lane with a sled-load of wood. "Mornin', Miss Dorothy," he called, as he reined up at the back gate. "Here's a letter for you. They thought it might be important, at the office, and so, knowin' how keerful I be, and that I was comin' this way, they asked me to fetch it to you." And the old man tossed the letter over the hedge, into the girl's outstretched hands, and drove off.

"A letter for me!" said Dolly, in tones of great amazement. "Why, I never received a letter before in all my life!" Then she turned it about, and inspected it curiously. The envelope was a common large yellow one, and bore the printed address of a law firm in an adjoining city, as well as her own address, written in a plain legal hand. "Who can it be from?" wondered Dolly; and then opened it, to find her question but partly answered. A sheet of blue paper and a smaller envelope were enclosed. The paper contained, in the same hand which addressed the letter, these lines:

"Miss Dorothy Waldo:

"DEAR MADAM—We send you the accompaning check in compliance with orders receiving to that effect from a client in Europe whose interests in this country we represent. Please acknowledge receipt.

"Your obedient servants,
"FIND & PROVE.

"January 1, 1880."

Dolly's lovely eyes opened to their widest extent. "A check!" she exclaimed, and with trembling fingers tore open the second envelope, which was also addressed to her, but in a different, more elegant hand; and sure enough there was a check—a check for a thousand dollars, payable to the order of Miss Dorothy Waldo. And on a slip of paper which had kept its company were these words: "In payment for a slice—a very large slice—of bread and butter." And that's all the young girl ever knew about it.

For one moment she stood dazed with joy and astonishment. The next she thought of Dan. Perhaps he had not started yet. How could she get to him through the deep snow? Sleigh-bells again. Farmer Beers coming back without the wood. She ran out into the lane. "Oh, do take me with you!" she cried, to the great surprise of the honest old fellow. "I must see Dan—Mr. Howell, I mean. I must see him as soon as possible."

"Jump right in, my dear," said the old man, "and I'll have you at the stone cottage in a jiffy."

Away they went, the gray mare making excellent time—for her; and as they neared the house, Dolly caught sight of Dan just leaving it.

"Dan! Dan!" she called, her clear young voice ringing on the cold air, and madly waved her crimson shawl.

Dan turned, saw the bright flag and her sweet face below it, and came bounding over the snow in time to receive her in his arms as she jumped from the sled.

"You couldn't—no, not if you guessed forever," she said, half crying and half laughing—"you couldn't guess what brought me here this morning."

"Whatever it was, heaven bless it a thousand times!" said the lover.

"It is—leap-year you know, Dan."

"Yes, now I think of it, it is. But it can't be possible you have come here to propose to me?"

"Very possible indeed," answered Dolly, slowly and deliberately. "Mr. Daniel Howell, will you marry me?"

Mr. Daniel Howell's only reply was to fold her in so close an embrace that, being the tiniest of maidens, she almost disappeared from view.

"And has Miss Cross—" he began, when the pretty blushing face, all dimpled with smiles, was raised against his own.

"No, she has not," interrupted Dolly, "She knows nothing about it. But its all right, Dan," carefully tucking something with her dainty left hand—Dan held the right—into the breast pocket of his overcoat. "You may come and see Aunt Lorinda as soon as you choose. You didn't know it, Dan dear, but you've got a thousand dollars."

REMINISCENCES OF THE WAR.

[From the Boston Transcript.]

BUT this same Ohio regiment did one thing that the boys hold in dear remembrance. The day they left for home they "went through" a sutler's establishment, and when they had finished it it was cleaner than a schoolboy's face on Sunday morning. Of course it was naughty in them; but they had suffered the sutler's extortions so long that you couldn't blame them so very much. At least, the boys didn't.

HE was a brave fellow and a true soldier. The regiment had been ordered up for a charge at Cold Harbor. Amid the incessant rain of bullets, an occasional shell came screaming over our heads. He said more than once, "I don't mind these pesky bullets, but I don't like them shells." Another scream, an explosion, and the headless body of our dear comrade lay in the dust. Was it a presentiment.

HE was an inveterate smoker, and a cosmopolitan. He cared not whose pipe he smoked so long as it was filled. Taking up a T. D. that lay on the bunk of a tent, he lighted his match and began puffing away, when presto! bang! his face was lost to sight in a cloud of smoke that was not tobacco smoke, and the air was filled with pipe shreds. He expressed no astonishment. He merely remarked, "By thunder! that's the third time that's been played on me to-day."

IT was at the Battle of the Mine. The Johnnies had made a charge on our front, but the earthwork that our boys had thrown up was something they were not prepared for. They wavered, and were soon thrown into confusion. A dare devil private—one of those fellows that were found in every regiment, who spent half his time in the guard-house—was over the embankment in an instant, and with copious profanity, which want of space compels us to omit, he was driving in the rebs as one would drive sheep. Of course he was promoted to the stripes, but before he could have them sewed on to his blouse, some new outbreak of his irrepressible nature sent him to the guard house again, which canceled the "stripes" forever.

WHO can forget a certain Ohio resiment, enlisted for one hundred days? We were behind the earthworks on the Bermunda front when these giants of the West—for they were giants almost every man of them—came hurrying in from the front, more like a mob than soldiers. Of course we asked what the matter was. One six-footer, of loquacious tone, explained. He had got a sight of the rebs. "Oh," said he, "they are terrible looking fellers; awful dirty and ragged." "Were you in the fight?" we asked. "No; we wasn't in the fight; we only followed and held on to what the skrimmagers took. The fust thing I knew one of our fellers got struck smack in the foot. I tell yer, we thought it was about time to pile out o' that," was his remark, as he moved on.

People Who Live Near the Pole.

The Rome correspondent of the Philadelphia Bulletin, speaking of the Cinkici, a remarkable people discovered by the Swedish explorers of the North Pole region, says: The people found there were not precisely savages—they were clothed (roughly, perhaps)—but they were clothed in skins of reindeer or seal. Their costume might not perhaps suit Parisian taste, but it was adaptable to their clime. It is composed of reindeer skin stockings lined with eider-down, reindeer or sealskin boots reaching to the knees, and under these, again, reindeer of sealskin trousers, over which are worn in extra cold weather other trousers lined with fur. And then a tunic, coat, or blouse of the same materials reached to the knees, and, according to the weather, several of these are worn one over the other. For the head they wear a cap to match the rest of the charming costume, and this cap is tied under the chin like a baby's cap. Finally they wear over their chests a kind of bib of sealskins, which bib they draw over their faces, when the air threatens to bite their noses.

The very fashionable people of the country fasten tails of animals to the edges of their coats. This is to show you that they are rich, as their riches consist in reindeer, some families possessing as many as 100,000 of these animals. The ladies wear the same costume as the gentlemen, which gives them a strange and awkward walk. However, as a little distinction, they wear their hair in two long plaits at the side of each cheek, and their neck and back are bare. It seems that the cold has less effect on them than on their lords. It is true that when they have young children they carry them on their backs, and that shelters them. Both men and women are short of stature, but stout and wonderfully strong, as they can walk for miles with burdens on their backs which we Europeans could not even lift. Their faces are large and broad and they have no foreheads. In this the women would be quite the fashion in Europe, where the ladies do all they can to conceal their foreheads.

A Teacher of Pocket-Picking.

Twenty years ago Chester established a school in London dedicated to the devotees of St. Nicholas, and he speedily obtained many pupils. The most well-known and skillful pickpockets who have paid the penalty of being caught, and those who were clever enough to evade the clutches of the myrmidons of the law, have all been molded according to the Chesterian method. And, when it is stated that in twenty years Chester had been able to amass a fortune of £50,000 sterling, the great importance and efficacy of his lessons will be thoroughly appreciated. His pupils, on leaving his institution, were formed into bands of ten under the guidance of a "schoolmaster;" and it was under the ægis of this ever-watchful guardian that they overran the earth. Two-thirds of the "profits" were faithfully and punctually paid to the illustrious professor. Chester demeaned himself but twice in his career by "working" personally; it was at Paris, during the last two exhibitions. In 1878 he was arrested and condemned to six months' imprisonment; and he was, moreover, prohibited from ever entering France again. He has since disposed of the good-will of his "business" to two of his best pupils and retired to Birmingham, where he has a great deal of property. Having some very urgent affairs to settle in Paris, he applied, a few days ago, for permission to pass a week in this capital, which was duly accorded him. But as it was not deemed advisable to allow a man of his capacity to roam about the city without let or hindrance, two police agents have been told off to act as an escort of surveillance. Chester is 65 years old, and is the father of ten children, whom he has educated in a princely manner, and he himself is master of several languages. —Paris Cor. Geneva Continent.

A GREAT many emigrants of the better class of farmers are coming into Southern Indiana from Kentucky. They are provided with good teams, farm implements, live stock, and plenty of household goods.

MRS. SUDITH, of Hanover, the lady so horribly burned by the explosion of a coal-oil can, two weeks ago, died Saturday, at 1 o'clock. Her sufferings cannot be imagined, much less described, and the fact that she lived so long in her crisped, cooked condition was a surprise even to her physicians.

HENRY BRITTIAN, of Richmond, fell from the second-story window while asleep, struck on a lumber pile and bounced into a cistern seven or eight feet distant. When some workmen who saw him fall ran to him he was still asleep. They waked him up, and he went to work as if nothing had happened. Hard to swallow!

A WOMAN in Crawford county has borne six children since the 30th of January, 1879, on which day she bore three fully-developed boys, but they all died within forty-eight hours. On June 1, 1880, she bore three more fully-developed boys, all dying, however, within twenty-four hours. She is now in good health.

A TERRIFIC tornado swept over the country two miles north of Shelbyville, one evening last week, doing much damage to farm property. Several dwellings and outbuildings were destroyed. A man named Clark got entangled in some branches and was carried thirty feet into the air and then dashed to the ground. The injuries he received will, it is feared, prove fatal.

HON. SAMUEL B. GOOKINS, formerly a prominent and much-respected member of the Chicago bar, died suddenly at his residence at Terre Haute, the other night. He was a Circuit Judge in Indiana from 1850 till 1856, when he was elected a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State. He went to Chicago in 1858, and practiced law there until 1875, when he returned to his former place of residence—Terre Haute. Judge Gookins was a native of Vermont, a most estimable gentleman, and 71 years of age.

EVANSVILLE Our Age: Quite a strange thing came to our ears this morning. A colored man in "Paul's lay" was the husband, by the slave custom, of a woman on the place. At the breaking out of the war he gave up all for sweet liberty. Having lost all trace of his wife, he had married a woman in Memphis, and for three years has lived in Evansville. Yesterday he met his first wife on the street. Each recognized the other, and found they had been living within two squares of each other for more than a year. The woman has had two husbands since the first left. Truth really is stranger than fiction.

MOSES BOX has been arrested at New Albany charged with the murder of the late Capt. John Box by poison, and the poisoning of six other members of the family. He was the Captain's nephew and a member of the family; and a motive for the crime is thought to be found in the fact that he was opposed in his matrimonial choice by his uncle and aunt. After the family were stricken down, Moses Box married the girl to whom he was devoted. This was six weeks ago. The information against him comes from her rival, the girl he did not marry.

A HORRIBLE tragedy took place one day last week about eleven miles east of Indianapolis, the victims being John Williams, a colored farmer, and his wife. Williams was killed, but the wife still lives, though in a precarious and unconscious state. The circumstances connected with the outrage hardly give a clew as to the perpetrators. The woman was first discovered in her cabin, bleeding from several dangerous wounds and bruises, and, from the answers given to questions addressed to her, it was thought her husband had committed the deed; but the discovery of Williams' dead body about a mile from the house with the head crushed in a shapeless mass, and in such a way that suicide was out of the question, dispelled this idea. Some trouble existed between the unfortunate couple and a colored neighbor, named McClure, and suspicion points to McClure's son as the murderer, who has been arrested.

Work Doesn't Hurt.

Made crazy by hard work is the report concerning a very active business man in Troy. It will do to call it that, although the trouble comes generally from another direction. It is not so much the hard work that crazes and kills men of business as it is the close application and the inevitable worry of mind. The man who cannot possess his soul in patience has no right to carry on a large business. It is suicide, slow, perhaps, but not the less certain. There are some men who manage their business until it reaches a certain magnitude, after which it manages them and runs away with them. Plain work seldom hurts people, be it ever so hard. It is the mental anxiety, caused by the perplexities of an unmanageable business, that vexes and frets and worries a man out of his equilibrium. No amount of pecuniary success can ever pay for this.—Philadelphia Times.

GOV. TILDEN'S LETTER OF WITHDRAWAL.

NEW YORK, June 18, 1880.

To the Delegates from the State of New York to the Democratic National Convention:

Your first assembling is an occasion on which it is proper for me to state to you my relation to the nomination for the Presidency, which you and your associates are commissioned to make in behalf of the Democratic party of the United States. Having passed my early years in an atmosphere filled with the traditions of the war which secured our national independence, and of the struggles which made our continental system a Government for the people, by the people, I learned to idolize the institutions of my country, and was educated to believe it the duty of a citizen of the republic to take his fair allotment of care and trouble in public affairs. I fulfilled that duty to the best of my ability for forty years as a private citizen, although during all my life giving at least as much thought to public affairs as to all other objects. I have never accepted official service except for a brief period. For a special purpose and only when the occasion seemed to require of me that sacrifice of private preference to public interests, my life has been substantially that of a private citizen. It was, I presume, the success of efforts in which as a private citizen I had shared to overthrow a corrupt combination then holding dominion in our metropolis, and to purify the judiciary, which had become its tool, that induced the Democracy of the State in 1874 to nominate me for Governor. This was done in spite of the protests of a minority that the part I had borne in those reforms had created antagonism fatal to me as a candidate. I felt constrained to accept the nomination as the most certain means of putting the power of the gubernatorial office on the side of reform and of removing the impression wherever it prevailed that the faithful discharge of one's duty as a citizen is fatal to his usefulness as a public servant. The breaking of the canal ring, the better management of our public works, the large reduction of taxes, and other reforms accomplished during my administration doubtless occasioned my nomination for the Presidency by the Democracy of the Union in the hope that similar processes would be applied to the Federal Government. From the responsibilities of such an undertaking, appalling as it seemed to me, I did not feel at liberty to shrink. In the canvass which ensued the Democratic party represented reform in the administration of the Federal Government, and a restoration of our complex political system to the pure ideas of its founders. Upon these issues the people of the United States, by a majority of more than a quarter of a million, chose a majority of the electors to cast their votes for the Democratic candidates for President and Vice President. It is my right and privilege here to say that I was nominated and elected to the Presidency absolutely free from any engagement in respect to the exercise of its power or the disposal of its patronage. Through the whole period of my relation to the Presidency I did everything in my power to elevate, and nothing to lower, moral standards in the competition of parties. By what nefarious means the basis for a false count was laid in several of the States I need not recite. These are now matters of history, about which whatever diversity of opinion may have existed in either of the great parties of the country at the time of their consummation has practically disappeared. I refused to ransom from the Returning Boards of the Southern States the documentary evidence, by the suppression of which and by the substitution of fraudulent and forged papers, a pretext was made for the perpetration of a false count. The constitutional duty of the two houses of Congress to count the electoral votes as cast and to give effect to the will of the people as expressed by their suffrages was never fulfilled.

An Electoral Commission, for the existence of which I have no responsibility, was formed and to it the two houses of Congress abdicated their duty to make the count by a law enacting that the count of the commission should stand as final unless overruled by the concurrent action of the two houses. Its false count was not overruled owing to the complicity of a Republican Senate with the Republican majority of the commission. Controlled by its Republican majority of eight to seven, the Electoral Commission counted out the men elected by the people and counted in the men not elected by the people.

A subversion of the election created a new issue for the decision of the people of the United States transcending in importance all questions of administration. It involved the vital principle of self-government through elections by the people. The immense growth of the means of corrupt influence over the ballot-box, which is at the disposal of the party having possession of the executive administration, had already become a present evil, and a great danger tending to make elections irresponsive to public opinion, hampering the power of the people to change their rulers, and enabling the men holding the machinery of Government to continue and perpetuate their power. It was my opinion in 1876 that the opposition attempting to change the administration needed to include at least two-thirds of the voters at the opening of the canvass in order to retain a majority at the election. If, after such obstacles had been overcome, and a majority of the people had voted to change the administration of this Government, the men in office could still procure a false count founded upon frauds, perjuries, and forgeries, furnishing a pretext of documentary evidence on which to base that false count, and if such a transaction were only successful, but if after allotment of its benefits were made to its contrivers, abettors, and apologists by the chief beneficiary of the transaction, it were condoned by the people, a practical destruction of elections by the people would have been accomplished.

The failure to install the candidates chosen by the people—a contingency consequent upon no act or mission of mine and beyond my control—has thus left me for the last three years, and until now, when the Democratic party by its delegates in National Convention assembled, shall choose a new leader, the involuntary but necessary representative of this momentous issue. As such denied the immunities of private life without the powers conferred by public station, subject to unceasing falsehoods and calumnies from the partisans of an administration laboring in vain to justify its existence, I have, nevertheless, steadfastly endeavored to preserve to the Democratic party of the United States the supreme issue before the people for their decision next November—whether this shall be a Government by the sovereign people through elections, or a Government by discarded servants holding over by force and fraud. And I have withheld no sacrifice and neglected no opportunity to uphold, organize, consolidate against the enemies of representative institutions the great party which alone under God can effectually resist their overthrow. Having now borne faithfully my full share of labor and care in the public service, and wearing the marks of its burdens, I desire nothing so much as an honorable discharge. I wish to lay down the honors and toils of even quasi-party leadership, and to seek the repose of private life. In renouncing the renomination and re-election indispensable to an effectual vindication of the right of the people to elect their rulers violated in my person, I have accorded as long a reserve of my decision as possible, but I cannot overcome my repugnance to enter into a new engagement which involves four years of ceaseless toil. The dignity of the Presidential office is above a merely personal ambition, but it creates in me no illusion. Its value is as a great power for good to the country. I said four years ago, in accepting the nomination: "Knowing as I do, therefore, from fresh experience, how great the difference is between gliding through an official routine, and working out a reform of systems and policies, it is impossible for me to contemplate what needs to be done in the Federal administration without an anxious sense of the difficulties of the undertaking. If summoned by the suffrages of my countrymen to attempt this work, I shall endeavor, with God's help, to be the efficient instrument of their will."

Such a work of renovation, after many years of misrule, such a reform of systems and policies to which I would carefully have sacrificed all that remained to me of health and life is now, I fear, beyond my strength. With unfeigned thanks for the honors bestowed on me, with a heart swelling with emotions of gratitude to the Democratic masses for the support which they have given to the cause I represented, and their steadfast confidence in [illegible] emergency, I remain your fellow-citizen, [illegible]

THE DE GOLYER CASE.

The Official Record of Garfield's Connection with the Notorious Paving Contract.

The following is the summary of the record of the case brought by Chittenden vs. McClelland, in the courts of Cook county, Ill. It tells the whole story of Gen. Garfield's connection with the De Golyer contracts:

State of Illinois, Cook County Circuit Court. George R. Chittenden vs. Robert McClelland et al. May term, 1875; before Farwell, Circuit Judge. No. 12,181.—The plaintiff, by E. A. Storrs, Esq., brought suit against the defendants, upon a contract, by which they agreed to pay one-third of all the profits upon all paving contracts which he would obtain for De Golyer and McClelland from Boards of Public Works in Eastern cities. The declaration alleged that he obtained a contract for paving 200,000 square yards from the Board of Public Works of the District of Columbia, at $3.50 per yard, when it would cost only $1.50 to lay it down. That the profits were $400,000, and claimed the defendants should pay him $100,000, at least.

The defendants pleaded in substance:

1. That the contract was void on its face.

2. That it was obtained by the plaintiff by improper influence, against public policy, and therefore was void. The plea set out that it was obtained mainly through the official influence of James A. Garfield, then a member of Congress and Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives; that Garfield was to receive a fee of $5,000 for obtaining it; that the contract contained a clause for 50,000 additional square yards contingent upon an appropriation to be made by Congress; that by the usual course of business all bills for such appropriations came from the committee of which said Garfield was then Chairman; that he did subsequently report a bill appropriating $1,241,000, out of which said pavement could be paid for; and that for his influence and services he did receive the sum of $5,000.

Another plea set out the facts above stated and alleged that the said plaintiff, and said Garfield, and said Board of Public Works then well knew that it was not the arguments of said Garfield as a lawyer, but his influence as a member of Congress having power on the appropriations to be made, that the plaintiff had sought and obtained and paid for; and therefore the contract was illegal, against public policy and void.

The plaintiff demurred to these pleas; the defendants joined in demurrer.

The court sustained the pleas, and held that the contract was void as against public policy.

Mr. J. R. Doolittle, who appeared as counsel for the defendants, submitted, among others, the following points, in writing, May 14, 1875, Judge Farwell presiding:

"4. The pleas are good. They set out in substance that the contract was obtained by the plaintiff of the Board of Public Works of the District of Columbia by improper influences. That the contract was in part—to the amount of 50,000 square yards—upon its face, contingent upon a future appropriation to be made by Congress; that the plaintiff employed James A. Garfield, then being a member of Congress and Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, agreeing to pay him a contingent fee of $5,000, provided he would obtain the said contract of the Board of Public Works; that by his influence and persuasion he did procure the same, for which he received the sum of $5,000. That afterward a bill was reported from the committee of which he was Chairman, and did pass the House, and pass Congress, and became a law, appropriating the sum of $1,241,000 out of which the payment under said contract could be paid for by said Board of Public Works; that the plaintiff, and the defendant, and the said Garfield, and the members of said Board of Public Works well knew at the time of his said employment, and at the time of his services in procuring said contract, that said Garfield, from his official position, did and would have a potent influence in procuring the passage of such appropriation to carry such contract into effect, by said Board of Public Works, and that by means of the premises the said contract was, in fact, obtained by improper influences, against public policy, and is void.

"5. It is no sufficient answer to say that Garfield was at the same time a member of the legal profession. His being a member of Congress at the same time, any employment as counsel upon a contingent fee, or otherwise, to obtain a contract from a board of public officers, dependent upon the future action of Congress to fulfill, is against public policy and void.

"6. That the plaintiff Chittenden well knew and intended that the influence of Gen. Garfield, as a member of Congress, was to be used in procuring the contract, rather than his arguments as a counsellor at law, is evident from his letter to the defendants, set out in their special plea, in which he says: 'The influence of Gen. Garfield has been secured by yesterday, last night, and to-day's labors. He carries the purse of the United States—the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—and is the strongest man in Congress, and with our friends my demand is to-day, not less than $100,000 more—$200,000 in all. Everything is in the best shape, the connections complete, and, I have reason to believe, satisfactory. * * * I can hardly realize that we have Gen. Garfield with us. It is rare, and very gratifying. All the appropriations of the District come from him.'

"In the recent case of Burke vs. Child, not yet reported (May, 1875), decided at the last October term in the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. Justice Swayne, in a very able opinion, reviews all the cases, and holds: That a contract, express or implied, for purely professional services, is valid. Within this category he includes drafting a petition, attendance on taking testimony, collecting facts, preparing arguments, and submitting them orally or in writing to a committee or other proper authority.

"But such services are separated by a broad line from personal solicitation, and from official influence.

"The agreement with Gen. Garfield, a member of Congress, to pay him $5,000 as a contingent fee for procuring a contract, which was itself made to depend upon a future appropriation by Congress, which appropriation could only come from a committee of which he was Chairman, was a sale of official influence, which no veil can cover, against the plainest principles of public policy. 'No counsellor at law while holding high office (much less a minister of the gospel, etc.) has a right to put himself in a position of temptation, and, under pretense of making a legal argument, exert his official influence upon public officers, dependent upon his future action.'

"Certainly the courts of justice will never lend themselves to enforce contracts obtained by such influence."

The demurrer was overruled, the pleas held to be good, and that the contract was void as against public policy.

All these matters appear by the records of the Circuit Court of Cook county, in case No. 12,181.

A TURKISH journal, commenting on the elevation of Mr. Gladstone to the Premiership, asserts that he was a Bulgarian. "His father was a pig dealer in the valley of Kustendje," says the veracious chronicler, "and young Gladstone ran away at the age of 16 to Servia, and was then, with another pig dealer, sent to London to sell pigs. He stole the proceeds, changed his name from Trogadeir to Gladstone, and became a British subject. Fortune favored him until he became Prime Minister. Gladstone has no virtues."

JANE GRAY, of Palmo, Miss., had two ardent lovers, and made her choice between them. The rejected suitor was greatly cast down by his failure. Jane told him that he had no real reason for regret, as she had a twin sister who was so much like her that strangers could not distinguish any difference.

GARFIELD AND CREDIT MOBILIER.

The Testimony Taken Against Him—A Record [illegible].

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

The Credit Mobilier stock is the one that made the most profound impression upon the public mind. The Times correspondent was present in Judge Poland's committee-room, in the winter of 1873, when Gen. Garfield appeared there as a witness in his own defense, and is able to present a picture of that scene that does not depend on hearsay for his evidence. The committee-room was crowded with correspondents and stricken statesmen. Reputations [illegible] fell in that dingy little committee-room like soldiers on a battle-field. The victims writhed as upon the rack. Great beads of agony stood out upon the brow of the Christian statesmen who were found out. Only one of the stricken statesmen was able to bluff down the committee and come out of the trial without serious injury. This man was, of course, the agile, nimble-witted James G. Blaine. Job Stevenson, of Cincinnati, was his persecutor, but Job found that he had caught worse than a Tartar in Blaine. His evident malice gave Blaine all the opportunity he needed, and the result was that Job came out of the encounter humiliated and defeated. After Blaine's brilliant destruction of his principal prosecutor, the committee handled him very gingerly and was glad to let him go lightly. Gen. Garfield lost his nerve, however, and broke down completely. Under cross-examination his eyes were red and swollen with weeping. A big lump in his throat choked his utterance, so that it was all he could do to keep the big tears from running down his cheeks as he answered the questions of the committee. This exhibition of unmanly weakness did more to create a prejudice against Gen. Garfield than the testimony that was given against him. What was the testimony about which so much has been said? The portion of Oakes Ames' testimony bearing upon Gen. Garfield is quite brief, as is shown by the following transcript from the official record:

Jan. 22, 1873.—Oakes Ames recalled: * * *

Question—In regard to Mr. Garfield, state to the committee details of transactions between you and him in reference to Credit Mobilier stock. Answer—I got for Mr. Garfield ten shares of the Credit Mobilier stock, for which he paid par and interest.

Q.—When did you agree with him for that? A.—That agreement was in December, 1867, or January, 1868; about that time; about that time I had these conversations with all of them; it was all about the same time.

Q.—State what grew out of it. A.—Mr. Garfield did not pay me any money; I sold bonds belonging to his $1,000 of stock at 97, making $776; in June, I received a dividend in cash on his stock of $600, which left a balance due him of $329, which I paid him; that is all the transaction between us; I did not deliver him any stock before or since; that is the only transaction and the only thing.

Q.—The $329 which you paid him was the surplus of earnings on the stock above the amount to be paid for it, par value? A.—Yes, sir. He never had either his Credit Mobilier stock or Union Pacific railroad stock. The only thing he realized on the transaction was the $329.

Q.—I see in this statement of the account with Gen. Garfield a charge of $47; that is interest from the July previous, is it? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And the $776 on the credit side of the account is the 80 per cent. bond dividend sold at 97? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And the $600 on the credit side is the money dividend? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—And after you had received these two sums, they in the aggregate overpaid the price of stock and interest $329, which you paid him? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—How was that paid? A.—Paid in money, I believe.

Q.—Did you make a statement of this to Mr. Garfield? A.—I presume so. I think I did with all of them; that is my impression.

Q.—When you paid him this $329, did he understand it was the balance of his dividend after paying for his stock? A.—I supposed so; I do not know what else he could suppose.

Q.—You did not deliver the certificate of stock to him? A.—No, sir; he said nothing about that.

Q.—Why did he not receive his certificate? A.—I do not know.

Q.—Do you remember any conversation between you and him in the adjustment of these accounts? A.—I do not.

Q.—You understood you were the holder of these ten shares? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did he so understand it? A.—I presume so. It seems to have gone from his mind, however.

Q.—Was this the only dealing you had with him in reference to any stock? A.—I think so.

Q.—Was it the only transaction of any kind? A.—The only transaction.

Q.—Has that $329 ever been paid to you? A.—I have no recollection of it.

Q.—Have you any belief that it ever has? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did you ever loan Gen. Garfield $300? A.—Not to my knowledge; except that he calls this a loan.

Q.—You do not call it a loan? A.—I did not at the time. I am willing it should go to suit him.

Q.—What we want to get at is the exact truth? A.—I have told the truth in my statement.

Q.—When you paid him, $329, did he understand that he borrowed the money from you? A.—I do not suppose so.

Q.—Have you any belief now that he supposed so? A.—No; only from what he said the other day. I do not dispute anybody.

Q.—We want your judgment of the transaction. A.—My judgment of the transaction is just as I told you. There was but one thing about it.

Q.—That amount has never been repaid to you. You did not suppose that you had any right to it, or any claim to it? A.—No, sir.

Q.—You regarded that as money belonging to him after the stock was paid for? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did Gen. Garfield ever receive these bonds? A.—No, sir; never has received but $329.

Q.—And that he has received as his own money? A.—I suppose so; it did not belong to me. I should not have given it to him if it had not belonged to him.

Q.—You did not understand it to belong to you as a loan; you never called for it, and have never received it back? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Has there been any conversation between you and him in reference to the Pacific stock he was entitled to? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Has he ever called for it? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Have you ever offered it to him? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Has there been any conversation in relation to it? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Has there ever been anything said between you and him about rescinding the purchase of the ten shares of Credit Mobilier stock? Has there anything been said to you of its being thrown up, or abandoned, or surrendered? A.—No, sir, not until recently.

Q.—How recently? A.—Since this matter came up.

Q.—Since this investigation commenced. A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did you consider at the commencement of this investigation that you held those other dividends, which you say you did not pay him, in his behalf? Did you regard yourself as custodian of these dividends for him? A.—Yes, sir; he paid for his stock and is entitled to his dividends.

Q.—Will the dividends come to him at any time on his demand? A.—Yes, sir; as soon as this suit is settled.

Q.—You say $329 was paid to him; how was it paid? A.—I presume by check on Sergeant-at-Arms. I find there are some checks filed without any letters or initials indicating who they were for.

Q.—Have you had any correspondence since this dividend was paid with him in regard to this matter? A.—I do not know what matter, you refer to.

Q.—If you had any correspondence between you I would like to see it. A.—I have no copy of it.

Q.—Have you the original? A.—No, sir. Mr. Garfield showed me a letter which he said he intended to inclose with some money sent me. I did not know who the money came from. He showed me a letter which he said he intended to have put in. I indorsed on the back of the letter my reply. I just turned over the letter and wrote what I wrote on the back of it, and let him have it.

Q.—Your answer indorsed on the back of the letter was published in the newspapers? A.—Yes, sir. He published the letter, I believe.

Q.—As published did they correspond with your recollection of the paper as written. A.—Yes, sir. I wrote it off hastily. He came to my room and said he had been accused of all kinds of crimes and misdemeanors. I told him I had made no such statement as he represented. He wanted me to say in writing that I had not. I took his letter, which he said he intended to have inclosed with the money, and wrote on the back of it that I had made no such statement.

Q.—The published correspondence in the morning papers of the next day is your recollection of what occurred? A.—It agrees with my recollection, except that he says he left a letter for me at the Arlington. I never received that letter. I only saw the letter on which I indorsed my answer.

Q.—Did he inclose the money? A.—Some money came to me inclosed in an envelope, which he said he had sent. I gave it back to him.

Q. How much money was in that envelope? A.—Four hundred dollars.

The following memorandum, referred to by witness as a statement of his account with Mr. Garfield, was placed in evidence:

J. A. G.

1868— Dr.
To ten shares stock Credit Mobilier of A.	$1,000
Interest	47
June 19, to cash	329
Total	$1,376
1868— Cr.
By dividend bond Union Pacific Railroad	$1,000
At 80 per cent., less 3 per cent.	776
June 17, by dividend collected for your account	600
Total	$1,376

The following is Gen. Garfield's explanation before the same Committee:

"The first I ever heard of the Credit Mobilier was in 1866 or 1867. I cannot fix the date when George Francis Train called on me and said he was organizing a company to be known as the Credit Mobilier of America, to be formed on the model of the Credit Mobilier of France; that the object of the company was to purchase lands and build houses along the line of the Pacific railroad at points where cities and villages were likely to spring up; that he had no doubt money thus invested would double or treble itself each year; that subscriptions were limited to $1,000 each, and he wished me to subscribe. He showed me a long list of subscribers, among them Mr. Oakes Ames, to whom he referred me for further information concerning the enterprise. I answered that I had not the money to spare, and if I had I would not subscribe without knowing more about the proposed organization. Mr. Train left me, saying he would hold a place open for me, and hoped I would yet conclude to subscribe. The same day I asked Mr. Ames what he thought of the enterprise. He expressed the opinion that the investment would be safe and profitable.

"I heard nothing further upon the subject for a year or more, and it was almost forgotten, when some time, I should say, during the long session of 1868, Mr. Ames spoke of it again; said the company had organized, was doing well, and he thought would soon pay large dividends. He said that some of the stock had been left, or was to be left, in his hands to sell, and I could take the amount which Mr. Train had offered me by paying the $1,000 and accrued interest. He said that if I was not able to pay for it then he would hold it for me until I could pay, or until some of the dividends were payable. I told him I would consider the matter, but would not agree to take any stock until I knew from an examination of the charter and the conditions of the subscription the extent to which I should become pecuniarily liable. He said he was not sure, but thought a stockholder would be liable only for the par value of his stock; that he had not the stock and papers with him, but would have them after a while. From the case as presented I probably should have taken the stock if I had been satisfied as to the extent of pecuniary liability. Thus the matter rested for some time, I think until the following year. During that interval I understood there were dividends due amounting to nearly three times the par value of the stock. But, in the meantime, I had heard that the company was involved in some controversy with the Pacific railroad, and that Mr. Ames' right to sell the stock was denied. When I next saw Mr. Ames I told him that I had concluded not to take the stock. There the matter ended, so far as I was concerned, and I had no further knowledge of the company's operations until the subject began to be discussed in the newspapers last fall. Nothing was ever said to me by Mr. Train or Mr. Ames, to indicate or imply that the Credit Mobilier was or could be in any way connected with the legislation of Congress for the Pacific railroad, or for any other purpose; Mr. Ames never gave nor offered to give me any stock or other valuable thing as a gift. I once asked and obtained from, and afterward repaid to him, a loan of $300. That amount is the only valuable thing I ever received from, or delivered to, him. I never owned, have received, or agreed to receive, any stock of the Credit Mobilier, or of the Union Pacific railroad, nor any dividends nor profits arising from him."

Ames was recalled Jan. 23, 1873, and testified to the stock he had issued to Garfield, the dividends allowed him, and the balance of money paid into his hand, which Garfield pretended was a "loan." He submitted a memorandum of the account in detail. It came to the knowledge of the committee that Garfield had visited Ames with the object of inducing him to retract or modify his testimony, and he was re-examined [illegible] 29th of January, as follows:

Question—You may state whether, in conversation with you, Mr. Garfield claims, as he claimed before us, that the only transaction between you was borrowing $300? Answer—No, sir; he did not claim that with me.

Q.—State all you know in reference to it. A.—I told him he knew very well that there was a dividend. I made out a statement and showed it to him at the time. In our conversation he admitted it, and said there was $2,400 due him in stocks and bonds. He made a little memorandum of $1,000 and $1,400, and said there was $1,000 of Union Pacific railroad stock, $1,000 of Credit Mobilier stock, and $400 of stocks and bonds.

Q.—When was that memorandum made? A.—It was made in my room. I cannot remember the date. It was since this investigation commenced.

Q.—Have you that memorandum that Mr. Garfield made? A.—I have the figures that he made. (Paper shown in Garfield's handwriting.)

Q.—You say these figures were made by Mr. Garfield? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—That was his idea of what was coming to him? A.—Yes, sir.

THE CORRUPT CANDIDATE.

High Republican Testimony as to Garfield's Character.

[From the New York Tribune, Feb. 19, 1873.]

Let us gather up the ends from all this snarl of testimony and see, if possible, just where we stand. Read the evidence. With varying degrees of guilt or guilty knowledge, every man of them, with one exception [Mr. Blaine], has been obliged to confess that at some time he had held this stock, and at some time—under stress of conscience, let us hope, though that is not fully proven—got rid of it. Now let us go slowly over the list:

* * * * *

James A. Garfield, of Ohio, had ten shares; he never paid $1; received $329, which, after the investigation, he was anxious to have considered as a loan from Oakes Ames to himself.

These men betrayed the trust of the people, deceived their constituents, and by their evasions and falsehoods confessed the transactions to be disgraceful. Pass no resolution. Drop it where it is. Remand the whole business to the people.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 19, 1873.]

Of the members referred to Messrs. Kelley and Garfield present a most distressing figure. Their participation in the Credit Mobilier affair is complicated by the most unfortunate contradictions of testimony which the committee do not undertake to unravel. The only possible comment on their cases is that had they taken a perfectly upright course in the matter, and refused to have anything to do with the stock, no occasion for contradiction could have arisen.

[From the Chicago Tribune, April 15, 1874.]

The case against Gen. Garfield is dark. Whatever smirching he may have sustained in the Credit Mobilier was trivial compared with this. Appearing before the District officers, arguing that they should give the contract for paving to one firm, which was to pay him $5,000, to the exclusion of other firms which were to pay him nothing! Appearing thus as counsel for a contractor when he was Chairman of the committee which was to grant or withhold any appropriation by Congress for paving at all. Mr. Parsons escapes legal responsibility because he was not at the time a member of Congress. Nevertheless, taking a town-meeting view of the case, it is clear that Mr. Chittenden, in employing Parsons, thought he was hiring something else than his knowledge of "ironized" wood.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial, April 28, 1880.]

The charge that Gen. Garfield is responsible for the perpetuation of the wood-pulp fraud, made in a circular issued by an advertising agency in New York, is true. Garfield is in a tight place. He is a man who, upon full information, had free-trade convictions, and he has the casting vote in the Committee on Ways and Means.

AN indignant tenant and a rather negligent landlord were overheard in the following conversation in front of the Monument, Monday evening:

Tenant (indignantly)—"My chimney smokes."

Landlord—"What does it smoke?"

Tenant (moreindignantly)—"It smokes everything."

Landlord—"Has it tried cubebs?"

Tenant—"Cubebs!"

Landlord—"Yes. Give it cubebs. The chimney has probably got the catarrh, and smoking cubebs will clear the passage."—Danbury News.

NOT TO BE IGNORED.

A Republican Newspaper Calls Upon Garfield to Explain His Credit Mobilier Transactions.

[From the Philadelphia Press, Stalwart Republican.]

Gen. Garfield will make a grave mistake if he shall affect to ignore the serious charges which meet him at the very outset of his campaign for the Presidency. They are not the whisperings of anonymous slanderers, nor the rank growth of partisan calumny which may spring up in a night at the feet of the purest man in public life as soon as he receives a nomination for the Presidency. Every Presidential candidate from Washington down has had to trample upon that sort of thing, and not one of them was the worse for it in the end. But now, for the first time in the history of this country, does a great party present as its candidate one whose personal and official integrity has been impeached by the result of a Congressional investigation. If Gen. Garfield's friends suppose that a candidacy so beclouded will receive the approval or toleration of the American people when the facts are understood, they are sadly mistaken, and, in the spirit of kindness, he and they should be undeceived at once. * * * Gen. Garfield's nomination was not premeditated, for premeditation would have been fatal to it. It was born of a crisis in the convention. There was no time to think, and probably not one of the 399 delegates who, in the flurry of the moment, cast their votes for him as the only way of escape from the third term, recollected that this was the Garfield who was involved in the Credit Mobilier scandal. If they had so recollected they would have rejected the Garfield movement as a suggestion of suicide. The sober second thought has since stolen over their minds and is possessing the country. Gen. Garfield cannot come forward too soon with his explanation. If there are extenuating circumstances, let us know what they are. If he was more fool than knave, as some of his friends say, and has since found wisdom, let him throw himself upon the charity of the country. If the Congressional Committee got the whole thing down wrong in their report, let him say so. What is wanted is his statement of the facts. It will not do for him to say, with his friend, Gov. Foster, that "those charges are settled," for the only settlement that has been made left him in a very bad plight. The Republican party cannot afford to carry on the campaign under the cloud that is now hanging over its candidate for the Presidency.

The Republican Candidate for Vice President.

Two years ago Chester A. Arthur was removed by Hayes and Sherman from the office of Collector of the Port of New York, on the direct charge of inefficiency, with the implied charge of dishonesty.

In his message to the Senate of Jan. 31, 1879, Mr. Hayes said:

"With my information of the facts in the case, and with a deep sense of the responsible obligation imposed upon me by the constitution, to 'take care that the laws be faithfully executed,' I regard it as my plain duty to suspend the officers in question, and to make the nominations now before the Senate, in order that this important office may be honestly and efficiently administered."

In order that the custom laws might be faithfully executed, Mr. Hayes found himself compelled, by a deep sense of duty, to remove Chester A. Arthur.

In order that the Custom House might be efficiently managed, Mr. Hayes regarded it as his plain duty to remove Chester A. Arthur.

In order that the office might be honestly administered, he felt obliged to remove Chester A. Arthur.

In Mr. Hayes' view, the then Collector of the Port of New York was neither a faithful, a competent, nor an honest officer of the Government.

What was John Sherman's opinion of Gen. Arthur at that time?

In a letter to Hayes, dated Jan. 28, 1879, Mr. Sherman said:

"If, to secure the removal of an officer, it is necessary to establish the actual commission of a crime by proofs demanded in a court of justice, then it is clear that the case against Mr. Arthur is not made out, especially if his answer is held to be conclusive without reference to the proofs on the public records and tendered to the committee and the Senate. But if it is to be held that, to procure the removal of Mr. Arthur, it is sufficient to reasonably establish that gross abuses of administration have continued and increased during his incumbency; that many persons have been regularly paid on his rolls who rendered little or no service; that the expenses of his office have increased, while collections have been diminishing; that bribes, or gratuities in the nature of bribes, have been received by his subordinates in several branches of the Custom House; that efforts to correct these abuses have not met his support, and that he has not given to the duties of the office the requisite diligence and attention, then it is submitted that the case is made out. This form of proof the department is prepared to submit."

In short, John Sherman claimed to have proof in his possession that Chester A. Arthur was either a fool, incapable of watching the thieves whom he cherished in his office, or a rascal who winked at their crimes. Indeed, he plainly insinuated that nothing except the actual legal evidence of Arthur's criminality was wanting to put that official into prison instead of into retirement.

What a gratification it must be to Gen. Arthur and to his many warm friends to find this very same John Sherman and Rutherford B. Hayes now supporting him for Vice President of the United States!—New York Sun.

Sowing Flower Seeds.

In sowing flower seed a mistake is frequently made in sowing them too deep; indeed it is a very common error, and accounts for many failures in the germination of flower seeds, wherein the florist or seedsman is unjustly blamed. The rule recommended of covering seed only their thickness is a safe one to follow. Some do not require to be covered, but when sown all that is required is to press the earth down with a board. This buries the seed into the ground sufficiently to insure their germination if they are sound. The soil requires to be finely pulverized, for if it be lumpy the seeds fall between them, and may dry up before sprouting. Balsoms and zinnias, and other medium sized seeds may be covered from a quarter to half an inch. We are referring now to the hardier annuals, the seeds of which may be sown where they are to grow. As we have said heretofore, it is better to sow the seed in boxes and transplant into the open ground, for in that way stronger plants are generally obtained that stand drouth better and give flowers easier.—Prarie Farmer.

The Negro Exodus Again.

As proof conclusive that the republican leaders of Indiana are guilty of importing negroes into Indiana for political purposes, we submit the following letter from one of the exodus agents to Hon. Thomas M. Browne, a republican congressman from this state:

WASHINGTON, April 26, 1880.

Hon. Thomas M. Browne, M. C.:

DEAR SIR—I have carried the letter that you was so kind to give me, to several places, but they all tell me there are no vacancies in their departments. I have not been to see Secretary Sherman yet. But intend to go to-morrow. I am in a bad condition of affairs; am behind in my house rent and also my grocery bill. I do not know what to do. It is well known that I have added 2,000 votes to the republican party in Indiana, and through my agents, now at work, will add at least 10,000 to that party during this month and next. I set out last fall to direct the exodus from other states direct into Indiana, and I have succeeded in doing it. Jus think about it. I carried 2,000 men there myself, and I am still directing others to go there. I talked with Messrs. Postmaster Holloway, Marshal Dudley, Register Jordan, and, in fact, all of the republicans in Indianapolis on this subject last summer, and the matter was talked over. Voorhees tried to make me expose the men, but I believed it to honest and right, and told him I did, and I think so yet. I therefore used nobody's name but my own. I would have been there myself, but when I was compelled to stop I was there without money and no way to get off. Now, what I want is to get you to go and see General Tyner, Secretary Thompson, or somebody that will give me somethinr to do, so I can get money enough to get away from here with. I do not see how I can keep my family from suffering here. Whether I can get anything to do or not, I am still in favor of the exodus. If you can not go, get me a letter from General Garfield and Mr. Butterworth, and that directed to Secretary Sherman. From what I have been told, a letter from Mr. Garfield and other members of congress would aid me considerbly with Secretary Sherman. Please let me hear from you soon. I am in a suffering condition. Very respectfully yours, S. L. PERRY.

4th of July Excursions.

The Pennsylvania Company, operating the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago, the Cleveland & Pittsburgh, the North-Western Ohio, the Erie & Pittsburgh and Ashtabula & Pittsburgh railways, will sell excursion tickets on July 3rd, 4th and 5th, good to return until and including July 5th, 1880, between stations on above railroads at reduced rates. These tickets will be good on all passenger trains to and from each stations as they stop at regularly, according to schedule. Should there be a sufficient number from any one station to justify the company running special trains, arrangements can be made by applying to division superintendents, giving timely notice to prepare the trains. This announcement is made by request of F. R. Myers, general passenger and ticket agent. 26-2t

SPECIAL NOTICE TO FARMERS!

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Be it known that I, Jefferson Grube, have invented certain new and useful improvements in

Grain Separators,

and have letters patent therefor. This invention has relation to machines for separating Grain, Seed and Chaff, each from the other, and adapted to employ the same High Blast for each separation, and to conduct the grain and seed to opposite ends of the machine, whence they are conducted by proper chutes into sacks, held in position by the machine itself. I expect to have ready by June 1 the

Best Grain Separator and Chaffer

IN THE MARKET.

Warranted to separate plantain seed from clover seed. For simplicity and convenience it surpasses all others. It delivers grain direct into sacks, which saves much handling.

GEN. HANCOCK AT GETTYSBURG.

The Story of the Surgeon Who Dressed His Wound on the Third Day's Fight.

[New York Sun.]

Dr. Alexander N. Dougherty, of Newark, was medical director of the second corps when it was commanded by General Hancock. He is a republican, and was postmaster at Newark under Grant's first administration. He will, however, vote for Hancock. He said yesterday: "When General Hancock succeeded General Couch as commander of the old second corps, I became his medical director. At the battle of Gettysburg he commanded the first, second and thirds corps, one-half of the army. In the third day's fight at Gettysburg he was wounded and I was sent for. I found him lying on the hill slope, under a tree, and facing the enemy. There was a deep, wide gash in his leg, near the groin. In the wound were wood splinters and a ten-penny nail. General Hancock was anxious to know what the rebels were using in their shells. He thought he had been wounded by splinters from one of the enemy's shells. We put him into the ambulance, and I laid down beside him. Then we drove through a hot fire to my hospital. Afterward I discovered that a bullet had penetrated his saddle and then lodged in his thigh, carrying with it the wood splinters and the ten-penny nail."

"As he lay in the hospital in great pain, I, at his dictation, wrote his first dispatch to General Mead announcing the victory won at Gettysburg, adding to the dispatch that the defeat would be turned into a rout. He was calm, patient and heroic. He is equally entitled with Meade to the honor of the victory at Gettysburg, and Meade would say so if he were alive. On the night of the second day's battle a council of war was held. It was proposed to fall back and establish the line of battle at Pipe Creek, but Hancock opposed it. He argued that the army should stay where it was, and he said that the army of the Potomac has made its last retreat, and should fight or die on the [illegible] Meade [illegible] coincided with Hancock, and the result was that that great victory crippled the rebels so that they never recovered from it. Hancock will be the next president. Several of my republican friends have assured me they will vote for him. We don't want any president who accepts bribes or perjures himself, or who has even the suspicion of a taint about him."

HANCOCK'S BOYHOOD HOME.

How the News of His Nomination Was Received—Enthusiasm of Republicans for Him.

[Philadelphia Times, June 25.]

Soon after General Hancock assumed command of the military division of the Atlantic he is reported to have said to a friend: "Now, if the government will only remove my headquarters to Philadelphia, I will be able to realize the desire of my heart by making my residence in Norristown, the home of my childhood."

Could General Hancock yesterday have witnessed the very general joy, without regard to party, that pervaded Norristown when the news reached there of his nomination for the presidency, he would have had occular demonstration that the home of his childhood was proud of the bright manhood of the stripling youth it had sent forth. Along the streets, in all the public places, in private offices, and about the town, party feeling was laid aside in the general rejoicing over the nomination. Old men who had about reached the allotted 'three score and ten' forgot their long years of bitter political strife as they shook hands and discussed their boyish recollections of Winfield Hancock. It was no longer General Hancock to them, but old Ben Hancock's boy "Winfield."

The old two-story house near the Montgomery cemetry, that has been in so dilapidated condition for years that it has not been habitable, where Gen. Hancock's childhood days were spent, became at once a place of importance, and during the day not a few who had passed it for years without giving a thought to the old structure, stopped to gaze upon it. The academy where he was taught, and old Eliphalit Roberts and Rev. Samule Aarons, the teachers who presided therein, though long since passed away, all came in for their meed of praise.

A large body of democrats convened in the hall of the Democratic County Association, where the announcement of the nomination was received with the wildest demonstrations of delight. Flags were hoisted on the building and displayed from the windows, while an impromptu meeting was organized and addresses by John W. Bickel, Horace G. [illegible] and others. On the river front [illegible] guns were fired, and as night came on many buildings were illuminated.

HANCOCK AND THE REPUBLICANS.

Mr. Leonard W. Jerome Points Out Why All Conservative Republicans Must Support the Hero of Gettysburg.

The following letter has been handed to the New York World by Mr. Jerome with a request for its publication:

"25 West Twenty-sixth Street, June 28, 1880.

Major-General Hancock—My Dear General: I take the earliest opportunity to congratulate you upon your nomination and to assure you, life-long whig and republican that I am, of my most hearty support. I belong to a very numerous and very stanch old silver-gray republican family. With one solitary exception, there never was one of them known to vote the democratic ticket, but I venture to say they will to a man vote for you. They cannot consistently do otherwise.

"You, sir, embody the views and sentiments in regard to the great questions of the day that we have entertained since the war closed. They are the same that actuated General Grant when he laid down those liberal terms of surrender to Gen. Lee. They are the same that actuated my poor friend Raymond when he battled so manfully in the committee of congress against the savage policy of Thad. Stevens. I believe General Grant would support you to-day, did not the exigencies of his situation forbid it. And Henry J. Raymond, were he alive, would support you, too, unless the exigencies of the New York Times restrained him. He was compelled at an early day to smother the sentiments he had expressed in the address of the Philadelphia convention, to abandon his career in legislative halls, and to change the tone of the Times or, as Mr. Jones, our business manager and partner, insisted, the paper would be ruined. (I believe I offered to pay the damages at the time, but that was considered impracticable.) It was a bitter pill, but it had to be swallowed. Thad. Stevens [illegible] misrepresented the country in engrafting his policy upon the republican party. And though a majority of the party, as I firmly believe, were disgusted, it was fastened upon them and there was no way of getting rid of it. Thus for years a vast number of us, good republicans, have been compelled to be helpless supporters of a policy we believed to be the very worst that could be devised. An opportunity is presented us now for the first time with any show of success to vote in accordance with our convictions, and I am sure we shall do it most joyfully. With great respect and esteem, believe me, yours faithfully,

Leonard W. Jerome."

How a Great General Kept a Trust Confided in Him by a Private Soldier.

[Baltimore Gazette.]

During the gloomy period of the war, a man of fine martial bearing, attired in the uniform of a general officer of the United States army, entered the counting-room of a well-known banking-house in this city, where his advent quickly attracted the attention of the employes engaged in the dull routine of business. The officer, after courteously apologizing for the intrusion, proceeded to state his business. It appeared that after a battle in which his troops had been engaged the officer had been implored by one of his soldiers, who was dying from wounds received in the recent conflict, to recover some money deposited in a Baltimore bank, and pay it over to his aged mother. The dying man could not recall the name of the banker with whom the money had been left, and it was in pursuance of his search for the funds that the officer had visited the bank. The banker, though knowing nothing of the deposit in question, readily gave such information to the gentlemanly officer as he thought would aid him in his search, which eventually proved successful. The banker remarked yesterday: "I was so struck by his voice, face and manners that they made upon me a lasting impression. I shall register on purpose to vote for him at the next presidential election. He was General Winfield Scott Hancock."

Not a Joyous Sound Anywhere.

Song-makers of the republican persuasion are turning out plenty of songs to immortalize the virtues and heroism of Garfield and Arthur, but somehow or other the party isn't in tune to sing them. If even a good, single hearty hurrah for the Chicago nominees has yet rent the air anywhere in this broad land of freedom it must have been raised in some remote and desolate spot whence the sound could not reach the ears of a patiently expectant people.

The Germans for Hancock.

[New York World, June 28.]

Yesterday morning the executive committee of the German American Independent Association held a meeting at No. 200 Third avenue and adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, the past history of Garfield and Arthur, the nominees of the republican national convention at Chicago, does not in our judgement offer any guarantee of a pure administration in the event of the success of the republican ticket; and,

Whereas, the unblemished character and indisputable integrity of Hancock and English, the nominees of the democratic convention at Cincinnati, are guarantees of an honest and efficient administration under their leadership; therefore,

Resolved, that we hail with delight the nominations of the democratic national convention as recognizing the principles indorsed by us; that we form a central committee to be known as the German-American Hancock and English Central Campaign Committee; that we invite the district to forthwith organize themselves into district campaign clubs; that we invite the co-operation of all independent citizens, so that the cause of honest government may be triumphant next November

The Success of Military Heroes.

[Washington Post.]

Only one military hero, nominated for the presidency, has ever failed to be elected—and he was beaten by an ex-general of the army who invaded Mexico, and brought the government to terms. Scott was defeated because his party was hopelessly used up before the campaign began. The whig platform, in that campaign, was but a feeble and transparent attempt to steal democratic thunder. Washington, Jackson and Grant indicate the strength of candidates who have military prestage in their favor. Two of the three, [illegible] in their administration of the [illegible] of statesmanship are not inconsistent with martial glory. Grant's failure in statesmanship was due to his utter indifference to public affairs during the greater part of his life. Gen. Hancock has demonstrated his thorough knowledge of the constitution and the rights and duties of the central power and the states, respectively, under the charter of our liberties. It any American ever earned the title of soldier-statesman Hancock has earned that honorable designation. He has the confidence and respect of all men, in all parties, who are not blinded by narrow and mean prejudice and bigotry. He will have the support—the influence and the votes—of thousands in every state who have hitherto voted for republican candidates. His election will forever banish the bane of American politics—sectionalism and the hatred and malice which it has engendered and fostered.

MRS. GENERAL HANCOCK.

Personal Appearance and Characteristics of the Next Mistress of the White House.

[New York Graphic.]

Mrs. Hancock the wife of the general is a few years his junior in age, and as a woman is as imposing in appearance as he is as a man. Tall and well proportioned, with a most winsome smile, a manner that puts you at your ease at once, and a pair of eyes that animate every line of a handsome face, she is still a beauty, although her hair is becoming streaked with gray. She was married when the general was but a young lieutenant doing duty in the far west. It was entirely a love match, and neither of them have since regretted it—in fact, their home is one of the happiest imaginable. Mrs. Hancock has always been opposed to her husband's becoming a candidate for the presidency, and she is even above the weakness of wishing to be the mistress of the White House. She dreads the worry of the convass, and if her husband is elected she thinks that the honor which the position brings will be dearly purchased by the renunciation of all domestic life for four years to come, and of his position as senior major general and his chances of soon becoming chief of the army. While she prefers her own home existence, however, there is no one better qualified to play the hostess on a grand scale than she. A society belle, even after her marriage, she has all the self-confidence and resources needed to entertain a most varied company. There is nothing in the range of conversation about which she does not know something. Her greatest charm, however, is—and it is the general's also—that art of making every individual atom feel as if he were the one sole object of her attention.

Plain Talk.

Charles Francis Adams says: "After such an act I have no desire to sustain the republican party in any way. Although General Garfield is a man whom I respect, I could not vote for him on that account. I would not vote for a party that would carry through such a fraud. I think Mr. Hayes was elected by fraud, and I do not mean to have it said that at the next election I had forgotten it. I do not say that Mr. Hayes committed the fraud, but it was committed by his party. I have no enmity to Mr. Hayes, but after the fraud by which he became president I could not vote for any person put up for president on the republican side who did not disavow the fraud committed. I would not support any member of that party who had any sort of mixture with that fraud. I feel that the counting out is just as much a fraud now as at the time it was perpetrated."

KINDNESS REWARDED.

Nice Man for a Superintendent.

Yesterday there reached Kansas City two honest Germans, who, from necessity, joined the noble army of tramps a few weeks since in Colorado. The men started to walk from Colorado, and took the track of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road as their tow-path. Several miles west of Dodge City the travelers discovered a broken rail, which would surely have caused an accident had it not been discovered. They waited several hours and flaged the east-bound passenger train, to the great relief of all on board when the cause of the stoppage became known, and at the solicitation of one or two gentlemen on the train the two Germans were taken on board and carried to Newton. Mr. Nickerson, division superintendent of the road, was on the train, but refused to pass these two men, who probably saved the company thousands of dollars, any further. There were a number of railroad men on board who tried to have Mr. Nickerson make an exception in this case, dispatch was received from General Manager Strong to bring the men along, but it was too late, and they trudged the entire distance to this city. It is not to be supposed that these two men will ever again watch several hours to prevent an accident.—Kansas City Times.

Exciting Encounter Between a Water-snake and a Rat.

A workman on Lindsay Point informed a Mail reporter this morning of a terrible conflict between a snake and a rat which took place there yesterday afternoon. His story, written out, is as follows: "The snake was of unusual size, and of a different appearance from those commonly found in water. The rat was of the ordinary brown variety, and was running along the shore when the fight began. The snake was coiled upon a little point of mud just above the water, sunning itself, and probably asleep. The rat, apparently without noticing the snake, ran directly into the latter's jaws; that is, it jumped directly upon the folds of the serpent's body. The snake struck instantly, fastening its fangs between the rat's shoulders. Then began a contest that in its small way was truly thrilling. The rat, struggling violently, endeavored to shake itself free, while the snake as persistently endeavored to drag the head of its victim into its own mouth. This feat it was at first unable to accomplish. The rat was game, and as it writhed in its convulsive efforts to escape, bit the big snake severely in the neck just back of the head, until the blood flowed and mixed with its own. These counter attacks became at last so savagely painful that the snake loosened its grip, remaining, however, in half-coil. But the respite was too brief to afford the rat its opportunity to escape, for again the snake's fierce jaws descended and closed, this time around the rat's head. The heavy body of the rat still swayed violently, but dragged with it the head of the snake, until the latter was thrown completely out of coil. By this time, however, the rat's struggles had grown comparatively faint, and the snake was apparently the victor. But the next moment the snake in its turn began to struggle violently, as if to release its adversary's head, but ineffectually, and the reason soon became apparent. The rat had bitten quite through the snake's throat, and its sharp teeth could be distinctly seen in the narrow slit they made. The writhings of the snake were now intense. It lashed the ground with its tail, and raised its thick folds to almost half its length from the ground. The spectator stood hesitant, scarcely knowing whether he ought or ought not to interfere. The next moment he was powerless in the premises, for the snake, with one last convulsive effort, threw half its length into the muddy water, and the doughty twain sank together to a common death.—Stockton Mail.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-tf of us, I'll put a label on it."

"It's a plumb-line somebody dropped down from the family circle," remarked another; and the thin man began to move aside.

"Next to the boarding-house soup, it's the thinest thing I've seen," said a third party; and the slim party got uneasy and sat down.

THE CAMPAIGN

Weekly Sentinel.

The first number of the Campaign Weekly Sentinel will be issued Wednesday, July 7, and be continued each week until November 1st.

Each issue will contain a complete summary of the important political news and opinions of the week, and a large amount of interesting information.

The democratic party has never been more determined or more of a unit than it is to-day, and every indication points to a brilliant victory in November. But to insure that victory it is necessary that every true friend of honest government should "put his shoulder to the wheel" and do his utmost to help the common cause.

The importance of keeping the people thoroughly informed in such a contest cannot be overestimated. In no way can this be done so effectually as by circulating among them a live newspaper of established reputation, which furnishes every week a fresh, full and accurate account of current political events in the state and country, and presents the issues of the day clearly and forcibly.

The campaign Sentinel will be found thoroughly alive and up to the mark in every respect, and we bespeak for it a large circulation. A copy should be placed in the hands of every democratic or doubtful voter in the state and to this end we invite the co-operation of all our friends and subscribers and of democratic committees throughout the state. If subscriptions cannot in every case be obtained, send the paper FREE. A little money spent in this way now will be much more beneficial and far reaching in its results than ten times the amount expended in some other way near the close of the campaign.

The terms are exceedingly low and within the reach of all:

Single copies for the campaign	$0 40
Two copies	70
Five copies	1 50
Ten copies	3 00
Twenty-five copies	7 00
Fifty copies	13 00

The Negro Exodus Again.

As proof conclusive that the republican leaders of Indiana are guilty of importing negroes into Indiana for political purposes, we submit the following letter from one of the exodus agents to Hon. Thomas M. Browne, a republican congressman from this state:

WASHINGTON, April 26, 1880.

Hon. Thomas M. Browne, M. C.:

DEAR SIR—I have carried the letter that you was so kind to give me, to several places, but they all tell me there are no vacancies in their departments. I have not been to see Secretary Sherman yet. But intend to go to-morrow. I am in a bad condition of affairs; am behind in my house rent and also my grocery bill. I do not know what to do. It is well known that I have added 2,000 votes to the republican party in Indiana, and through my agents, now at work, will add at least 10,000 to that party during this month and next. I set out last fall to direct the exodus from other states direct into Indiana, and I have succeeded in doing it. Just think about it. I carried 2,000 men there myself, and I am still directing others to go there. I talked with Messrs. Postmaster Holloway, Marshal Dudley, Register Jordan, and, in fact, all of the republicans in Indianapolis on this subject last summer, and the matter was talked over. Voorhees tried to make me expose the men, but I believed it to honest and right, and told him I did, and I think so yet. I therefore used nobody's name but my own. I would have been there myself, but when I was compelled to stop I was there without money and no way to get off. Now, what I want is to get you to go and see General Tyner, Secretary Thompson, or somebody that will give me something to do, so I can get money enough to get away from here with. I do not see how I can keep my family from suffering here. Whether I can get anything to do or not, I am still in favor of the exodus. If you can not go, get me a letter from General Garfield and Mr. Butterworth, and that directed to Secretary Sherman. From what I have been told, a letter from Mr. Garfield and other members of congress would aid me considerbly with Secretary Sherman. Please let me hear from you soon. I am in a suffering condition.

Very respectfully yours, S. L. PERRY.

GEN. HANCOCK AT GETTYSBURG.

The Story of the Surgeon Who Dressed His Wound on the Third Day's Fight.

[New York Sun.]

Dr. Alexander N. Dougherty, of Newark, was medical director of the second corps when it was commanded by General Hancock. He is a republican, and was postmaster at Newark under Grant's first administration. He will, however, vote for Hancock. He said yesterday: "When General Hancock succeeded General Couch as commander of the old second corps, I became his medical director. At the battle of Gettysburk he commanded the first, second and thirds corps, one-half of the army. In the third day's fight at Gettysburg he was wounded and I was sent for. I found him lying on the hill slope, under a tree, and facing the enemy. There was a deep, wide gash in his leg, near the groin. In the wound were wood splinters and a ten-penny nail. General Hancock was anxious to know what the rebels were using in their shells. He thought he had been wounded by splinters from one of the enemy's shells. We put him into the ambulance, and I laid down beside him. Then we drove through a hot fire to my hospital. Afterward I discovered that a bullet had penetrated his saddle and then lodged in his thigh, carrying with it the wood splinters and the ten-penny nail."

"As he lay in the hospital in great pain, I, at his dictation, wrote his first dispatch to General Mead announcing the victory won at Gettysburg, adding to the dispatch that the defeat would be turned into a rout. He was calm, patient and heroic. He is equally entitled with Meade to the honor of the victory at Gettysburg, and Meade would say so if he were alive. On the night of the second day's battle a council of war was held. It was proposed to fall back and establish the line of battle at Pipe Creek, but Hancock opposed it. He argued that the army should stay where it was, and he said that the army of the Potomac has made its last retreat, and should fight or die on the line where the battle was begun. Gen. Meade finally coincided with Hancock, and the result was that that great victory crippled the rebels so that they never recovered from it. Hancock will be the next president. Several of my repuclican friends have assured me they will vote for him. We don't want any president who accepts bribes or perjures himself, or who has even the suspicion of a taint about him."

HANCOCK'S BOYHOOD HOME.

How the News of His Nomination Was Received—Enthusiasm of Republicans for Him.

[Philadelphia Times, June 25.]

Soon after General Hancock assumed command of the military division of the Atlantic he is reported to have said to a friend: "Now, if the government will only remove my headquarters to Philadelphia, I will be able to realize the desire of my heart by making my residence in Norristown, the home of my childhood."

Could General Hancock yesterday have witnessed the very general joy, without regard to party, that pervaded Norristown when the news reached there of his nomination for the presidency, he would have had occular demonstration that the home of his childhood was proud of the bright manhood of the stripling youth it had sent forth. Along the streets, in all the public places, in private offices, and about the town, party feeling was laid aside in the general rejoicing over the nomination. Old men who had about reached the allotted 'three score and ten' forgot their long years of bitter political strife as they shook hands and discussed their boyish recolections of Winfield Hancock. It was no longer General Hancock to them, but old Ben Hancock's boy "Winfield."

The old two-story house near the Montgomery cemetry, that has been in so dilapidated condition for years that it has not been habitable, where Gen. Hancock's childhood days were spent, became at once a place of importance, and during the day not a few who had passed it for years without giving a thought to the old structure, stopped to gaze upon it. The academy where he was taught, and old Eliphalit Roberts and Rev. Samule Aarons, the teachers who presided therein, though long since passed away, all came in for their meed of praise.

A large body of democrats convened in the hall of the Democratic County Association, where the announcement of the nomination was received with the wildest demonstrations of delight. Flags were hoisted on the building and displayed from the windows, while an impromptu meeting was organized and addresses by John W. Bickel, Horace G. Bayer and others. On the river front [illegible] guns were fired, and as night came on many buildings were illuminated.

HANCOCK AND THE REPUBLICANS.

Mr. Leonard W. Jerome Points Out Why All Conservative Republicans Must Support the Hero of Gettysburg.

The following letter has been handed to the New York World by Mr. Jerome with a request for its publication:

"25 WEST TWENTY-SIXTH STREET, June 28, 1880.

MAJOR-GENERAL HANCOCK—My Dear General: I take the earliest opportunity to congratulate you upon your nomination and to assure you, life-long whig and republican that I am, of my most hearty support. I belong to a very numerous and very stanch old silver-gray republican family. With one solitary exception, there never was one of them known to vote the democratic ticket, but I venture to say they will to a man vote for you. They cannot consistently do otherwise.

"You, sir, embody the views and sentiments in regard to the great questions of the day that we have entertained since the war closed. They are the same that actuated General Grant when he laid down those liberal terms of surrender to Gen. Lee. They are the same that actuated my poor friend Raymond when he battled so manfully in the committee of congress against the savage policy of Thad. Stevens. I believe General Grant would support you to-day, did not the exigencies of his situation forbid it. And Henry J. Raymond, were he alive, would support you, too, unless the exigencies of the New York Times restrained him. He was compelled at an early day to smother the sentiments he had expressed in the address of the Philadelphia convention, to abandon his career in legislative halls, and to change the tone of the Times or, as Mr. Jones, our business manager and partner, insisted, the paper would be ruined. (I believe I offered to pay the damages at the time, but that was considered impracticable.) It was a bitter pill, but it had to be swallowed. Thad. Stevens had succeeded through a congress that misrepresented the country in engrafting his policy upon the republican party. And though a majority of the party, as I firmly believe, were disgusted, it was fastened upon them and there was no way of getting rid of it. Thus for years a vast number of us, good republicans, have been compelled to be helpless supporters of a policy we believed to be the very worst that could be devised. An opportunity is presented us now for the first time with any show of success to vote in accordance with our convictions, and I am sure we shall do it most joyfully. With great respect and esteem, believe me, yours faithfully,

LEONARD W. JEROME."

How a Great General Kept a Trust Confided in Him by a Private Soldier.

[Baltimore Gazette.]

During the gloomy period of the war, a man of fine martial bearing, attired in the uniform of a general officer of the United States army, entered the counting-room of a well-known banking-house in this city, where his advent quickly attracted the attention of the employes engaged in the dull routine of business. The officer, after courteously apologizing for the intrusion, proceeded to state his business. It appeared that after a battle in which his troops had been engaged the officer had been implored by one of his soldiers, who was dying from wounds received in the recent conflict, to recover some money deposited in a Baltimore bank, and pay it over to his aged mother. The dying man could not recall the name of the banker with whom the money had been left, and it was in pursuance of his search for the funds that the officer had visited the bank. The banker, though knowing nothing of the deposit in question, readily gave such information to the gentlemanly officer as he thought would aid him in his search, which eventually proved successful. The banker remarked yesterday: "I was so struck by his voice, face and manners that they made upon me a lasting impression. I shall register on purpose to vote for him at the next presidential election. He was General Winfield Scott Hancock."

Not a Joyous Sound Anywhere.

Song-makers of the republican persuasion are turning out plenty of songs to immortalize the virtues and heroism of Garfield and Arthur, but somehow or other the party isn't in tune to sing them. If even a good, single hearty hurrah for the Chicago nominees has yet rent the air anywhere in this broad land of freedom it must have been raised in some remote and desolate spot whence the sound could not reach the ears of a patiently expectant people.

The Germans for Hancock.

[New York World, June 28.]

Yesterday morning the executive committee of the German American Independent Association held a meeting at No. 200 Third avenue and adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, the past history of Garfield and Arthur, the nominees of the republican national convention at Chicago, does not in our judgement offer any guarantee of a pure administration in the event of the success of the republican ticket; and,

Whereas, the unblemished character and indisputable integrity of Hancock and English, the nominees of the democratic convention at Cincinnati, are guarantees of an honest and efficient administration under their leadership; therefore,

Resolved, that we hail with delight the nominations of the democratic national convention as recognizing the principles indorsed by us; that we form a central committee to be known as the German-American Hancock and English Central Campaign Committee; that we invite the district to forthwith organize themselves into district campaign clubs; that we invite the co-operation of all independent citizens, so that the cause of honest government may be triumphant next November

The Success of Military Heroes.

[Washington Post.]

Only one military hero, nominated for the presidency, has ever failed to be elected—and he was beaten by an ex-general of the army who invaded Mexico, and brought the government to terms. Scott was defeated because his party was hopelessly used up before the campaign began. The whig platform, in that campaign, was but a feeble and transparent attempt to steal democratic thunder. Washington, Jackson and Grant indicate the strength of candidates who have military prestage in their favor. Two of the three, showed, in their administration of the government, that the highest qualities of statesmanship are not inconsistent with martial glory. Grant's failure in statesmanship was due to his utter indifference to public affairs during the greater part of his life. Gen. Hancock has demonstrated his thorough knowledge of the constitution and the rights and duties of the central power and the states, respectively, under the charter of our liberties. If any American ever earned the title of soldier-statesman Hancock has earned that honorable designation. He has the confidence and respect of all men, in all parties, who are not blinded by norrow and mean prejudice and bigotry. He will have the support—the influence and the votes—of thousands in every state who have hitherto voted for republican candidates. His election will forever banish the bane of American politics—sectionalism and the hatred and malice which it has engendered and fostered.

MRS. GENERAL HANCOCK.

Personal Appearance and Characteristics of the Next Mistress of the White House.

[New York Graphic.]

Mrs. Hancock the wife of the general is a few years his junior in age, and as a woman is as imposing in appearance as he is as a man. Tall and well proportioned, with a most winsome smile, a manner that puts you at your ease at once, and a pair of eyes that animate every line of a handsome face, she is still a beauty, although her hair is becoming streaked with gray. She was married when the general was but a young lieutenant doing duty in the far west. It was entirely a love match, and neither of them have since regretted it—in fact, their home is one of the happiest imaginable. Mrs. Hancock has always been opposed to her husband's becoming a candidate for the presidency, and she is even above the weakness of wishing to be the mistress of the White House. She dreads the worry of the convass, and if her husband is elected she thinks that the honor which the position brings will be dearly purchased by the renunciation of all domestic life for four years to come, and of his position as senior major general and his chances of soon becoming chief of the army. While she prefers her own home existence, however, there is no one better qualified to play the hostess on a grand scale than she. A society belle, even after her marriage, she has all the self-confidence and resources needed to entertain a most varied company. There is nothing in the range of conversation about which she does not know something. Her greatest charm, however, is—and it is the general's also—that art of making every individual atom feel as if he were the one sole object of her attention.

Plain Talk.

Charles Francis Adams says: "After such an act I have no desire to sustain the republican party in any way. Although General Garfield is a man whom I respect, I could not vote for him on that account. I would not vote for a party that would carry through such a fraud. I think Mr. Hayes was elected by fraud, and I do not mean to have it said that at the next election I had forgotten it. I do not say that Mr. Hayes committed the fraud, but it was committed by his party. I have no enmity to Mr. Hayes, but after the fraud by which he became president I could not vote for any person put up for president on the republican side who did not disavow the fraud committed. I would not support any member of that party who had any sort of mixture with that fraud. I feel that the counting out is just as much a fraud now as at the time it was perpetrated."

KINDNESS REWARDED.

Nice Man for a Superintendent.

Yesterday there reached Kansas City two honest Germans, who, from necessity, joined the noble army of trampa a few weeks since in Colorado. The men started to walk from Colorado, and took the track of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road as their towpath. Several miles west of Dodge City the travelers discovered a broken rail, which would surely have caused an accident had it not been discovered. They waited several hours and flaged the east-bound passenger train, to the great relief of all on board when the cause of the stoppage became known, and at the solicitation of one or two gentlemen on the train the two Germand were taken on board and carried to Newton. Mr. Nickerson, division superintendent of the road, was on the train, but refused to pass these two men, who probably saved the company thousands of dollars, any further. There were a number of railroad men on board who tried to have Mr. Nickerson make an exception in this case, but he said "No," and the train sped on toward Kansas City. At Emporia a dispatch was received from General Manager Strong to bring the men along, but it was too late, and they trudged the entire distance to this city. It is not to be supposed that these two men will ever again watch several hours to prevent an accident.—Kansas City Times.

Exciting Encounter Between a Water-snake and a Rat.

A workman on Lindsay Point informed a Mail reporter this morning of a terrible conflict between a snake and a rat which took place there yesterday afternoon. His story, written out, is as follows: "The snake was of unusual size, and of a different appearance from those commonly found in water. The rat was of the ordinary brown variety, and was running along the shore when the fight began. The snake was coiled upon a little point of mud just above the water, sunning itself, and probably asleep. The rat, apparently without noticing the snake, ran directly into the latter's jaws; that is, it jumped directly upon the folds of the serpent's body. The snake struck instantly, fastening its fangs between the rat's shoulders. Then began a contest that in its small way was truly thrilling. The rat, struggling violently, endeavored to shake itself free, while the snake as persistently endeavored to drag the head of its victim into its own mouth. This feat it was at first unable to accomplish. The rat was game, and as it writhed in its convulsive efforts to escape, bit the big snake severely in the neck just back of the head, until the blood flowed and mixed with its own. These counter attacks became at last so savagely painful that the snake loosened its grip, remaining, however, in half-coil. But the respite was too brief to afford the rat its opportunity to escape, for again the snake's fierce jaws descended and closed, this time around the rat's head. The heavy body of the rat still swayed violently, but dragged with it the head of the snake, until the latter was thrown completly out of coil. By this time, however, the rat's struggles had grown comparatively faint, and the snake was apparently the victor. But the next moment the snake in its turn began to struggle violently, as if to release its adversary's head, but ineffectually, and the reason soon became apparent. The rat had bitten quite through the snake's throat, and its sharp teeth could be distinctly seen in the narrow slit they made. The writhings of the snake were now intense. It lashed the ground with its tail, and raised its thick folds to almost half its length from the ground. The spectator stood hesitant, scarcely knowing whether he ought or ought not to interfere. The next moment he was powerless in the premises, for the snake, with one last convulsive effort, threw half its length into the muddy water, and the doughty twain sank together to a common death.—Stockton Mail.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 29, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 29 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. O. G. Sheppard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-tf

Recently at a matinee, a long, gaunt individual, with legs as thin as whittled matches, came into the theater and stood in front of some gentlemen, shutting out their view of the stage.

One of the party said:

"If you guess what this is in front of us, I'll put a label on it."

"It's a plumb-line somebody dropped down from the family circle," remarked another; and the thin man began to move aside.

"Next to the boarding-house soup, it's the thinest thing I've seen," said a third party; and the slim party got uneasy and sat down.

THE CAMPAIGN
Weekly Sentinel.

The first number of the Campaign Weekly Sentinel will be issued Wednesday, July 7, and be continued each week until November 10.

Each issue will contain a complete summary of the important political news and opinions of the week, and a large amount of interesting information.

The democratic party has never been more determined or more of a unit than it is to-day, and every indication points to a brilliant victory in November. But to insure that victory it is necessary that every true friend of honest government should "put his shoulder to the wheel" and do his utmost to help the common cause.

The importance of keeping the people thoroughly informed in such a contest cannot be overestimated. In no way can this be done so effectually as by circulating among them a live newspaper of established reputation, which furnishes every week a fresh, full and accurate account of current political events in the state and country, and presents the issues of the day clearly and forcibly.

The campaign Sentinel will be found thoroughly alive and up to the mark in every respect, and we bespeak for it a large circulation. A copy should be placed in the hands of every democratic or doubtful voter in the state and to this end we invite the co-operation of all our friends and subscribers and of democratic committees throughout the state. If subscriptions cannot in every case be obtained, send the paper free. A little money spent in this way now will be much more beneficial and far reaching in its results than ten times the amount expended in some other way near the close of the campaign.

The terms are exceedingly low and within the reach of all:

Single copies for the campaign	$0 40
Two copies	70
Five copies	1 50
Ten copies	3 00
Twenty-five copies	7 00
Fifty copies	15 00
Fifty copies, to one address	12 50

Cash must accompany all orders. Address

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE Steam Cordage Company's storehouse at Elizabeth, N. J., burned last week Loss $65,000; insured. While the firemen were at work the south wall fell, killing William H. Wood, Brennan, and William Looby, an employe in the rope works, fatally injuring James Marsh and James Moore, and seriously hurting two other men.... Two hotels and twenty-nine stores were destroyed by fire at Tarport, Pa.

GEORGE FEARN, an Englishman, has performed a remarkable feat in swimming at New York. He swam a distance of fifteen miles, a portion of the way lying through the fierce current of Hell Gate, in three hours, twenty-seven minutes and forty-six seconds.

THE WEST.

THE Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank, a State institution at St. Paul, Minn., has failed, with liabilities of about $95,000, and assets of $102,000.... The Woodsdale Paper Company's paper mill, near Hamilton, Ohio, has been burned. Loss, $80,000.... Three boy murderers were hanged at Canton, Ohio, on Friday, June 25. Two of them, G. O. Ohr and George W. Mann, were convicted of the murder of John Wattmough, an aged weaver, about a year ago, in order to obtain possession of his money, only $5. The third victim was George Sammet, who killed a party who was a witness against him in a burglary trial. James Hade Brown was hanged at Huntsville, Mo., for having fatally shot his mother-in-law some three years ago.

A PROMINENT real-estate dealer in Chicago named Newell chose a novel mode of ending his existence. He left his home, in the western part of the city, one evening, and his wife received a letter from him the same night, written from a down-town hotel, saying that he had discovered that lead was a better floating substance than cork; that, acting on this discovery, he was about to invent a lead life-preserver, was going out in one of the lake steamers to experiment with it, and on his return to the city would sell his patent for $100,000 and pay off all his debts. There is no doubt that he went out in the boat and tried the lead preserver, and was of course drowned, for his clothes were found on the boat on its return to the city. The deceased was financially embarrassed, and was doubtless temporarily insane at the time of committing the rash act.

A PASSENGER train on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railway was thrown from the track near Sargent, Kan., demolishing several cars, killing one passenger, fatally injuring two, and severely wounding several others.... A terrible double tragedy is reported from Elkhart, Ind. George Elliott, a young man of dissipated habits, fired two balls into the head of his sweetheart, Mamie Dacey, because, in the hope of curing his evil tendencies, she had accepted other attentions; and then the drunken fiend killed himself.... Near Canton, Ohio, a beautiful woman named Jennie Landes attempted to murder a young man with whom she was desperately in love, firing one shot at him. She then put a bullet through her own head, and died almost instantly.... A wrecking train collided with a freight train on the Vandalia road, about six miles from St. Louis, causing the instant death of two men, the fatal wounding of two others, and injuring ten men more or less seriously.... The wheat crop in Kansas, except in the western counties, has turned out to be much better than was anticipated. The corn yield will be fully up to the average.

IN accordance with the custom of several years Augustin Daly's New York Theater company is now making a summer visit to Haverly's Theater, in Chicago, where they appear in last season's New York successes, originally produced at Daly's Theater. "A Modern Arabian Night," a comedy by the authors of "The Big Bonanza," is the attraction this week.

THE stage from Challis, Idaho, for Salt Lake, was robbed by six convicts who escaped from the Idaho penitentiary. Seven passengers in the coach, five men and two women, were robbed of all their valuables, amounting to a few hundred dollars, and stripped of clothing, being left absolutely naked. In that condition they traveled several miles to the next station, where sheets and blankets were obtained for covering until they reached the Utah Northern railroad.... Two soldiers named Taylor and Robinson, at Fort Stockton, quarreled about a woman, and Robinson shot Taylor dead. The murderer was turned over to the civil authorities, and the next day was forced, under a strong guard, to dig his victim's grave.

GENS. POPE and Hatch have agreed to scatter soldiers in small detachments over all exposed territory in New Mexico, and to give Gen. Buell 900 men for active service.... Hoodoo Brown and Charley Frank, gamblers, fired at each other across a table at Buena Vista, Col. Brown is dead, and Frank cannot live.

A BREAK in what is known as the Sny levee, an embankment which protects the Illinois river bottoms for many miles north and south of Quincy, from overflow of the Mississippi river, has caused an immense destruction of property and some loss of life. It is estimated that 300,000 bushels of wheat and thousands of acres of standing corn have been ruined. Many houses and barns have floated away, and considerable stock has been drowned. The region flooded is forty miles long by from four to ten wide, and comprises some of the best land in the State of Illinois.... Santa Fe dispatches report that Victoria's Apaches attacked Gov. Louis Terrasa's ranch at San Lorenzo, about thirty miles from Chihuahua, Mexico, killed some men, and stole about 100 horses. They then attacked Ranch De Santa Clara, about sixty miles from Chihuahua, killing some more men and stealing a large number of horses. United States and Mexican troops were in pursuit of the savages.

THE SOUTH.

THREE negroes who took refuge under a tree near Louisville, Ky., during a furious thunder-storm, a few nights ago, were found sitting there stone dead the next morning. Lightning did it.

JOHN A. KASSON, Minister to Austria, has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Des Moines (Iowa) district.

WASHINGTON.

THE Secretary of War has suspended the recommendation of the West Point Academy Board that Whittaker be dropped on account of deficiency in his studies. This will give him an opportunity of demanding a court-martial in his case if he desires to vindicate himself. If he should be dismissed now, he would have no chance of being further heard.... The excess of value of exports from this country over the imports for the year ending the 31st of May, as reported from the Treasury Department, amounts to $162,521,693.

THE President has appointed Daniel B. Dyer, of Baxter Springs, Kan., Agent for the Indians at the Quapaw Agency, Ind. Ter., vice Amos T. S. THE concession granted to an American company by the Nicaraguan Government, giving it the exclusive privilege of constructing a ship canal across that country, has been received at Washington.

Ten thousand people, principally Kurds, have perished from hunger in the districts of Bayazid, Alashgerd and Van, Asia Minor.... The war in Buenos Ayres has ended in the triumph of the national arms.... The Russian army on the Chinese frontier has been defeated and put to flight.

THE rifle-match at Dollymount, Ireland, on the 29th ult., between the American and Irish teams, was won by the former, by a total score of 1,292 to 1,280. At 800 yards the contestants tied, with 436 each. At 900 yards the Americans scored 436 to their opponents' 428, and at 1,000 yards the former made 420 and the latter 416. The Lord Lieutenant and the Lord Mayor of Dublin were among the spectators.

IN the shooting at Dollymount, Ireland, on the 30th ult., the Americans were again victorious, Laird carrying off the £10 cup, and Scott that presented by the Earl of Spencer.... The religious decrees were enforced in France, on the 30th ult., the Jesuits quitting their establishments under protest and declaring that they yielded only to force. There was some disorder at Avignon, Marseilles, and other places on the part of sympathizers with the banished brotherhood.

The quarterly return just published shows the gross revenue of the United Kingdom for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, was £84,962,063, against £83,220,327 last year, and for the last quarter of the present year £19,619,058, against £18,922,050 the same period the previous year. There is thus a net decrease in the year of £1,258,264, and a net increase in the quarter of £697,008.

Chloroforming During Sleep.

The possibility of chloroforming a person in sleep, without waking him, having been disputed in a recent murder trial, Dr. J. V. Quimby, of Jersey City, was led to test the question experimentally. The results were presented in a paper before the section of medical jurisprudence at a late meeting of the American Medical Association. Dr. Quimby made arrangements with a gentleman to enter his room when he was asleep and apply chloroform to him. He did this with entire success, transferring the person from natural to artificial sleep without arousing him. He used about three drachms of Squibb's chloroform, and occupied about seven minutes in the operation. The second case was a boy of 13 who had refused to take ether for a minor operation. Dr. Quimby advised the mother to give the boy a light supper and put him to bed. She did so, and Dr. Quimby, calling when the boy was asleep, administered the chloroform and performed the operation without awakening the boy. The third case was a boy of 10 years, suffering from an abscess, and the same course was pursued with equal success. Two important inferences may be drawn from these cases, Dr. Quimby said. Minor surgical operations may be done with perfect safety and much more pleasantly than in the ordinary way, and, secondly, a person somewhat skilled in the use of chloroform may enter a sleeping apartment and administer chloroform with evil intentions while a person is asleep. Hence the use of this drug in the hands a criminal may become an effective instrument in the accomplishment of his nefarious designs.

ANOTHER MARINE DISASTER.

Destruction by Fire of the Steamer Seawanhaka, Near New York City—Fifty Lives Lost.

The steamer Seawanhaka, plying on Long Island sound, between New York city and Glen Cove, took fire on the afternoon of the 28th ult., when off Randall's island, and burned to the water's edge. There were about 500 passengers on board; 450 were saved by passing steamers, but the remainder either jumped over board and were drowned, or remained on the boat and perished by fire. Charles A. Dana, of the New York Sun, and two of the Harper Brothers were among the rescued passengers. From the telegraphic accounts of the disaster printed in the metropolitan press, we glean the following particulars: The Seawanhaka, one of the fastest and trimmest steamers running out of New York, left her dock at 4:15 o'clock p. m., her deck well crowded. Many were returning to their country residences, and others were leaving town to escape the heat of the city, and spend the night in the cool villages along the sound. When off College point, in the sound, a few miles from the city, a cloud of thick dark smoke suddenly rose through the grating near the pilot-house. It was first thought that the smoke came from the engine-room, and no danger was for the moment apprehended; but, before the passengers had recovered from their first surprise, flames shot up through the grating, crept around the pilot-house, attacked the dry, inflammable deck, and spread with wonderful speed in all directions. The Captain was in the pilot-house, and was first to see the danger to which his human freight was so unexpectedly exposed.

The cry "The boat's on fire" was raised, and in an instant the steamer was the scene of appalling confusion. A rush was made for the lockers in which the life-preservers were kept. Many of the men retained their presence of mind, and aided the officers of the steamer in equipping the women and children with preservers. The voice of the Captain was heard above the din and confusion counseling the people to maintain order, but order was out of the question, and, although the Captain and his crew were, said to have acted with firmness and celerity it was beyond their power to control the panic-stricken crowd. The fire-extinguishing apparatus was set at work, but in vain. The flames swept the steamer amidships, and spread both ways. Most of the passengers huddled together toward the forward end of the boat. The port side was all ablaze, but on the starboard there was still a narrow space along which the passengers thronged toward the bow.

When it became certain that the steamer was doomed a heartrending scene of terror ensued. Mothers clasped their children to their breasts and sprung overboard with them. Capt. Smith ordered his boats lowered, and headed the vessel, under a full head of steam, for the low land at the north end of Ward's island. The steamer Granite State was behind the Seawanhaka when she caught fire, and her boats were at once lowered, and many persons on the water were picked up. The tug Refuge and a score of row-boats were soon around the blazing steamer, which kept moving toward the island. It was discovered that the water was too shallow to permit a landing at Ward's island, and the vessel's head was turned toward the Sunken Meadows, a strip of marshy ground on the south side of Randall's island. There the Seawanhaka was run aground. A hundred people in the tug and row-boats were picking up the passengers in the water. The persons who appeared to be dead were at first passed by, in order that speedier succor might be given to the others. It is feared that many were lost of whom no record has yet been obtained, and that their bodies drifted out into the sound with the tide.

Dr. A. E. McDonald, of the Ward Island Insane Asylum, says that when he saw people jumping from the steamer he ordered a force of 500 partially insane men, who were working on the farm near the shore, to save what lives they could. Many of them jumped into the water and drew to land a number who had struggled almost to the shore, and others rescued the bodies which had drifted landward. Quite a number remained on the Seawanhaka until they were driven off by the flames. One man and a child held on the guard rail until it was burned away.

Fireman Edward Abeel, of the Seawanhaka, says: "All of a sudden I heard a noise resembling an explosion, and, looking around, saw flames coming up from between the fire-room and engine-room. In less than ten minutes the steamer was one mass of flames from stem to stern. It seemed as if the fire spread instantly, for no sooner had it appeared between the engine-room and the fire-room than it broke out also both fore and aft. I can no way account for the fire. The engineer and firemen were always very particular to see that no inflammable stuff lay about. Engines and boilers were considered in excellent condition. The only way I account for it is the possibility that a flue blew out, opening the furnace door and scattering the fire a considerable distance around. The slight noise I heard may have been a flue bursting. I am certain the boiler did not burst. I think two-thirds of the passengers must have jumped over before she beached. The whole thing was almost instantaneous, affording no possibility of ascertaining with certainty the cause of the fire, or even of doing anything to check it. As to the loss of life, it was principally from drowning in the rapid current. I saw several badly burned—one man with both legs almost burned off. The officers and crew, I believe, are all saved except Josiah Hasbrouck, the cook, and Charles Hasbrouck, a waiter."

Keep Ahead.

One of the grand secrets of success in life is to keep ahead in all ways possible. If you once fall behind, it may be very difficult to make up the headway which is lost. One who begins with putting aside some part of his earnings, however small, and keeps it up for a number of years, is likely to become rich before he dies. One who inherits property, and goes on year by year spending a little more than his income, will become poor if he lives long enough. Living beyond their means has brought multitudes of persons to ruin in our generation. It is the cause of nine-tenths of all the defalcations which have disgraced the age. Bankers and business men in general do not often help themselves to other people's money until their own fund begins to fall off, and their expenditures exceed their receipts. A man who is in debt walks in the midst of perils. It cannot but impair a man's self-respect to know that he is living at the expense of others. It is also very desirable that we should keep somewhat ahead in our work. This may not be possible in all cases; as, for instance, when a man's work is assigned to certain fixed hours, like that of the operatives in a mill. But there are certain classes of people who can choose their time for the work which they are called to do, and amongst them there are some who invariably put off the task assigned them as long as possible, and then come to its performance hurried, perplexed, anxious, confused—in such a state of mind as certainly unfits them for doing their best work. Get ahead and keep ahead, and your success is tolerably sure.

JOHN SAYRE, of Bridghampton, L. I., chief officer of the whaling vessel Alaska, arrived home a few days ago, after a cruise of nearly four years. In that time they took 3,220 barrels of sperm oil, 208 barrels of whale oil, and 1,217 pounds of whalebone. It is said to be the largest catch within the same time in thirty years.

STAGE AND ROSTRUM.

LOTTA, the actress, is reported to be the affianced wife of Clarence Bainbridge, an actor.

THERE is talk of Miss Ada Dyas starring next season in a new play by Joaquin Miller.

MAGGIE MITCHELL'S husband is willing to spend all of his wife's money. The voice of the Cricket is sad.

ZAZEL, the girl who is fired out of a gun in Barnum's circus, is now called "the loadstar" of the arena.

MRS. JOHN DREW will travel next season with Jefferson, playing "The Rivals," it is said, the greater part of the time.

MISS KATE FIELD is making a tour with her "Musical Monologue," under the management of Mr. H. J. Sargent, and it is probable she will go as far as San Francisco.

JOE EMMETT is at home in his new tenor-drum specialty introduced in the last act of "Fritz in Ireland." He started in the profession as tenor-drum player with W. W. Newcomb's minstrels, and received the munificent salary of $5 a week for his services.

PAULINE LUCCA, according to a French newspaper, "cares but little for money. Lately an American impressario offered her a million of dollars to make a tour in Australia. But the diva refused, saying that she had money enough to live on, that she liked to sing for the love of art, and that she had no need of Australian gold."

HENRY IRVING, the English actor, asks $100,000 for fifty nights in this country; but at present 'longshoremen in New York are only getting $1.50 a day. This country is not buying English, body and boots, so Henry will probably remain at home and help Sullivan complain of a want of taste in the American people.—Norristown Herald.

THE new play, "Edgwood Folks," will require a cast of twelve people. Sol Smith Russell, will, of course, be the leading feature. Among those already engaged are Charles Rockwell, J. W. Lanergan, Walter Lennox, jr., Sol Smith, B. T. Ringgold, William Warmington, Mrs. Sol Smith, Mattie Earl and Nellie Taylor. They will open the season August 23, at Park Theatre, New York.

F. C. BURNARD: "To adopt the stage as a profession, means to practice the art of acting not merely as a pastime for one's self, and perhaps for the amusement of others, but only for the entertainment of the public, who pay the actor for his trouble, and so make his employment in their service furnish him with the means of living. 'Give me a song,' says the public to the actor, 'and I'll give you your supper.'"

THE London Sunday Times says of Sullivan's "Pirates of Penzance:" "The secret of the entire work is that it was written down to American tastes, that it succeeded 'Pinafore,' and was perforce cast in the same mold." Not complimentary, but true. It also adds: "As a writer of opera Mr. Gilbert is eccentric, seeming to inhabit a kind of world whose vanities are to be looked at upside down. Though this is admirable in its way, it does not bear frequent repetition. People become tired of standing on their heads, so to speak, and want to regain their legs; but they will not be able to do so over the 'Pirates of Penzance.'"

THE success Pauline Lucca has met with in Berlin has been almost suffocating. On the night of her farewell performance, in response to loud plaudits, she advanced before the curtain and expressed her gratitude in a few sentences broken by emotion and other considerations. Passing from his box to the stage, the Emperor took the opportunity of thanking Lucca for the great pleasure her singing and acting had given him, and subsequently she was presented, in his name, with a beautiful and costly bracelet, set with diamonds and other precious stones.

CHARLES WEBB has taken some extraordinary liberties with Shakespeare in preparing Twelfth Night for use by Robson and Crane, the comedians. The seventeen changes of scene are reduced to five, but there is more than a mere rearrangement. Much of the material is discarded, and new language and incidents are put in. The most daring of the latter are the tossing of "Malvolio" in a blanket and a duel between "Sir Toby" and "Sebastian." Mr. Webb is kind enough, too, to unmistakably unite "Sir Toby" to "Maria," the "Duke" to "Viola," and "Sebastian" to "Olivia," at the end of the play.

The Maiden's Prayer.

A romantic young man asked his sweetheart to take a walk with him by moonlight on the river bluff at East Dubuque, Iowa. She went gladly. When half way up the extension they halted to admire the prospect. Suddenly a stone slipped underneath the young man's feet and he went down like a curtain-stick. He caught hold of some vines which clung to the rocks and hung on for dear life, expecting to fall a hundred feet and be dashed to pieces on the rocks below. The young woman could not pull him up, so she fell on her knees and prayed for him. The young man united with her after this fashion: "Help! Murder! Oh, Lord! I know I'll be all broke up. Now I lay me. Confound it all, I forgot. Oh, Jerusalem! I've got to let go pretty quick. Give us some daily bread. Oh, that ain't right! Oh, Lord! Send somebody to help me out of this scrape. Help! Thunder!" At this point he could hold on no longer, but went down. But not one hundred feet. Only a few feet, for he landed on a ledge which neither he nor she had seen in their excitement. A small fragment of cuticle rubbed off his knee was the sole injury.

Thieves in London.

Considering what temptations are placed in their way, it is not wonderful that the larcenous experts of the light finger and the nimble foot flourish in this huge metropolis. A day or two since was recorded a very neat case of theft, of which a suburban tradesman was the unwilling victim. One of his light carts was out delivering goods and taking orders, and in the course of its circuit came to a stop in Maida-vale. There the man in charge left it and went into a customer's house in regular course. Unfortunately the road was "up;" a steam roller was puffing and snorting by leisurely stages over the crushed macadam, and, to keep his horse safe, the judicious butter man had left the animal a few yards further off from the house than its usual position. When he returned from a brief interview with "cook," the horse and cart had disappeared into the infinities, and with them about forty pounds of butter, a large assortment of sausages, and various baskets of eggs. The police were put on the alert and in a few hours the horse and cart were discovered about a mile off, the thieves having carried away all the contents except the eggs, which obviously owed their immunity to the fact that they could not survive intact a hasty flight, while they might leave awkward tell-tale evidence of the road they took.—London Telegraph.

Breeding Elephants.

If, as Mr. Corse and the London Circus seem to have demonstrated, elephants, under proper conditions, may be brought to breed in captivity, it may be an open question whether, in view of the increased difficulty of capturing the animals, the supply in India may, at no distant day, be wholly dependent upon their power to produce their young in bondage. Mr. Corse's experience enabled him to study the young elephant from its birth under extraordinarily advantageous conditions. The precise period of gestation, he says, is twenty months and eighteen days. The young animal when born is thirty-five and a half inches high. It soon begins to nibble and suck the breast, pressing it with its trunk to make the milk flow more readily into the mouth while sucking. It has never been observed to use its proboscis in any other way during this act, but invariably seized the nipple with the side of its mouth. At this period it is a common practice with the elephant attendants to raise a small mound of earth about six or eight inches high, for the young one to stand on, and thus save the mother the trouble of bending her body every time she gives suck; for she never has been observed to lie down for that purpose. The nipples are two in number and are between the fore legs.

It is remarkable that the elephant, having only one young, has by no means a strong affection for it. Instances have occurred of a mother leaving her offspring and escaping into the woods. If a wild elephant happens to be separated from her young only for two days, though giving suck, she never afterwards recognizes or acknowledges it.

"I have been much mortified," Mr. Corse says, "at such unnatural conduct, particularly when it was evident that the young elephant knew its dam, and by its plaintive cries and submissive approach, solicited her assistance."

During the first year the elephant grows eleven inches, and is nearly three feet eleven inches high. In the second year it grows eight inches, in the third six, in the fourth year five inches; about the same in the fifth year; in the sixth year three inches and a half, measuring then about six feet four inches in height. During the succeeding ten years the growth is comparatively slow. The male is longer in attaining its full growth than the female, seldom having acquired it before his twenty-sixth year. These figures are arrived at by Mr. Crose from the study of Asiatic elephants only. The African elephant does not arrive at the colossal proportions of his Oriental brother. But it will be observed that while Mr. Crose only succeeded twice in breeding during his five years' service as a director of the company's elephant hunters, he nevertheless speaks of facts that could only have been learned from some one who had studied elephants, other than the two born within his experience, from their birth upward; so that the conclusion is irresistible that the birth of young ones among the elephants owned by the East India Company was not an uncommon occurrence.—New York Sun.

An Arkansas Examination.

"Cap'n," said a colored man, entering the office of a School Examiner whose skin was so black that to see him you would think he had spent his life in boiling crows for dissatisfied politicians, "Cap'n," repeated the visitor, lightly tapping on the door facing.

"Wall, sah, what is hit?"

"I'se called roun' ter be 'zammoned. I'se a 'fessional school teacher."

The money was cheerfully paid and the man with his blotted coon skin went out into the world to engage in the tournament of letters.—Little Rock Gazette.

A VERY STRANGE STORY.

How a Negro Confederate Spy Was Arrested After the War and Sold into Slavery in Cuba.

[Washington (Miss.) Gazette.]

In 1863 General Pemberton commanded at this point. Colonel Hemingway owned a faithful slave—Peyton by name, a noted negro fiddler, known for miles around, and highly respected by both black and white. When his young master, W. Lynn Hemingway, at present State Treasurer of Mississippi, joined the old "Carroll Rifles," he took Peyton along as a trusted servant. He went with him into Virginia and returned home in 1863. In February or March of that year a faithful spy was needed to visit the Federal gunboats then coming down the river on Fort Pamberton. Peyton at once undertook the mission, and representing himself as a fugitive slave to the commanders of the boats, was well received. Being bright far beyond ordinary, he managed to secrete their official papers, maps, etc., and escaped with these documents to Fort Pamberton. After the fall of Vicksburg, in July following, Peyton went with his young master again to Virginia, where he remained until the surrender of Gen. Lee. The former being compelled to remain a number of days thereafter in order to comply with the formalities of the surrender, sent Peyton ahead of him to his home, near Carrollton, Miss. On his way, however, he was betrayed to the enemy by some confederate as the spy who had deceived them above Fort Pemberton, was captured and carried in irons to New York, thence to Cuba, and sold as a slave, together with many others. The vessel on which he was taken was a Federal gunboat. In Cuba he worked as a slave in factories for nearly fifteen years, being entirely cut off from all communication with home and friends. He made seven attempts to escape from bondage, all but the last, of course, being successful. Finally he found an American vessel, commanded by a southerner, to whom he related the history of his capture, enslavement and forced exile, and begged to be returned to home and family. The captain secreted him in the hold of his vessel, carried him to Costa Rica, thence to New York. Peyton then worked his way to Virginia, where a number of ladies raised the means to return him to his home after an absence of seventeen years. He reached Winona, Miss., on the 15th of April, 1880. Peyton says that numbers of the mulatto women are being constantly sold in Cuba as slaves. Northern men marry them, take them to Cuba "on a bridal tour," and there sell them as cooks and fancy house servants. He saw one sold last fall, by the man who married her, for $500; and further, that as he came through Cincinnati on his way home, he saw the man and recognized him who sold her in Cuba. The facts above given are from one of the most reliable and responsible gentlemen in Mississippi, written to a most distinguished member of Congress from that State. Closing his letter, he says of Peyton:

"He was delighted to again meet his wife, who had married in his long absence, though her second husband was drowned several months ago. Hence he found her a widow. With both husband and wife it was like a return to life from death. Peyton is an exceedingly intelligent negro, and says that he can hardly realize the changes that have taken place. He left his children babies, and finds finds them married and with children of their own."

If any one doubts the truth of this story, he or she can write to Captain B. F. Jones, Winona, Miss., or to C. Y. F. Merriwether, Oakland, Yalobusha County, same State.

REMEMBER.

Before in sleep I close my eyes,
These things I must remember thrice,
What I've been doing all the day,
What were my acts at work or play;
What have I heard? what have I seen?
What have I learned where'er I've been?
What have I learned that's worth the knowing?
What have I done that's worth the doing?
What have I done that I should not?
What duty was this day forgot?
Before in sleep I close my eyes,
These things I must remember thrice.

If I've done ill, then I must pray,
That God would take my sins away;
And for the merits of His Son,
Forgive the ills I have done.
Then pardoned daily, filled with love,
I'll be prepared to dwell above;
And then with angels round the throne,
The love of God forever own.

EVERY flower, even the fairest, has its shadow beneath it as it swings in the sunlight.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

The population of New York, according to the census of 1880, is about 1,500,000; Brooklyn, between 600,000 and 700,000; of both cities and adjacent places, nearly 2,500,000. The oldest man in the city is a colored man, aged 118. The mother of the most children has twenty-two—all girls.

There are now 42,677 postoffices in the United States, an increase of 1,838 in the past year. The number of offices paying more than $1,000 each, and therefore called Presidential postoffices, is 1,764. New York heads the list, with 189. Illinois comes next, with 163; then Pennsylvania, with 132, and Ohio, with 112.

Gen. Butler has been making a speech in Los Angeles, wherein he praised poetically California's wonderful climate, opposed the Panama canal scheme as inimical to American commerce, and stated that if we are indebted to anybody for the Chinese it is to England, who theoretically and practically controls the shipments of the Celestials to this country.

Parliamentary campaigns in England are very expensive affairs. In comparison our Congressional elections are economical, not to say parsimonious. According to returns from the recent Parliamentary campaign in England, it is shown that in Manchester the candidate spent $100,000; in Birmingham, $65,000; in Bradford, $50,000; in each of three other constituencies the expenditure was $30,000; in another, $35,000.

The preliminary workings for the tunnel uniting England and France have had the most satisfactory results. The promoters have sunk their shaft to the stratum in which they propose to bore the tunnel, and are now going to sink another shaft, and lower all the machinery for the bore. In eighteen months they expect to have reached two kilometers, about two and a quarter miles, under the channel, and in three or four years to have completed the task.

Idaho Territory holds court at Boise, where is located all the Government offices, and is the home of the United States Marshal. He goes to Lewiston, 400 miles distant, twice a year to attend district court, and also twice a year to Malad for the same purpose, traveling a distance of 525 miles to reach there. To simply attend the courts in the three districts requires him to travel 3,700 miles. But to do all his official work last year caused him to travel by stage 9,000 miles.

Fourteen girls, students in a Western college, are writing a continued story which one of the county papers is publishing from week to week. Each girl in turn writes a chapter. Already twelve chapters have appeared, and the story thus far concerns twelve splendid fellows, with long, silky mustaches, twelve beautiful maidens with hair that reaches the ground, and twelve stern fathers. Six of the heroes had each a "St." in his name, and the other six are "De" somebodies.

A druggist's assistant was charged before the Correctional Chamber in Paris, a few days ago, with causing the death of a man by misreading a prescription. The doctor, whose writing is very clear, ordered eight drops of laudanum, which the assistant carelessly read as eight grammes, or about a quarter of an ounce. The overdose naturally killed the patient, and the court sentenced the prisoner to three months' imprisonment. His advocate urged as an extenuating circumstance that, if the mistake had cost the deceased his life, it had at least provided him with a painless death!

A singular incident occurred in a Cape May county (N. J.) church, the other Sunday, when the sacrament of the last supper was to be administered. The service had proceeded to the point when the pastor takes the bread, when it was found that there was no bread under the cloth. The pastor arose from his knees, requesting the congregation to do likewise, and proceeded to explain that there was doubtless some providence in the matter, which a brother disputed, saying that it was a case of pure neglect on the part of the sexton. The sexton, being an aged man, was finally let down softly.

How quickly a demand for mechanical improvement is supplied in this country may be shown by the story of what the Scientific American calls a shower of railroad spikes. The latter could not be furnished rapidly enough by existing mills when railroad-building, long suspended, was suddenly revived, but a machine to meet the demand was soon perfected and set at work in Pittsburgh. Two of them now turn out forty tons of finished spikes in a day of ten hours, and five of them, working double time, make 1,100 kegs of spikes (thirteen to the ton) each day. The old or ordinary spike-machine, it is said, can only make about one-tenth the number of spikes turned out by the new machine.

An anti-dueling association has been formed in South Carolina, with ex-Judge Kershaw as President. "We intend," the resolutions say, "to train, educate, and organize the public opinion and moral sense of the people to a true perception of the criminality of this wicked and pernicious practice; to take proper measures to secure an adjustment of all personal difficulties which might tend to involve any of our fellow-citizens in a duel; to enforce the laws against dueling in every case of their violation hereafter occurring, whether the same shall consist of sending, accepting, or bearing a challenge of the fighting of a duel, or the counseling, aiding, or abetting any of these offenses."

A Paris authority on American affairs tells the following truthful story about an adventure that befell the dancer, Sangalli: "Once, when a manageress of a traveling circus in the wilds of Ohio, she was suddenly attacked by a band of savage Sioux Indians, led by the redoubtable Sitting Bull. Everybody fled, and all was consternation and despair, many persons being drowned in the tempestuous waves of the Amazon. Suddenly this heroine sprang upon an unsaddled horse, rallied around her P. T. Barnum and a few others of her employes, and, with a revolver in hand, attacked and dispersed the murderous red devils. Kansas City rewarded her with a commemorative medal, and Col. Buffalobill, of Lieut. Gen. Sheridan's staff, knelt at her feet and offered her his hand and fortune."

The word census had its origin from the office of Censor in Rome, one of the duties of which was to estimate (censere) the number of citizens and the value of their property, and apportion taxes accordingly. In the Middle Ages the word was applied principally, if not wholly, to the practical work of taxation, but in modern times it has lost this meaning. The enumeration of the people of the United States provided for in the constitution is the first modern instance of an undertaking of the kind. The first United States census was taken in 1790, and the first British census (exclusive then of Ireland) not until 1810. In the United States, the census serves chiefly a political purpose, affording the basis of representation in the lower house. In Great Britain its object is entirely statistical and economical.

Germantown, close by Philadelphia, is a demure old Quaker town. One of its peculiarities is a free public library of 10,000 volumes, from which fiction is rigidly excluded. The works of Shakspeare, Byron, Pope, Dryden, Thackeray and Kingsley are among those that are kept out. "Have you any of Mark Twain's works here?" a Philadelphia Times reporter asked. "No; his book of travels, I suppose we hardly considered reliable enough," the Librarian replied; "I don't know, though; there's some truth in them, I suppose—at least I've heard it said there was. I heard it, though," said the Librarian, looking a little dubious, "in a way that didn't altogether satisfy me. We don't put any plays in, and Shakspeare stays out on that ground. Of course there are some works on general literature that contain his quotations, but we can't help that. We hold that the mind should be led to take up wholesome reading—books on travels or natural history or biography—something that will amuse and instruct together. Our idea is that in reading a person may become dissipated, just the same as by drinking whisky."

Too Much Paris Green.

It is reported that a family has just been poisoned by eating lettuce upon which Paris green was found, and many other unpleasant stories of the same kind have been heard every year since the arrival of the potato-bug brought Paris green into common use out of doors. Such accidents should remind the owners of farms and gardens that the favorite remedy for potato bugs is not one of the simple insect-powders that are advertised as harmless to human beings, but a virulent poison to whatever being tastes it in small quantities. Owners of large crops that are subject to insect ravages may be justified in using it, but even these should take special care that the wind or some other force does not carry the poison to berries or to vegetables of which the leafy portions are eaten. In home gardens, where the various vegetables and small fruits are grown near each other, it should not be used at all. Small boys who pick potato bugs at 3 cents a quart may cost a little more than Paris green, but, on the other hand, they are cheaper than doctors or respectable funerals.

The Butcher and His Wife.

If you would look upon a picture of serene contentment, go you to the butcher's, buy a leg of mutton, and gaze upon the placid countenance of the the man of joints while he trims your meat. Down comes the cleaver, and off goes a two-pound bit of your ten-pound purchase; a pound off here, and a half a pound there, and then a keen-bladed knife, which cuts and carves, and cuts and comes again. Then your ten-pound leg, what is left of it, is wrapped in a bit of straw paper; and as you put it mechanically in your vest pocket, after paying out your two dollars, you wend your footsteps homeward, wondering how butchers contrive to lay up anything from their business.

FARM NOTES.

Pick off the potato bugs by hand when the vines are small; it will save the necessity for Paris green.

The mowing machine ought not to be gauged to cut low. If grass is cut too close the succeeding crop is much injured, especially if the summer is a dry one.

As a rule, in a country which produces a wild fruit a cultivated variety of the same may be successfully raised. Therefore, wherever the wild blackberry makes its appearance, the Lawton and other improved varieties ought to have at least a fair trial.

When plants are to be transplanted they should be well wet down several hours before moving, so as to allow the water to soak around the roots, and if this must be done while the sun is shining brightly it will be best to shade the plants for a time till the water has soaked in.

Oats are often recommended as an excellent crop with which to sow grass seed. The argument is, that the oats will shade and protect the young grass. But grass does not need shade, when sown in proper season—it needs sun, and especially it needs moisture; and this the oat plants are continually taking from the soil, thus robbing the young grass plants from the start.

A farmer on the line between Iowa and Missouri has been experimenting with cow-pea as a weed exterminator, cocklebur and Spanish needles having taken possession of his orchard. He says that sown broadcast the peas will not do it, but planted in drills and cultivated like corn they will kill out the weeds. The peas he planted were mixed, but mostly the whippoorwill variety.

The best food for fattening fowls is a mixture of boiled potatoes mashed in skim milk, with Indian meal added. Feed this warm two or three times a day, and at night one feed of whole corn. Keep the fowls in a warm, dry coop. Too much light is not advisable for rapid fattening. If the fowls are in fair order, in ten days of feeding as prescribed they will be fat enough for market.

The striped bug that infests cucumbers, squashes and melons as soon as they appear above the ground is one of the greatest obstacles in the way of a profitable cultivation of these crops. The surest prevention is to place over each hill a frame covered with mosquito netting. A treatment of ashes and plaster, applied to the plants when the dew is on, serves to make the vines less palatable to the pests, though this is by no means a sure remedy.

A gentleman experimented with peas in this way: He saved, at the time of picking, all the early full pods as they ripened, and planted the seeds saved from these pods year after year, for three years, and the fourth year had peas of the same name that were more than two weeks earlier than the seed of the same name purchased in the store. Seeds of cabbage, lettuce, tomato, cucumber, peas, corn and many others can be much improved by the same care.

The best food for young chickens is oat meal and corn meal mixed, wheat, cracked corn and other small grains. They must have fresh water before them always. Green food is good for them in small quantities. The game hen is the best sitter and mother—she can cover thirteen to fifteen eggs. Games are good foragers and very healthy fowls. All diseased fowls should be kept from the flock. A bran mash mixed with meal is a good morning feed.

Tomatoes like water, and in setting them out a cloudy day should be chosen; then, after the holes have been made for the plants and some good fertilizer placed near the root of the hill (hen manure or unleached ashes are good), lift the plant carefully with a ball of earth attached to the root, and after putting it in place, if the soil is at all dry, put a pint of water at the root of the plant in the hole and cover at once with soil. Plants thus treated will stand sunshine and do well. Potted plants or those in boxes or on turf or "flats" do not need water in setting.

A correspondent of the Garden recommends lime-water to aid in destroying worms in lawns. He says: "Worms instinctively look for moisture. In wet weather they may be found at night by scores on the surface of the lawn. Last year, after a fortnight's heavy rain, I treated my lawn to a dose of lime-water, by stirring up a very small handful of Irish lime in each gallon of water, poured the solution on the grass without a rose, and picked up the worms as they came to the surface. I filled a seven-inch pot twice with the proceeds in the shape of worms, then rolled the green; and on the following day the smaller and weaker worms were lying dead in hundreds on the surface. The work occupied a whole day, but the green has been beautiful a whole year. The larger worms come up in from one to seven minutes after the application, and must be patiently picked up as they rise; consequently only a few square yards of surface must be treated at a time, unless there are plenty of helping hands and sharp eyes."

A Hindoo Hercules.

An entertainment of a novel character was lately given at the house of Mr. Morarjee Goculdas, at Bombay; who invited a large number of guests to witness some extraordinary feats of strength on the part of the celebrated Deccan athlete, Barbajee Tulsiram. The company, which included many of the leading inhabitants of the city, sat in a semicircle, at either point of which were placed pretty little native boys arrayed in brilliant and costly apparel. The picturesque dresses of the native ladies who were present, the white robes of the Parsee gentlemen, and the gay colors of Hindoo attire had a remarkably fine effect when seen in conjunction with the beautiful surroundings. After some preliminaries in the way of handing round for inspection the material with which he intended to perform, and having satisfied the company that there was no deception, the athlete, a tall, soldierly man, some 27 years of age, and with a magnificent development of muscle, proceeded to crush a number of cowries between the palms of his hands. He completely ground them to powder in this manner, uttering during the process sharp, shrill cries, which were probably intended to express the magnitude of his exertions. Then the performer placed a cocoanut upon the head of a boy, and, with what appeared to be a fearful blow, broke the nut in pieces and scattered the milk in all directions, without, strange to say hurting the boy in any way. The next feat was breaking a stout coil rope by simply pulling it. One of the most extraordinary parts of the performance was the following: The athlete placed a betal leaf between two of his fingers and then, by pressing the fingers together, cut the leaf so as to throw the upper part several feet high. But the most startling feat was the breaking of a stone laid on his chest. The man lay down at full length on some chairs, and a huge stone, weighing four Bengal maunds, was placed on his chest, which was simply covered by a thin tunic. Two men then struck the stone some tremendous blows with heavy hammers, and, after one or two attempts, the block rolled off the man's chest in two pieces. He next made several attempts to break a cocoanut with a handkerchief. His mode of procedure in this case was to roll the handkerchief tightly in the shape of a ball, and then to throw the ball upon the nut. Pulling a piece of sugar-cane into two exactly at the joint, and bending a thick iron plate, were among other feats performed. The company then went out on the balcony, where the athlete cut a sugar-cane so as to throw up a piece thereof 1,000 feet high. It was done thus: A man held out a cimitar with the edge downward, and Barbajee struck the cane upward against the edge of the sword, the piece thus cut off flying a great distance into the air. This brought the performance to a close, and the performer was then presented with a handsome shawl.—New York World.

HOUSEKEEPERS' HELPS.

One-Egg Cake.—One cup sugar, one and one-half cups sifted flour, two-thirds cup of sweet cream, one egg, three teaspoonfuls baking-powder, one-half teaspoonful vanilla, one-fourth teaspoonful salt. Bake quickly.

Green Peas.—There isn't much principle in cooking peas, as it all depends on the tenderness of the peas. But what hurts peas is to drown them in too much water. Some cook-books say it doesn't matter as to quantity of water, but it does. Boil quickly, that's the thing, but with just as little water as you can.

To Keep Bread Moist.—Have the dough stiff when it is set for the last rising. The larger the proportion of flour to that of moisture in the dough the longer it will keep moist. After the bread is baked and cold put it in a tin box or an earthen jar with close cover, and keep it covered tightly. Bread thus made and kept cool and always from the air will last and be moist for a week.

Soda Cake.—Take one pound of flour, six ounces of butter of dripping, six ounces of sugar, half a pint of milk, one teaspoonful of carbonate of soda, and add one or two eggs, with half a pound of currants or caraway seeds; mix the soda thoroughly with the flour, rub in the butter, and beat the whole with a wooden spoon for twenty minutes before putting into a well-greased cake-tin. Bake for a full hour and a half.

Married Again Without Knowing It.

A man in Toledo, with a wife and three children, became enamoured of an interesting woman and procured a divorce in an obscure Indiana town. He did not say a word about it at home. One day his oldest daughter received a parcel of patterns from a lady in Indianapolis. It was an old copy of a country newspaper. An advertisement attracted her attention. It was an application for a divorce for her father from her mother. The young lady decided to visit her friend in Indianapolis, and to make an excursion to the county where the divorce had been granted. She returned with ample evidence that her mother was living with a diviroed man. She showed her father a copy of the advertisement, and told him that she had found out all about him. He walked the floor for a minute, and then turned to his daughter: "I have been a very bad and guilty man," he said; "but it is not too late to make amends. I will go to her and confess all, and undo what I have done." "Confess first to me," said the girl. "It is Miss —— who is the woman in the case, is it not?" "It is." "I thought as much." "Are you to marry her?" "I was to have married her." "You must not go to mamma yet. She must be your wife again before she knows the fearful truth." The young lady was equal to the emergency. The twentieth anniversary of her parents' marriage was close at hand. She invited all their friends and had them married again by the same minister who performed the ceremony twenty years before. She took pains to have her mother's rival present, and remarked to her in a corner: "Papa and mamma are married again as fast as law can do it. Whether the truth is ever known depends upon you. Papa will never tell it, I am sure, and for mamma's sake I never shall. But it does seem to me, dear, that some other climate would suit your constitution better than this."

The Horse and His Rider.

In the history of Rome, says Joseph Cook, it is related that in 331, B. C., a great chasm opened in the middle of the forum, which it was found impossible to fill. The soothsayer said it would close when it contained what Rome possessed of most value, and the state would be perpetual. A noble youth named M. Curtius demanded if Rome had anything of more value than arms and valor. He mounted his horse, richly caparisoned, and, amid the silence of the people, spurred him over the brink of the tremendous precipice (vide Liv. I, vii. 6). I have seen a striking picture of this somewhere. It represented the horse and rider after they had passed the brink and were descending to the unknown depths. There was a remarkable contrast between the fright of the brute and the unruffled self-possession of the man. The limbs of the horse were tightened to his body and the muscles of his neck drew his head to his chest, and a shuddering terror expressed itself in the flash of his starting eyes. The rider was serene and calm, with a solemn expression of majesty on his face, as of one who lived with high thoughts. If I were to spiritualize this picture I should say that it was no mean representation of a ripe Christian departing this life. The horse is the body and the rider is the spirit. Flesh shrinking, spirit steady and calm and solemn. Flesh dreading the terrible shock, and spirit wrapt in the glory of action, descending that it may ascend.

When Niagara Went Dry.

A citizen of Buffalo writes to the Courier of that city: There are undoubtedly many witnesses yet living to attest the truth of the Rev. Bishop Fuller's statement relating to the sudden and extraordinary subsidence of water in the Niagara river at the time he refers to. I remember the circumstance well, being in charge at the time of the Custom House at Black Rock ferry. The wind for several hours previous had varied but little from east to northeast, causing a strong current during the time and piling the volume of water back upon the bosom of Lake Erie. No slight sensation was manifested by the millers whose inoperative machinery was unexpectedly in a mute condition, minus the element of propelling power. George W. Tifft, Esq., in this connection, may undoubtedly be referred to as an interested witness. The steam ferry-boat Union, during the greater part of the day, was unable to reach her dock on either side, being prevented by the low stage of the water. The shore on the Canada side presented the appearance of an extended marsh of gravel and sand beds; fishermen's nets were in fold beyond the reach of the boats. The absence of water was equally perceptible on the American side. The massive pier stretched like a stone wall upon dry land; Squaw island was extended by a temporary area of barren beach; the harbor displayed the worst features of the annoying deposits which obstructed navigation and often disturbed the equilibrium of the miller's temper. In the latter respect it was a benefit, furnishing a clew to the worst obstructions to be removed. The remembered timber float-bridge sunk below available use for crossing trains, the declivity of the windlass-worked falls at the ends requiring of the pedestrian a persistent effort to reach a reliable foothold. I recollect a remark made by the late respected Col. Bird in the evening, he having visited the falls during the day, that "the water was so low on the American side that footmen could pass from the Porter mill to the small islands upon the naked rocks."

Seeing A Man Home.

I picked Simmons up pretty near drunk, and took him home. When I got to his house, as I thought, I shook him a bit, and said, "Here you are." "Right," said he, and gave a big bang to the knocker. Up went a window.

"Who's there?" screamed a woman.

"I have brought the old man home," said I.

"All right!" she cried, and came to the door.

She immediately seized hold of Simmons, and gave him such a shaking that his teeth seemed to rattle in his head.

"Who are you shaking of?" says he.

"Goodness gracious!" cried the woman, "that's not my husband's voice." I immediately struck a match, and she found she had been shaking the wrong man. "There," said she, furiously, "I've been setting up here, expecting my husband home drunk, and now I've been wasting my strength on a stranger."

"Don't he live here!" said I.

"No," said the woman, "he don't."

"What made you knock?" asked Simmons.

"Knock," said he, "you told me to."

"I thought you lived here," said I.

"Glad I don't," said he.

I suppose he was thinking of the shaking he'd had. At last I found where he did live, and got him home. As soon as ever we knocked, out she came. "Oh!" says she, "you're the wretch as makes my poor husband drunk, are you?" and she caught me a slap across the face. I've never seen a drunken man home since.

A Wonderful Man.

There are some men who never lose hope and courage, no matter what happens. About twelve years ago a gentleman in London, who was suffering from ophthalmia, became blind, and in order to regain his sight he spent large sums of money without producing the desired effect. As in consequence he became seriously embarrassed, and had no friends to assist him, he sought employment, and was eventually engaged as collector for a large establishment. It is stated that he finds his way about London unattended, travels by means of omnibuses and underground trains, and goes about his business in such a manner that a casual observer would not detect his infirmity, especially as he wears colored glasses to hide his eyes, which are rather unpleasant to look upon. The strange part of the affair is that every day he has to learn the names and addresses of the people he calls upon, as well as the amounts he has to receive, for which he gives receipts. And his employers are well satisfied with the manner in which the work is done. Surely, after that, none need feel discouraged under the ills of life.

Mutton Pie. — Ingredients — Two pounds of the neck or loin of mutton, weighed after being boned; two kidneys, pepper and salt to taste; two teacupfuls of gravy or water; two tablespoonfuls of minced parsley; when liked, a little minced onion; puff crust. Mode—Bone the mutton and cut the meat into steaks all of the same thickness, and leave but very little fat; cut up the kidneys; arrange them with the meat neatly in a pie dish; sprinkle over the minced parsley and a seasoning of pepper and salt; pour in the gravy and cover with a good puff crust. Bake for an hour and a half, or rather longer should the pie be very large, and let the oven be rather brisk.

A man was once asked how he and his wife got along with so little friction in the family machinery. "Well," said he, "when we were first married we both wanted our own way. I wanted to sleep on linen sheets, my wife prefering cotton, and we could not agree. Finally we talked the matter over, and came to the conclusion that it was un-Christian to live in constant bickering; so we compromised on linen, and have got along all right ever since."

In the next fifteen years almost all the Russian railroads now in operation will undergo the process of redemption and become Government property.

Judicial Convention.

The democracy of Noble, DeKalb and Steuben counties, constituting the 35th judicial district, will meet in delegate convention at Kendallville, Ind., on

FRIDAY AUGUST 6th, 1880,

for the purpose of nominating a prosecuting attorney. The ratio of representation will be the same as that in the joint representative convention, which will be held at the same time and place.

By order of the district committee.

The twenty-eighth annual state fair will be held at the city of Indianapolis from September 27 to October 2, 1880.

The veterans of the Mexican war held a meeting in Washington City last Saturday evening and adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we recommend our kindred associations of Mexican veterans throughout the United States to organize campaign clubs, and cordially invite ex-soldiers of the republic in the north and in the south, in the east and in the west, to enroll their names with us, and rally around the old flag in a grand army of American warsmen in support of the nominee of the democratic party for the presidency, General Winfield Scott Hancock, a gallant soldier and statesman, in whom every patriot who ever bore arms in defense of what he honestly deemed to be right, may, with confidence, hope to find a friend and wise counsellor."

Gone goslings—Garfield and Arthur.

The Big Four—Hancock, English, Landers and Gray.

Senator Bayard will take part in the Indiana campaign this year.

Don Cameron is too sick to manage the campaign. His state is going for Hancock.

The republican congressional convention will be held in Auburn, Friday, July 16, 1880. Judge Taylor, of Fort Wayne, will probably be the nominee.

The republican national committee has decided to make Indiana the battle-ground in October. Democrats must be on the alert and drive the first skirmish line from the field; we cannot afford to wait for an attack.

General James G. Grindlay, of the state of New York, who was president of the republican convention which elected Conkling a delegate to the Utica state convention, is now president of a Hancock and English club. He is in a line of promotion.

The republicans nominated Grant, Hayes and Garfield because they were Union soldiers, and scarcely worthy of the name at that. The democrats nominated Hancock because he is a military hero—a fighting soldier, and has given evidence of his statesmanship.

While Hancock was fighting to preserve the Union, Garfield resigned his position in the army for the purpose of being elected to congress, where he could and did engage in every crooked transaction that came up. Soldiers will remember these little things.

Leading republican papers are earnestly pleading for organization, in order to save their party from utter disgrace and to prevent desertions from its ranks. It is hard to reform the lines when the stampede has commenced. Garfield is not the general to accomplish it.

It is rumored that Garfield will be withdrawn because his political crookedness cannot be defended, and for the further reason that he is virtually beaten already. His withdrawal would be an acknowledgment of party weakness, and his successor would be cut down in an equally short time. In either event the republican party is doomed.

We ask every conscientious and fair-minded republican to read Gen. Pearson's letter to Gen. Grant. Read it and be convinced of the error of your ways; be above party prejudices; have minds of your own; consider well the facts set forth in the letter, for they are worthy of commendation. The letter closes an article on this page headed "Another convert."

Another valuable accession to the democratic ranks in Indiana is that of Thomas J. Study, a prominent lawyer of Wayne county. He has always been a leading republican, but can't go Garfield and Arthur. He will address the democratic club at Richmond to-night, and advocate the election of Hancock and English, and Landers and Gray. So it goes all over the country; prominent republicans everywhere are leaving the sinking ship of corruption and joining Hancock's noble army.

The first rally to the Hancock banner was made at Cincinnati; the second rally is now in progress; every democrat in the land is shouting for Hancock and victory, and such leading republicans as Hon. John W. Forney, Leonard W. Jerome, of New York, Major-General A. L. Pearson, of Pennsylvania, General James G. Grindlay, of New York, and a host of others, including the "Grant club," of St. Louis, (sixty-five strong) have joined the throng and are marching on, recruiting as they go, to the final grand charge to be made in November next.

A good many republican papers are persistent in their denials of Garfield's guilt, and insist that there is not a stain on his character or a shadow on his integrity, while others—such as the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, which supports Garfield—think it bad policy to deny what the public records of congress and courts establish as facts. The Republican confesses Mr. Garfield's sins, and apologizingly says: "In part from carelessness, in part from ignorance, possibly in part from wrong-doing, he was caught in the fatal web, and stands a man in whose praise candid men limit and qualify their utterances with a but."

The Republican, continuing, says: "But for the corrupt atmosphere in which Garfield passed his early congressional life the nomination would be faultless; as it is, Garfield is burdened with a record which stands in striking contrast to Hancock's stainless character. * * * The one serious flaw in the republican candidate—a flaw which comes to light as the fruit of corrupt days, long winked at and tardily punished—is that Garfield's integrity requires defense, while against Hancock's there are no charges."

Another Convert.

A. L. Pearson, of Pittsburgh, Penn., who went into the army a captain, and for bravery and ability was promoted to major-general, and who since the war has been one of the most prominent and influential republicans in that part of the state, has declared himself in favor of Hancock for president. General Pearson was a warm supporter of Gen. Grant at the Chicago convention; was chairman of the city republican executive committee of Pittsburgh, and was the Pennsylvania member of a republican organization known as the national committee of the Veterans' Union Boys in Blue, of which Gen. U. S. Grant is chairman.

At a ratification meeting at Greensburg, Pennsylvania, a few evenings since, Gen. Pearson was present and made a speech, in which he said:

"I am for Gen. Winfield S. Hancock for president. I remember very distinctly when the enemy was invading our state, when our people were erecting fortifications, when the dirt was thrown up on the wrong side and it was thought they were approaching Pittsburgh, that the man you have nominated was riding in front of the second corps at Gettysburg, that the repelling of a mighty army depended upon him, for the enemy was over-running Pennsylvania. Then the majestic hero, Gen. Hancock, at the head of his corps, repelled them. He had not saved Pittsburgh alone that day; the army of the Potomac would have been lost. The clashing of musketry, the roaring of the artillery and the shrieks and groans of the dying upon that occasion are indescribable, but those three lines, 45,000 strong, were driven back by Gen. Hancock and our people and property saved. If there are any republican soldiers present they will remember the battle-fields of Gettysburg, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, and the heroic Hancock, and as they remember him riding in front of his troops majestically bowing while crossing the line, they say: 'I will cast my vote for Hancock.'"

Gen. Pearson said to a reporter: "You may wonder why I am so enthusiastic over General Hancock, but no man living can describe him. You must see him as I have seen him on the field of battle. Gen. Hancock is as pure a man at heart as any man living. He is honest, he is capable, he is the beau ideal of the soldier-statesman."

The following is his letter to Gen. Grant:

PITTSBURGH, PA., July 3, 1880.

General U. S. Grant, Chairman Union Veterans' National Committee:

GENERAL—After several years' connection with the Union Veterans' National Committee, over which you have the honor to preside, I am compelled to tender my resignation as the member from Pennsylvania. I have reluctantly come to the conclusion that the influence of the great historic party is ended, and ought to end; that those who pretend to keep up its organization are doing so for office and gain, and that its encouragement of sectional hate is a constant menance to the Union. No permanent issues worthy of being called national issues divide the two parties. Free trade and protection are alike the accident of localities, and hence we find free-trade republicans in the west and east, with protective democrats in the middle states. The entire issues that divide the two opposing parties is the issue of hate and usurpation on the side of the republican party with military dictation at the polls. Against this dangerous policy the democratic party has arrayed itself, and has chosen for its standard-bearer the gallant Gen. W. S. Hancock, who has placed himself squarely on that issue by proclaiming that "the right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, the national rights of persons and the rights of property must be preserved." In choosing between these two parties I cannot see how a patriot can blunder. Surely every soldier who fought with Hancock to conquer peace will vote with him and for him to make that peace effectual and permanent. Entertaining the highest respect for my fellow-committeemen, and earnestly hoping that they will view this important matter in the light I do and come to the same conclusion, viz, to vote for General Hancock, I am very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. L. PEARSON.

Sporting men who stake their money on the field will prefer Win-field to Gar-field.

Garfield had two weeks the start of Hancock in the great race, but the latter has gained so rapidly that he has to look far in the rear to see his competitor. Garfield will be distanced if he is not withdrawn,—his copious discharge of corruption necessitates too frequent sponging.

We hope our republican friends in DeKalb county will insist upon their candidate for governor coming around this way during the campaign. We expect to have Mr. Landers here, and are anxious that the people should see and converse with both candidates. Give the farmers a chance to judge which is the better man for the position.

Present indications point to a sweeping victory for the democracy of DeKalb county at the coming elections. If every democrat in the county will go to work for the entire state and county ticket, and not use his influence in favor of any particular candidate to the possible detriment of others, there will be no question about the result. At the last election we had a straight majority of 248 on the state ticket, and there is no reason why that majority cannot be increased to 500 for both the state and county tickets.

The nomination of Hancock and English makes Indiana democratic by 20,000 majority; the same nomination united the democracy of New York, with an acknowledged majority; Pennsylvania, Connecticut and New Jersey are more likely to give democratic than republican majorities and every southern state will go democratic. In view of these facts, will some enthusiastic republican—if such a one can be found—please explain how Garfield can get a majority of the electoral votes?

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-tf

NOW FOR SOME FUN.

Excursion from Butler to Rome City.

Several of our enterprising citizens, five in number, have chartered a special train over the Wabash and made arrangements for a grand day of enjoyment at Rome City, that beautiful little resort to which all pleasure-seekers have been flocking this season. The train will leave Butler next Tuesday morning, July 13, at seven o'clock, passing the Eel-River depot in Auburn at half past seven; it will run through to Rome City without change, and the fare for the round trip from Auburn is ONLY ONE DOLLAR. This is a rare chance to have a good time on a small capital, and our advice to all who can spare a day from their labors is about like this: Get up at six o'clock Tuesday morning and fill up with breakfast; then fill a small basket with dinner for two and take your wife, or your neighbors wife, or your sister, or somdbody else's sister, and hie away to the depot. There will be a Knights Templar parade on the grounds at Rome City, and there will be music and a basket picnic, and if you don't go you will always regret it.

Appreciative and Grateful.

AUBURN, JULY 7, 1880.

EDITORS COURIER: Mrs. Harris and I desire, through the columns of the COURIER, to express our lively appreciation of the honor bestowed upon us last Thursday evening. It was gently intimated at the time that "a few remarks" from me would be both acceptable and appropriate; but I greatly doubted my ability to couch language in such pleasing form as the occasion demanded, and besides, the audience was so large and so scattered that it would have been quite impossible for the "chair" to enforce attention,—so my little speech would have been lost. Now, however, I ask "unanimous consent for it to be printed."

What I might and would have said, is this: We were most completely and delightfully surprised, both by the visit and the accompanying presents, but more than all were we proud for the friendly feeling manifested and sentiments expressed by the large company present. We shall ever hold the occasion and the friends in most grateful remembrance.

Respectfully,
B. D. HARRIS.

Hymen's Harness.

For several "spaces of per iod," which means a few months, matrimonial combinations right in Auburn have been strikingly scarce; numerous licenses have been procured, to be sure, but they were mostly for "souls with but a single thought" who live in other parts of the county. Doubtless noticing this dormant condition of things, and determined to break the monotony, George Grund, the genial tonsorial artist at Sam. Pommert's, surrounded by a few of the friends of both parties, last Sunday led to the altar Miss Zelpha McBride, formerly of Hollister's restaurant, where they were joined in blissful wedlock by Rev. H. J. Norris, of the Methodist church. A brief tour to Fort Wayne followed, when they returned to Auburn and established their quarters at the residence of Sam. Pommert, though they will soon strike out in the house-keeping business together, with the best wishes of the COURIER and their acquaintances in this place.

Pleasantly Surprised.

Last Thursday evening, according to previous arrangements, a large number of Auburn's best citizens congregated at the residences of A. J. Little, sen., and W. E. Rush, to await the hour agreed upon to storm the residence of an unsuspecting and peaceable couple. About nine o'clock a procession formed in rear of the silver cornet band, proceeded to the cozy home of Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Harris and without warning or permission took charge of the premises. The band furnished excellent music while the intruders stowed away hats and bonnets, and by ten o'clock one hundred and fifty friends had arrived to remind Mrs. Harris that her birthday was being celebrated on that occasion, and as a token of their esteem and friendship they had brought with them an elegant, folding bed-lounge and an easy chair. After a substantial repast which had been prepared without the knowledge of Mrs Harris, and a general good time enjoyed by all present, the friends took their departure.

Too Hard a Question.

The following brief communication has been handed in, over a reliable signature, with the request to publish, and we do so without comment:

J. A. Provines, the hero of Andersonville prison during the "late unpleasantness," and at present the republican nominee for clerk of DeKalb county, was in some way wounded, we understand, in the sham battle at Newville last Saturday, and while exhibiting the wound he was heard to remark that "that was a worse scratch than he got during the whole time of his enlistment." The query now is, Where does the pension of $22 a month come from?

"New Wooster Boss."

This new grain thresher, manufactured by the Wooster (Ohio) Agricultural Works, has been greatly improved this season, and is now offered to the public as the most complete machine in this or any other market. This thresher, as its name indicates, is the "Boss" machine; it threshes faster, cleans better and runs lighter than any other machine made. For full particulars call on Mr. Christian Sheets, at his residence near Auburn Junction.

—Mr. Wm. Nelson has our thanks for some very nice honey.

—The corn crop of DeKalb county will be much below an average crop.

—The little folks of the Presbyterian Sunday-school are enjoying a picnic to-day.

—Notwithstanding the busy season with the farmers, Messrs. Hague & Rapt have all the work they can do.

—When Charlie Emanuel is ill, he braces up the inner man on imported wine. The girls discovered this a few days ago.

—The timbers for the new foundry and machine shop are being delivered. The buildings will be constructed as rapidly as possible.

—"Kin" Lanning appointed himself coroner, a few days since, and held an inquest over the body of a man whose name we have forgotten; but he was dead—very dead—drunk.

—An ice-cream social will be entertained at the residence of Mrs. J. Potter, by the M. E. society, next Wednesday evening. All are respectfully invited. MRS. J. ANDERSON, Sec'y.

—The court-yard walks have hardened sufficiently for use, and you can now walk over them without danger of being fired over the fence by "Honest John" Hartman, superintendent of the yard.

—The citizens' excursion to Rome City next Tuesday, July 13, will be a rich thing, and you will never forgive yourself if you miss such a golden opportunity. See extended notice elsewhere.

—Tom Mays shouldered his little shot-gun—or a borrowed one—and hied off to Ohio, about two weeks since, seeking what he might perforate. He came back Friday last with nary a perforate.

—Frank Copper sold one hundred and nineteen tickets to Fort Wayne last Monday, but that is no estimate of the number that went, as many paid their fare on the train in order to give the conductor a show.

—July 4th, just fifty years ago, came on Sunday. We saw a man yesterday who was there when it came. He didn't mention how many times it has occurred on Sunday since then, and we were too busy to figure it up.

—The friends of "Doc" McClaren, lately of the junction, will be glad to learn that he has secured the agency for the B. & O. at St. Joe. He assumed the responsibilities of that lucrative position last Friday morning.

—There is an unclaimed letter in the postoffice for Mrs. Jones, and, out of consideration for our accommodating deputy, Miss Frankie Ford, it is requested that all of the above-named lady do not go after it at once.

—To say that Ft. Wayne's celebration was a grand success would be but vaguely expressing it; the city was swarming with visitors from all the surrounding towns and cities, and all were delighted with the exercises.

—In answer to numerous questions concerning the culture of lettuce, we will state, once for all, that the most successful method of raising this vegetable, according to horticulturists, is to take hold of the leaves and pull.

—Mrs. Henry Hanna, of Fort Wayne, sister of Mrs. Dr. Allen of this place, accompanied by her son Rob, was in town Friday, on a brief visit to her sister and mother, Mrs. Carson, the latter of whom is spending the summer here.

—W. E. Eldridge, better known in this burg as "Pete," is now established at Janesville, Wisconsin, where he is learning how to handle electricity; and in order to keep posted on the doings at home, he has ordered the COURIER sent to him.

—The hacks and hotels have a trifle more of a bonanza now, since the last change on the various roads running through here, but it is rough on the traveling community and folks who expect to make connection as before at the junction.

—The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago railway is now equipped with four through trains. All its trains make fast time and run for the convenience and comfort of its patrons. The new time-card will be found in the next issue of the COURIER.

—In a private letter from Waterloo, an interested gentleman of that place says: "Democratic stock is above par, and still going on to victory." His head is level, too, for the contest must result in a triumphant sweep for us this year.

—Mr. J. J. Van Auken was fortunate enough to secure from Messrs. Hausselman & Gillingham, of Angola, Ind., one of their beautiful White Bronze monuments. More of the same kind on hand. Illustrated circulars free on application. 27-3w.

—After two years of close confinement to office work, the writer has concluded to rest a week or two, during which time he will visit some of his farmer friends in different parts of the county, in preference to taking a trip to the lakes or elsewhere.

—The premium list for the ninth annual fair of the Northeastern Indiana Agricultural association, to be held on the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th and 8th days of October next, has been issued. Five thousand dollars in premiums are offered. For full particulars address James A. Barns, secretary.

—The bloody mosquito warbles his little ballad and gets his little work in nightly.

—Preaching at the Presbyterian church next Sabbath morning, concert in the evening.

—Without committing any li-Bell on him, we would like to ask if Jim McMichael's visits to Auburn are not getting strangely frequent.

—About six or eight or ten of our young folks will go up to Pleasant Lake to-day to cool off, expecting to see the county seat again at about midnight.

—The only enthusiastic, red-hot Tilden man we know of in this county, is C. K. Baxter of the Waterloo Press. He loves Mr. Tilden just for the sake of being opposed to the COURIER.

—Sheriff Leas and wife, Deputy-Sheriff Somers and Boot-Upside-Down Austin came up from Ft. Wayne last evening, where they were interested spectators at the races yesterday.

—The pipe of our new artesian (?) well is now down about fifty-five feet, but the workmen are having much difficulty with quick-sand, which fills in rapidly from the lower end of the pipe.

—It is a good thing to keep posted on happenings at home and abroad; the way to do this is to subscribe for the COURIER. We have room on our books for any number of new names. One dollar and fifty cents a year in advance.

—Some of the Auburn youths who fourthed at Fort Wayne had to climb up a step-ladder next morning to reach the outskirts of their expanded craniums; and then it was only by the closest scrutiny that they could ascertain which particular one of the boys they were.

—To give the names of all who went to Fort Wayne from this place, to assist in making a noise on the fourth, would require a little newspaper (for a cent) of itself; but it is safe to estimate that about half of Auburn celebrated there, some of whom are still enjoying the races at that place.

—Following is a list of unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice at this place for the week ending July 3:

T. K. Burk,	Dan. Krum,
Robert Cummings,	Will. A. Place,
H. Haas,	Mrs. M. E. Skelly,
Mrs. N. A. Jones,	Mrs C. A. Swarts,
Frank Stevens.

JOS. RAINIER, Postmaster.

—Jim Potter, of Austin's, was the victim of a base joke Tuesday. W. J. turned the clock a few days ahead and sent Jim home to his dinner an hour and a half before his wife had thought of preparing it; and then there was some fun, and if you ask Jim about it now there will be some more fun.

—Mr. Frank D. Ryan is the authorized agent for the United States Standard Scales, manufactured by the Buffalo Scale Company. Mr. Ryan will canvass this and adjoining counties and furnish farmers and others with the best hay, stock and platform scales in the market. He also has a full line of small scales for weighing produce, etc., which he will sell very low to farmers and others who need anything in that line.

—Yesterday afternoon Mr. J. J. Becher and wife, of Richland township, were coming to Auburn to do some trading; when they came to a bridge about one mile and a half this side of their home their horse scared and commenced backing, running the buggy off the bridge. The old gentleman and lady, the buggy and the horse all went down into the mud and water together; fortunately the old people received no injuries, but a brand-new top buggy was demolished and a good horse terribly scared.

—Some fellow went into Davenport's, a few days since, and asked for a little wine in which to swallow an egg, saying that he wasn't feeling very well; he got it and broke the egg—and then he broke for the door, feeling not so well. The egg was inhabited, and so were nine more which he purchased afterward, each of which contained a promising bird. Most people are fond of spring chicken, also of poached eggs, but close observation prompts us in saying that nearly everybody prefers them served separately.

—Up to the last moment we have reserved a few columns of this week's COURIER for the articles of one or two young ladies who promised to help us out with some interesting local matter, and now, in our extremity, we are forced to do one of three things:—Fill the vacancy with hair-pins, defer this issue of the paper, or set up and write all night. (Take it all back. Since writing the above, one of the ladies has fulfilled her contract, handing in several "personals" of interest, for which we return thanks.)

—Misses Metta Ferris, Bessie Hamilton, Nellie Wheelock and Alice McKay, handcuffed to Dr. Allyn and a COURIER scribe, were incarcerated fifteen minutes in the county jail, yesterday morning, for violation of the law prohibiting people from drinking ice-water on a hot July day; but they objected, and their sentence was afterward commuted to ten minutes in an ice-cream parlor. This, however, the young men took exceptions to,—for various reasons,—and upon a third hearing the entire party got—a piece of bologna from Tarney's meat-market.

—Frank Orff, of Fort Wayne, dropped out of a car at the Jackson depot last night, but received no serious injury. He left to-day, in company with Fred. Davis, for Rome City, whither they have gone to catch fish and "make a mash."

Newville.

—Corn is growing finely.

—Wheat is nearly all cut, and the crop is good.

—We have had an abundance of rain —almost too much for harvesting.

—A new feed-stable was erected here for operation during the celebration, but it got drunk and failed. Losses heavy; assets—to get.

—The glorious fourth went off all right—on the third—with a few exceptions. Of course we had a war speech and a sham battle, and, while many were badly "shot," they all survived.

—The Hicksville Republican is complaining that we are not making any noise over the nomination of Hancock and English; but we may enter the same complaint here, as I have heard but one man hurrah for Garfield—and he went west to "grow up with the country." ALPHA.

St. Joe.

—M. Terry is on the sick list.

—E. Bell has an attack of rheumatism.

—Harvesting is one of the things of the past.

—James Ferrell was entered for the fat man's race at Garrett.

—Some of our farmers succeeded in getting their harvest hands for $1.50 per day, while others paid from $2.00 to $2.50.

—Mrs. Wm. Vollmer fell out of a cherry-tree, Friday last, and was quite seriously hurt.

—M. E. Olds has a cow, and he wants everybody in creation to know it; hence this mention.

—Workmen are engaged in repairing the St. Joe elevators, and will soon have the same in good running order.

—Some of the St. Joe people celebrated the 5th at Garrett, last Saturday, and were highly pleased with the entertainment.

—A few of the boys attended the doings at Newville, last Saturday, and report a grand fizzle, with the exception of the peanut-stands.

—A grand blow-out in the vicinity of Kingtown is expected one of these days; the storm has been brewing for some time, and will come to a focus soon. Look out for particulars next week.

—That bright and shining light of Coburntown, who recently undertook to act as mediator in a certain family matter, has doubtless come to the conclusion that the lady is capable of running her own family, and that when his services are needed he will be called upon. SPARTA.

STORMY NIGHTS.

BY [illegible] M. [illegible].

A stormy night. Ah! who can tell
Why comes that soul-felt mystic spell,
That makes us strangely free from care,
Yet leads through scenes of dark despair?
Why live we o'er and o'er again
Our past of joy, our past of pain?
Why [illegible] so memories dark and bright
On stormy nights?

Instinctively, almost, we feel
Our weight of woe, our weight of weal,
[illegible] of life's great round
Are storms without consonant sound;
[illegible] of wind, of hail, of rain;
The thunder's roar, the lightning's gleam,
The storm-clouds tossing in their flight
Through stormy night.

The wind must shriek as if in pain,
Then sink to wail a piteous strain;
The thunder [illegible] cage and roar;
The rain must weep, then torrents pour;
The lightning flash in wildest glee;
The darkness, utter darkness be;
The elements at war must fight
On stormy nights.

Then without pencil, pen or book,
I hide me in some sheltered nook,
And let the hurricane possess
My soul with all its earnestness.
I weave the web of life again—
A thread of joy, a thread of pain;
Both warp and woof are dark and light—
Life's stormy night.

I ope the door of memories' tomb
To find fair lights 'mid deepest gloom:
Bright dreams fulfilled, youth void of care,
While buried hopes are everywhere;
A strange commingling of all
That makes this life one balmy squall,
[illegible] betwixt the wrong and right
Through stormy night.

I shovel earth from grass-grown mound,
Where heads of rush each healing wound,
And call up friends beyond recall—
My heart makes room for one and all.
My pulses vibrate as a gleam
Of hope, of love—youth's sweetest dream—
[illegible] my visionary night
On stormy nights.

My soul with throbbing pain is heard
As each false friend is disinterred—
Friends of the past, the long ago,
Who filled my cup with bitter woe;
Then fondly to my bosom press
The true that lived my life to bless.
I shed a tear o'er love and slight
On stormy nights.

I rend the veil that hangs between
My soul and all its fairest dreams;
Like reviews on forgotten lore,
I read life's turned-down pages o'er;
A grand commotion is my soul.
The past unfolds a written scroll,
Which I must read without affright
On stormy nights.

But, with the elements at war,
I can afford to stand at par
With all that's good in this short life,
Nor mingle more in bitter strife,
But shower my blessings without fear
On false and true, on smile and tear.
Why walk in darkness when there's light
For stormy nights?

For he who keeps a conscience pure,
He who is faithful to endure,
Who owns Him father who can still
The raging elements at will,
Who acts and works with heart and hands,
Obeying God's humane commands;
Who keeps his soul a spotless white,
Hath naught to fear on stormy nights.

NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

A Review of the Past Party Struggles of the Republic—The Ballots of a Century.

Under a republican form of government the mode of nominating, as well as the manner of electing, the chief officers of the nation is interesting to the people. Washington, owing to his exalted character and invaluable services to his country, was chosen first President under the constitution. He was re-elected by nearly a unanimous vote. During his administration the Federal and Republican parties sprung into existence. On Washington's retirement John Adams, of Massachusetts, became by common consent the candidate of the Federal party for President, and Thomas Jefferson of the Republican party. Adams was chosen President and Jefferson Vice President, he having the next highest number of votes. In the year 1800 a caucus of members of Congress was held in Philadelphia, which nominated Thomas Jefferson for President and Aaron Burr for Vice President. They were elected over John Adams and Charles C. Pinckney. Mr. Jefferson was renominated and re-elected in 1804, with George Clinton, of New York, as Vice President, over Chas. C. Pinckney and Rufus King. James Madison was nominated by a Congressional caucus in January, 1808, and elected President by a large majority. He was renominated in the same manner in 1812. In September of the same year a convention representing eleven States was held in New York, which nominated De Witt Clinton. James Madison was re-elected. In 1816 James Monroe was nominated by a Congressional caucus, he receiving sixty-five votes and W. H. Crawford fifty-four. The Federalists named Rufus King. Mr. Monroe was elected, and in 1820 he was re-elected without opposition. In 1824 the Congressional caucus system was opposed by a large portion of the Republican party. But sixty-six members responded to the call, and these nominated William H. Crawford for the Presidency. Jackson, Clay and Adams were also nominated by various States, and there was no choice by the people. The House of Representatives elected John Quincy Adams. Immediately after this election Andrew Jackson was nominated by the Legislature of Tennessee. That action was indorsed by the Democratic party of the country, and he was elected in 1828 over Mr. Adams.

THE FIRST CONVENTION.

In 1830 the first political national convention in this country was held in Philadelphia. It was called the United States Anti-Masonic Convention. Francis Granger, of New York, presided. No business of importance was transacted, but the same convention met in Baltimore in 1831, and nominated William Wirt, of Maryland, for President. In May, 1832, a Democratic National Convention was held in Baltimore, to name candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency. Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, and Martin Van Buren, of New York, were selected. That ticket was elected. The National Republican Convention assembled in Baltimore Dec. 12, 1831. James Barbour, of Virginia, presided. Henry Clay, of Kentucky, was unanimously nominated for President, and John Sergeant, of Pennsylvania, for Vice President. In May, 1835, a Democratic National Convention was held in Baltimore. Twenty-one States were represented. President, Hon. Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia. At this convention the two-third rule was adopted. Martin Van Buren was unanimously nominated for President, and Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, was chosen for Vice President, receiving 178 votes, to 87 votes for William C. Rives, of Virginia. No platform was adopted by this convention. Gen. Wm. H. Harrison, of Ohio, was the opposition candidate to the Democracy in 1836. He was nominated by a State Convention in Pennsylvania and several other bodies. In 1839 a Whig National Convention was held in Harrisburg, Pa. James Barbour was the President. Gen. Wm. H. Harrison was nominated for President on the first ballot, receiving 148 votes. John Tyler, of Virginia, was selected as Vice President. In December, 1839, a convention of Abolitionists was held at Warsaw, N. Y. James G. Birney, of New York, was nominated for President, and Francis J. Lemoyne, of Pennsylvania, for Vice President. May 5, 1840, a Democratic National Convention assembled in Baltimore. Martin Van Buren was unanimously renominated. No choice was made for a Vice President.

CLAY AND POLK.

A Whig National Convention met in Baltimore on the 1st of May, 1844. Henry Clay, of Kentucky, was nominated for President by acclamation; Vice President, T. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey. On the 27th of the same month the Democratic National Convention met in the same city. The two-thirds rule was adopted, and, after a session of three days, James K. Polk, of Tennessee, was nominated for President, and Silas Wright, of New York, for Vice President. Mr. Wright immediately declined, and Hon. G. M. Dallas, of Pennsylvania, was selected to fill his place. On the first ballot Martin Van Buren had 146 votes, Lewis Cass 83, R. M. Johnson 29, and James Buchanan 4. Van Buren's name was withdrawn after the eighth ballot, and on the ninth Polk received 233 votes, to 29 for Cass and 2 for Van Buren. The National Convention of the Liberty party met in Buffalo, N. Y., on the 30th of August, 1844. James G. Birney, of Michigan, was unanimously nominated for President, and Thomas Morris, of Ohio, for Vice President.

The Whig National Convention of 1848 was held in Philadelphia. It began its sessions on the 7th of June, and ended on the 10th, when Gen. Zachary Taylor was nominated for President on the fourth ballot, and Millard Fillmore, of New York, for Vice President. Taylor's principal competitor was Clay.

On the 22d of May, 1848, the Democratic National Convention assembled at Baltimore. The two-third rule was adopted, and Gen. Lewis Cass selected as the candidate for the Presidency on the fourth ballot. The first ballot for Vice President resulted in the choice of Gen. William O. Butler, of Kentucky. The Free Democratic Convention assembled on the 22d of June, 1848, at Utica, N. Y. Delegates from three States were present, and they placed in nomination Martin Van Buren for President, and Henry Dodge for Vice President. The latter subsequently declined. On the 9th of June of the same year a similar convention was held in Buffalo. Seventeen States were represented by delegates. The nominations made by this body were Martin Van Buren for President and Charles Francis Adams for Vice President.

THE LAST WHIG CONVENTION.

The Whig National Convention of 1852 assembled on the 16th of June in Baltimore, and was in session six days. During that time fifty-three ballots were taken, commencing with 131 for Scott; 133 for Fillmore, and 29 for Webster, and continuing with very little variation until the last, when Scott had 159, Fillmore 112, and Webster 21. On the 1st of the same month, in the same city, met the National Convention of the Democratic party, which, on the forty-ninth ballot, selected Gen. Franklin Pierce, of New Hampshire, as a candidate for the Presidency. The first ballot stood: Cass, 116; Buchanan, 93; Douglas, 20; Marcy, 27; Lane, 13; Houston, 8; Dodge, 3; Butler, 2, and Dickinson, 1. Cass rose to 131 on the thirty-fifth ballot, when the name of Pierce was presented, and on the forty-ninth ballot the vote stood: Pierce, 282; Cass, 2; Buchanan, 2; Butler, 2. On the second ballot Hon. W. R. King, of Alabama, was nominated by acclamation for the Vice Presidency. The Free Soil Democracy held a National Convention at Pittsburgh on the 11th of August, 1852. John P. Hale, of New Hampshire, was named for the Presidency, and George W. Julien, of Indiana, for Vice President.

The first Republican National Convention was held on the 17th of June, 1856, in the city of Philadelphia. An informal ballot resulted as follows: Fremont, 359; McLean, 196. Col. John C. Fremont was therefore declared nominated. Upon the same ticket was placed William L. Dayton, of New Jersey, as Vice President. The American National Council met in Philadelphia, Feb. 19, 1856, and nominated Hon. Millard Fillmore for President, and Andrew Jackson Donaldson for Vice President. Cincinnati was the meeting-place of the Democratic Convention of 1856. The delegates assembled on the 2d of June, and cast seventeen ballots. The first ballot stood: Buchanan, 135; Pierce, 122; Douglas, 33; Cass, 5. Pierce's votes were given to Douglas on the fifteenth ballot, but without effect, and on the next but one Buchanan was nominated.

CHICAGO AND CHARLESTON.

On the 16th of May, 1860, a Republican National Convention met at Chicago, Ill. Delegates were in attendance from all the free States, and also Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Texas, the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska and the District of Columbia. Three ballots were taken for President, and on the last the following vote was cast: Lincoln, 231½; Seward, 180; Chase, 24½; Bates, 22; McLean, 5; Dayton, 1; C. M. Clay, 1. This gave Lincoln 231½ votes, or within 2½ of a nomination, when several delegations changed the ballots and gave him 354 votes. Hannibal Hamlin was nominated for Vice President. A convention of the Constitutional Union party convened in Baltimore on the 9th of May, and put in the field John Bell, of Tennessee, for President, and Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, for Vice President. The Democratic National Convention of 1860 met in Charleston, S. C., on April 26. There were delegates present from all the States of the Union. After a stormy debate upon a platform, a portion of the delegates left the convention, and those that remained proceeded to ballot. The first ballot stood: Douglas, 145½; Guthrie, 35; Hunter, 42; Dickinson, 7; Johnson, 12; Lane, 6; Davis, 1½; Toucey, 2½; Pierce, 1. The fifty-seventh ballot stood: Douglas, 151½; Guthrie, 65½; Hunter, 16; Dickinson, 4; Lane, 14; Davis, ½. The convention then adjourned to meet in Baltimore on the 18th of June. The meeting took place as ordered, and on the second ballot Stephen A. Douglas was declared the choice of the convention for President, and Benjamin Fitzpatrick, of Alabama, was nominated for Vice President. He subsequently declined, and Herschel V. Johnson, of Georgia, was put in his place. The delegates who withdrew from the Charleston Convention immediately assembled at St. Andrew's Hall, in that city, and, after adopting a series of resolutions, adjourned to meet in Richmond, Va., on the second Monday in June. This body, after a number of meetings, finally indorsed the nomination of Breckinridge and Lane. On the 28th of June the delegates who did not participate in the convention which nominated Douglas and Johnson assembled in Baltimore, and proceeded to ballot for a candidate for President, and John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, received the unanimous vote of the delegates present, being 105 from the twenty States represented. For Vice President, Gen. Joseph Lane, of Oregon, received the unanimous vote of the convention (105) on the first ballot.

THE CONVENTIONS OF 1864.

On the 1st of June, 1864, a convention under the name of the "Radical Democracy" met at Cleveland, Ohio, and nominated John C. Fremont for President and Gen. Cochrane, of New York, for Vice President. The Republican National Convention of 1864 assembled in Baltimore on the 7th of June. Hon. William Dennison, of Ohio, was President. Abraham Lincoln was renominated on the first ballot by a unanimous vote, with the exception of Missouri, which was cast for Grant. For Vice President Andrew Johnson was nominated on the first ballot. The National Democratic Convention of 1864 convened at Chicago on the 20th of August. Ex-Gov. Seymour, of New York, was appointed permanent Chairman. The vote was: For McClellan, 202½; for Seymour, 23½. George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, was selected for Vice President on the second ballot.

The Republican National Convention met at Chicago on the 21st of May, 1868. Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut, was selected as President of that body. A ballot was taken, and the President announced that 610 votes had been cast, all for Gen. U. S. Grant. On the fifth ballot for Vice President Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana, received 522 votes, and was placed upon the ticket as a candidate for Vice President. On the Fourth of July, 1868, the delegates of the Democratic party met in New York to nominate candidates for President and Vice President. Horatio Seymour was selected as President of the convention. The first ballot resulted: Pendleton, 105; Hancock, 33½; Church, 34; English, 16; Parker, 26; Johnson, 65; Doolittle, 13; Hendricks, 2½; Blair, ½. On the twenty-first ballot the vote was: Hancock, 135½; English, 19; Johnson, 5; Doolittle, 12, and Hendricks, 132. On the twenty-second ballot all the States voted for Horatio Seymour, of New York, and he was declared the nominee of the convention for President. Gen. Frank P. Blair, of Missouri, was unanimously nominated for Vice President.

The National Convention of the Liberal Republican party of the United States met in Cincinnati on the 1st of May, 1872, and opened the Presidential campaign of that year. Six ballots were taken. On the first Horace Greeley received 147 votes; C. F. Adams, 203; Trumbull, 110; Davis, 92½; Brown, 95; Curtin, 62; Chase, 2½. On the fifth ballot Greeley had 258, and Adams 309, but on the sixth ballot Horace Greeley was declared the nominee of the convention for President. On the second ballot B. Gratz Brown, of Missouri, was selected for Vice President by a vote of 435 to 261. The Republican National Convention of 1872 assembled in the city of Philadelphia on the 5th of June. Hon. Morton McMichael was chosen as temporary Chairman, and Hon. Thomas Settle, of North Carolina, as permanent President. On the first vote Ulysses S. Grant received the entire vote of all the States and Territories in the Union. For Vice President Hon. Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, was nominated over Hon. Schuyler Colfax on the second ballot. The record of the year was completed by the meeting of the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, Md., on the 9th of July, 1872. Upon the States being called all the ballots but 45 were cast for Greeley, who was declared the candidate of the party. B. Gratz Brown was nominated for Vice President.

THE CONVENTIONS OF 1876.

The convention of the Republican party for 1876 met at Cincinnati on the 15th of June. It consisted of 752 members. Edward McPherson, of Pennsylvania, was permanent Chairman. On the first ballot Blaine had 285 votes; Morton, 125; Bristow, 113; Conkling, 99; Hayes, 61; Hartranft, 58; Jewell, 11; Wheeler, 3. The seventh ballot resulted: Blaine, 351; Bristow, 21, and Hayes, 384, or five more than a majority. William A. Wheeler received 366 votes for Vice President on the first ballot. The Democratic Convention met at St. Louis June 27. On the first ballot Tilden had 403½ votes; Hendricks, 133½; Allen, 56; Hancock, 75; Parker 18; Bayard, 27. On the second ballot Samuel J. Tilden had 508, and was declared nominated, and Thomas A. Hendricks was unanimously nominated for Vice President. A convention of the Prohibition party met at Cleveland, Ohio, May 16, 1876, and nominated Green Clay Smith, of Kentucky, for President, and G. S. Stewart, of Ohio, for Vice President. A Greenback Convention was held at Indianapolis May 17, and nominated Peter Cooper, of New York, for President, and Newton Booth, of California, for Vice President. Mr. Booth afterward declined, and Samuel C. Cary, of Ohio, was substituted.

"SAVE me! save me! throw me a state-room door!" cried a passenger on the Narragansett on the night of the disaster. He was a Bostonian, aged 28. He was saved, but his hair has turned from black to white, owing to his terrible fright.

THE POET AND THE EDITOR.

BY MAX ADELER.

While Col. Bangs, editor of the Argus, was sitting in his office one day, a man whose brow was clothed with thunder entered. Fiercely seizing a chair, he slammed his hat on the table, hurled his umbrella on the floor, and sat down.

"Are you the editor?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Can you read writing?"

"Of course."

"Read that, then" he said, thrusting at the Colonel an envelope with an inscription on it.

"B——," said the Colonel, trying to spell it.

"That's not a B; it's an S," said the man.

"S? Oh, yes, I see. Well, the words look a little like 'Salt for Dinner,'" said the Colonel.

"No, sir," replied the man, "nothing of the kind. That's my name—Sam'l H. Brunner. I knew you couldn't read. I called to see about that poem of mine you printed the other day, on the 'Surcease of Sorrow.'"

"I don't remember it," said the Colonel.

"Of course you don't, because it went into the paper under the infamous title of 'Smearcase To-morrow.'"

"A stupid blunder of the compositor, I suppose."

"Yes, sir; and that is what I want to see you for. The way that poem was mutilated was simply scandalous. I haven't slept a night since. It exposed me to derision. People think I am an ass. Let me show you."

"Go ahead," said the Colonel.

"The first line, when I wrote it, read in this manner:

Lying by a weeping willow underneath a gentle slope.

That is beautiful, poetic, affecting. Now, how did your vile sheet present it to the public? There it is. Look at that. Made it read in this way:

Lying to a weeping widow, to induce her to elope.

Weeping widow, mind you! A widow! This is too much—it's enough to drive a man crazy!"

"I'm sorry," said the Colonel; "but—"

"But look a-here at the fourth verse," said the poet; "that's worse yet. What I said was:

Cast thy pearls before the swine, and lose them in the dirt.

I wrote that out clearly and distinctly, in a plain, round hand. Now, what does your compositor do? Does he catch the sense of that beautiful sentiment? Does it sink into his soul? No, sir! He sets it up in this fashion:

Cart thy pills before the sunrise, and love them if they hurt.

Now isn't that a cold-blooded outrage on a man's feelings? I'll leave it to you if it isn't."

"It's hard, that's a fact," said the Colonel.

"And then take the fifth verse. In the original manuscript it said, plain as daylight:

Take away the jingling money; it is only glittering dross.

A man with only one eye, and a cataract over that, could have read the words correctly. But your pirate up stairs there—do you know what he did? He made it read:

Take away the jeering monkeys, on a sorely glandered hoss.

By George! I felt like braining him with a shovel. I was never so cut up in my life."

"It was natural, too," said the Colonel.

"There, for instance, was the sixth verse. I wrote:

I am weary with the tossing of the ocean as it heaves.

It is a lovely line, too; but imagine my horror and the anguish of my family when I opened your paper and saw the line transformed into:

I am wearing out my trousers till they're open at the knees.

That is a little too much! That seems to me like carrying the thing an inch or two too far. I think I have a constitutional right to murder that compositor, don't you?"

"I think you have."

"Let me read you one more verse. I wrote:

I swell the flying echoes as they roam along the hills,
And I feel my soul awaken to the ecstasy that thrills.

Now what do you suppose your miserable outcast turned that into? Why, into this:

I smell the frying shoes as they roast along the bulls,
And I peel my sole mistaken in the ercfary that whirls.

Gibberish, sir, awful gibberish! I must slay that man. Where is he?"

"He's out just now," said the Colonel. "Come in to-morrow."

"I will," said the poet; "and I will come armed."

Then he put on his hat, shouldered his umbrella, and drifted off down stairs.

Won a Wife by His Tongue.

A frisky old bachelor who lives above Willow Ranch commenced a correspondence with a girl living in the east a short time ago, and finally proposed to her that if she would come out to California he would marry her. She consented, and he remitted the money to her. She arrived in Reno, Nevada, and stopped over a few days to rest. While there she heard bad accounts of Modoc; was told that the elevated portion of the country was buried under snow, and the low-lands were deep under water; that flour and sugar there were none, and when the sun sets the natives go to bed on account of not having lights. The vile wretch who slandered (?) Modoc to her had an ax to grind. After thoroughly scaring her out of the idea of coming to Modoc County, he proposed marriage to her, and was accepted forthwith, she deeming it more sensible to marry a young man and live in a pleasant home than take such desperate chances out here.—*Modoc (Cal.) Cemeteries.

The old system of cutting cemetery grounds into small lots surrounded by hedges bids fair to pass away entirely. All over the country the park landscape or lawn system is gaining favor. It consists in a series of plantations of shrubs and trees, so arranged that the effect of the entire cemetery, from the main drives, is that of an extensive park, all evidence of existing burial grounds being shut off by foliage. Of course, in this system, the hedge-and-fence monstrosity finds no place. Vaults or catacombs are excavated in the hillsides, and memorial buildings of all kinds erected in retired nooks. More land is required for this arrangement, but its attractive, rural character seems to commend it to all.

The Open Sky.

It is a strange thing how little, in general, people know about the sky. It is the part of creation in which nature has done more for the sake of pleasing man—more for the soul and evident purpose of talking to him, and teaching him, than in any other of her works; and it is just the part in which we least attend to her. There are not many of her other works in which some more material or essential purpose than the mere pleasing of men is not answered by every part of their organization; but every essential purpose of the sky might, so far as we know, be answered, if, once in three days or thereabouts, a great ugly black rain cloud were brought up over the blue, and everything well-watered, and so all left blue again till next time, with perhaps a film of morning and evening mist for dew. And instead of this, there is not a moment of any day of our lives when nature is not producing scene after scene, picture after picture, glory after glory, and working still upon such exquisite and constant principles of the most perfect beauty, that it is quite certain that it is all done for us, and intended for our perpetual pleasure. And every man, wherever placed, however far from other sources of interest or of beauty, has this doing for him constantly. The noblest scenes of the earth can be seen and known but by few; it is not intended that man should live always in the midst of them; he injures them by his presence; but the sky is for all; bright as it is, it is not "too bright nor good for human nature's daily food." Sometimes gentle, sometimes capricious, sometimes awful; never the same for two moments together; almost human in its passion—spiritual in its tenderness—almost divine in its infinity, its appeal to what is immortal in us as distinct as its ministry of chastisement or of blessing to what is essential. And yet we never attend to it, we never make it a subject of thought, but as it has to do with our animal sensations; we look upon all by which it speaks to us more clearly than to brutes, upon all which bears witness to intention of the Supreme, that we are to receive more from the covering vault than the light and the dew which we share with the weed and the worm, only as a succession of meaningless and monotonous accidents, too common and too painful to be worth of a moment of watchfulness, or a glance of admiration.—Ruskin.

Newly Married Couples.

It is the happiest and most virtuous state of society in which the husband and wife set out together, make their property together, and with perfect sympathy of soul, graduate all their expenses, plans, calculations and desires with reference to their present means and to their future and common interest.

Nothing delights man more than to enter the neat little tenement of the young people who, within perhaps two or three years, without any resources but their own knowledge of industry, have joined heart and hand, and engaged to share together the responsibilities, duties, interests, trials and pleasures of of life. The industrious wife is cheerfully employing her hands in domestic duties, putting her house in order or mending her husband's clothes, or preparing dinner, while perhaps the little darling sits prattling on the floor or lies sleeping in the cradle, and everything seems preparing to welcome the happiest of husbands and the best of fathers when he shall come home from his toil to enjoy the sweets of his little paradise.

This is true domestic pleasure. Health, contentment, love, abundance and bright prospects are all here. But it has become a prevalent sentiment that a man must acquire his fortune before he marries; that the wife must have no sympathy nor share with him in the pursuit of it—in which most of the pleasure truly consists—and the young married people must set out with as large and expensive an establishment as is becoming those who have been wedded for twenty years. This is very unhappy; it fills the community with bachelors, who are waiting to make their fortunes, endangering virtue, promoting vice; it destroys the true economy and design of the domestic institution, and it promotes inefficiency among females, who are expecting to be taken up by fortune and passively sustained with any care or concern on their part, and thus many a wife becomes, as a gentleman once remarked, not a "helpmate," but a "helpbeat."—Golden Age.

The Story of the Drums.

An animated controversy has of late been carried on in the French military papers respecting the relative value of the drum and bugle, some writers maintaining that the former, others that the latter, instrument should be abolished. Among other arguments against the drum, it is urged that signals beaten upon it are understood by very few, and, in support of this assertion, an anecdote of the campaign of 1859 is related by a writer in the Avenir Militaire. On the evening of the 8th of June, 1859, the 2d French Corps had arrived in the neighborhood of the town of Marignan, too late to cut off, as it had been intended it should, the retreat of the Austrians along the Lodi road. Finding that it had come up too late to accomplish its mission, its commander had issued orders for the troops to bivouac for the night. The first company of the 72d Regiment was extended in skirmishing order in front of the rest of the regiment, and its commander ordered his drummer to beat the "assembly." The 2d Regiment of Zouaves happened to be on the right front, and about 200 yards only distant from the skirmishers of the 72d; and the men of the former, hearing the taps on the drum, mistook them for the reports of muskets, and at once opened fire in the direction of the sound. The night had become very dark, and the men of the 72d Regiment, in turn believing that they were being fired upon by the enemy, also opened fire. Hearing the noise of the firing, Marshal MacMahon rode hastily up, and found the two regiments engaged in a hot musketry combat, which was only stopped by ordering the buglers to sound the march of the 2d Corps, and "cease firing."

SUNSET ON THE HILLS.

BY ROBERT FRANKENSTEIN DOTY.

Lo! in the west the light is being hid
By intervening [illegible], and Nature old
Has hushed those busy daylight songs,
Which were but merry clankings understood
As coming from the haunts of sun-lit hours!
The red glare on our mundane sphere is seen—
The glowing sunset shines upon the hills,
While earth is richly carpeted in green,
And all the varied hues which Nature does possess

On yonder's hill we see the fiery gleam—
The dying strokes of Nature's portraiture,
Whereat all living things seem satisfied
That sunset brings its darkness and its rest—
That sunset's deep philosophy is felt,
As some great god propelling mother earth
And bringing to us all a grand review
Of all its happenings and past events!

Ah! quietude is settling over earth,
A dampening gloom is overspreading all,
While milkmaids cease their merry songs,
And crickets chirrup in the tall, dank grass.
The lambs are looking at the far-off hills,
While brilliant sun-tints give a picture fair,
But in the east the clouds o'erhang our earth,
While from the South a gentle breeze is sent!

We murmur not that night is coming on
To give us dreams and reveries of friends,
For, as we see the swallows homeward fly,
We know they, in their haven, dream as we,
And so our hearts are gladdened at the thought
That all creation is alive with love,
As when the sunset on the hills about
Gives fervor and sublimity to life!

Oh! praise to all for beauteous sunset fair;
Oh! praise to Him who sends His goodness down
To our great earth, and thinks of us when we
Would wish to rest in quietude and peace—
To dream and picture memories of all
The fair, the rare that dwelleth round about!
Ah, things which add a pleasure to our life,
And make us thankful for our little all!

The beauteous allegory of our life
Portrays the picture of our gladdened hearts,
A luring coast whereon we wander down
The stream of life, across whose waters deep
We see a sunrise on the other shore;
It comes like butterflies of silvery light,
And sinks again upon the distant hills—
Ah, glorious sunset on the hills of God!

A CHARMING widow owns a nice boy, and a man wants to be appointed deputy father to the lad. "Free Your Mind."

A Quaker, on hearing a man swearing, said, "That's right, friend! Get all the bad stuff out of thee as quickly as possible." The following anecdote of Horace Greeley shows that if Mr. Greeley did not sympathize with the Quaker, yet he could keep cool under provocation:

One day a stranger came into the office, looking angry, and inquired for Greeley. I pointed him to the little den where Greeley was scratching away for dear life, and he made for it.

As he went in I heard him say, "You old hypocrite!" using an oath at the same time.

Greeley did not look up or even pause, but kept driving his pen madly on, his nose within a couple of inches of the paper, and his lips whispering the words after the pen, as was his wont.

The fellow continued, calling Greeley's attention to an article that had offended him, and denouncing him as a villain, a coward and a liar, with an oath after about every other word, meantime threatening to "knock his head off."

Greeley didn't stop for a moment, but wrote on unruffled by the blasphemy.

At last the intruder exhausted his vocabulary and turned to leave the room, when Greeley jumped up and squeaked out to him:

"Say, neighbor, don't go! Stay here and free your mind!"—Oliver Johnson.

THE COMING PRESIDENT.

Biographical Sketch of Winfield Scott Hancock.

At present between 56 and 57 years of age, he having been born in Pennsylvania in 1824, Gen. Hancock is in the very prime of his mental and physical faculties. He is said to be noticeably quiet and unassuming, and particularly free from the slightest disposition to dwell upon the events of his own military career, and equally indisposed to indulge in harsh or adverse criticism upon the judgment or actions of others.

He was born on the 14th of February, 1824, in Montgomery county, Pa., and, after an academic education, was destined for the military service of his country. He was named in honor of Gen. Winfield Scott, with whom he was always a great favorite, that celebrated veteran having taken an active and personal interest in the career of his young namesake from the time of his entrance upon a soldier's life until the honors of a distinguished General had made his name prominent among the defenders of his country.

Scott followed the career of young Hancock in the war of the Rebellion with intense interest, and had the gratification, notwithstanding the quiet manner of his movements during the many battles in which the Army of the Potomac participated, of seeing him rise steadily from a brigade commander to that of a chief of a corps d'armee.

When Winfield Scott heard of Gen. Hancock's brilliant charge upon the Confederates at Williamsburg, he is said to have remarked that he had always felt confident that Hancock would make for himself a great name.

Gen. Hancock was appointed a West Point cadet during the year 1840, and graduated at that military institution, in the same class with Gen. Pleasanton, on the 30th of June, 1844.

He entered the United States army on the 1st of July, 1844, with the rank of brevet Second Lieutenant of infantry. He was attached to the Fourth regiment, and did not receive his commission as Second Lieutenant until the 18th of June, 1846. He then went to Mexico, and served gallantly during the war in that country. He was brevetted on Aug. 20, 1847, First Lieutenant, for gallant and meritorious conduct during the battles of Contreras and Cherubusco.

On his return to the United States he was appointed Regimental Quartermaster, and retained that position during 1848 and 1849. He was afterward appointed Regimental Adjutant of the Sixth United States infantry. During January, 1853, he received his commission as First Lieutenant of his regiment, and on the 7th of November, 1855, was appointed Assistant Quartermaster General, with the rank of Captain. This position he held at the outbreak of the Rebellion.

On the 23d of September, 1861, he was appointed a Brigadier General of volunteers, and attached to the Army of the Potomac. On the 9th of October, 1861, his brigade formed a part of the force which occupied Lewinsville, Va. During the winter of 1861-2 he was engaged in many important reconnoissances, and was generally successful. When the Army of the Potomac, under Gen. McClellan, occupied the peninsula in 1862, an important command in it was intrusted to Gen. Hancock. For meritorious services before Yorktown on May 4, 1862, he was brevetted a Major General. At the battle of Williamsburg occurred his first opportunity for making a gallant and important action, and he improved it by making one of the most brilliant engagements of the war. Gen. McClellan, in his "Reports and Campaigns," thus speaks of it:

"As heavy firing was heard in the direction of Gen. Hancock's command, I immediately ordered Gen. Smith to proceed with his two remaining brigades to support that part of the line. Gen. Negley, with his brigade, received similar orders. Before these Generals could reach the field of Gen. Hancock's operations, although they moved with great rapidity, he had been confronted with a superior force. Feigning to retreat slowly, he awaited their onset and then turned upon them. After some terrific volleys of musketry he charged them with the bayonet, routing and dispersing their whole force, killing, wounding, and capturing from 500 to 600 men, he himself losing only thirty-one men."

This was one of the most brilliant engagements of the war. McClellan, in conclusion, adds:

"Gen. Hancock merits the highest praise for the soldierly qualities displayed, and his perfect appreciation of the vital forces of his position."

He next distinguished himself in the battle of Frazer's Farm, and subsequently took an active part in the campaign in Maryland, and was a conspicuous commander at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam. At the battle of Antietam, in September, 1862, Hancock was placed in command of Gen. Richardson's division of the Second corps, after the fall of that brave and intrepid leader. The requirements of the extended line of battle had so engaged the artillery that the application of Gen. Hancock for artillery for his division could not be complied with immediately by the Chief of Artillery or the corps commanders in his vicinity. Knowing the tried courage of the troops, Gen. Hancock felt confident that he could hold his position, although suffering from the enemy's artillery, but he was too weak to attack them, as the great length of the line he was obliged to hold prevented him from forming more than one line of battle. Seeing a body of the enemy advancing on some of the Union troops, Gen. Hancock obtained Hexamer's battery from Franklin's corps, and succeeded in frustrating the attack.

Hancock commanded a division of the Second corps at the battle of Fredericksburg, in 1862, and then did such valuable service as to materially add to his military reputation.

Greeley, in his "American Conflict," writing of Fredericksburg, says:

"Never did men fight better or die, alas! more fruitlessly than did most of Hancock's corps, especially Meagher's Irish brigade, composed of the Sixty-third, Sixty-ninth and Eighty-eighth New York, the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts, and the One Hundred and Sixteenth Pennsylvania, which dashed itself repeatedly against those impregnable heights until two-thirds of its number strewed the ground. Thus Hancock's and French's corps were successively sent up against those slippery heights, girdled with batteries, rising tier above tier to its crest, all carefully trained upon the approaches from Fredericksburg, while that fatal stone wall, so strong that even artillery could make no impression on it, completely sheltered Barksdale's brigade, which, so soon as our charging columns came within rifle shot, poured into their faces the deadliest storm of musketry."

Hancock was after this appointed a Major General, with a commission dated from Nov. 29, 1862. He commanded his division, generally known as "Sumner's men," at the battles of Chancellorsville, May, 1863, and, after the appointment of Gen. Couch to the command of the Department of the Susquehanna, was placed in charge of his corps. With this command he took part in the battles near Gettysburg during the early part of July, 1863.

At Gettysburg he again distinguished himself by some gallant work. On the first day of the battle, July 1, 1863, he was sent by Gen. Meade to decide whether a decisive battle should be given, or whether the army should fall back. He reported that Gettysburg was the place to fight, and took immediate command until the arrival of Meade. In the decisive action of July 3 he commanded on the left center, sustaining the terrific onset of Longstreet's Confederates, and being severely wounded. In the last wild, desperate charge made at this memorable battle Hancock's Second corps sustained the shock which the flower of the Confederate service put upon it. The immense effort made by the Confederates to sustain their position beat upon and well-nigh broke the gallant Second corps, to the command of which, Hancock being badly wounded, Gibbon was then called.

Being disabled by wounds, Gen. Hancock obtained sick leave until March, 1864, being meanwhile engaged in recruiting the Second army corps.

When Grant as Lieutenant General assumed the command of the entire army he issued an order completely reorganizing the Army of the Potomac, still commanded immediately by Gen. Meade; the five corps were reduced to three, commanded respectively by Gen. Hancock, to whom was assigned the Second, Warren the Fifth, and Sedgwick the Sixth.

The push into the Wilderness gave this soldier another opportunity which he improved. A battle commenced before the Union army was in position, and when the Generals supposed that there was no considerable forces on hand. Hill had secured a strong position, and had repelled with loss the brigades of Bartlett and Ayres, of Griffin's division, that were first sent up against him. He did not press his advantage until the approach of Hancock, when he attempted to interpose a strong force between the loosely-jointed commands, but was checked by Hancock, who arrested his direct advance and pushed rapidly upon him. Hancock, with his division Generals, Birney, Barlow, and Gibbon, struck heavily on the right of the enemy, and two hours' stubborn and bloody conflict with musketry alone resulted in great loss to both sides and little advantage to either. Hancock's corps saved itself from rout in this engagement only by the most obstinate fighting. The next day, at 5 o'clock in the morning, Hancock crowded back Hill nearly two miles across the Brock road, on his way to Parker's store, where he was stopped by the arrival of Longstreet, but not until he had captured a great many prisoners.

At Spottsylvania Hancock was ordered to advance on the earthworks held by Johnson's division of Ewell's corps. Under cover of a dense fog which prevailed in the morning, he advanced in two lines, Barlow's and Birney's divisions forming the first, Gibbon's and Mott's the second. Rapidly but quietly sweeping over the intervening space, the divisions dashed over the enemy's works, completely surprising and overwhelming them, and capturing Johnson with most of his division, also Brig. Gen. George H. Stewart, part of two brigades, and thirty guns. The number of prisoners secured was over 3,000. Hancock, in his dispatch to Grant, wrote: "I have captured from thirty to forty guns, I have finished up Johnson and am going into Early."

This Brig. Gen. Stewart was an old friend of Hancock, who, when the former was brought before him as a prisoner, held out his hand cordially, inquiring, "How are you, Stewart?" The latter haughtily replied, "I am Gen. Stewart, of the Confederate army, and, under the circumstances, I decline to take your hand." "And under any other circumstances, General, I should not have offered it," was Hancock's reply.

At Cold Harbor Hancock sustained his military prestige by a determined and sanguinary assault, and subsequently, north of the James, he admirably carried out an order to turn the enemy's advance position, the result being that a rebel outpost was successfully flanked and carried, and four guns captured. His fight at Reams' station was another gallant episode. Hancock, returned from the north of the James, had moved rapidly to the Weldon road in the rear of Warren. Striking at Reams' station, he had been busy tearing it up for two or three days, when his cavalry gave warning that the enemy in force were at hand. Their first blow fell on Miles' division, and was repulsed, but the enemy tried it again, and finally captured the position, but not without a heavy loss, Hancock being forced at last to retreat for want of reinforcements.

Hancock's advance to Hatcher's run gave him a little more hot service. Simultaneously with the charge on Hancock's front, Wade Hampton, with five brigades of cavalry, charged his left and rear, guarded by Gregg's cavalry, and Hancock was obliged to send all his available force to Gregg's support. Hampton persisted till after dark, but gained no ground, and was ultimately beaten off. Hancock's total loss by the day's operations was 1,500; that of the enemy was greater.

After the close of the war he was placed successively in command of the Middle Department, 1865-'66; the Department of Missouri, 1866-'67; of Louisiana and Texas, 1867-'68; of Dakota, 1870-'72, and, on the death of Gen. Meade in November, 1872, of the Department of the East, with headquarters at Governor's island, New York.

In the Democratic National Convention held at New York in July, 1868, he was a candidate for the Presidential nomination, receiving on the first ballot 33½ votes out of 317, which number gradually increased to 144½ on the eighteenth ballot, this being, with the exception of 145½ votes cast for Pendleton on the twelfth ballot, the greatest number of votes given to any candidate for the nomination until the twenty-second ballot, when Horatio Seymour received the unanimous vote of the convention.

Such is part of the record of the man nominated by the representative Democrats of the nation to the dignity and responsibility of the Presidential chair. It would be incomplete were it not possible to supplement the narrative of the soldier with glimpses of his record when, as commander of the Fifth Military district, embracing the States of Louisiana and Texas, a peculiar and delicate responsibility was placed upon him at a very critical time in the country's history. Upon assuming command of the district, pending the consummation of the reconstruction laws, Gen. Hancock issued the following order:

> The General commanding is gratified to learn that peace and quiet reign in this department. It will be his purpose to preserve this condition of things. As a means to this great end, he regards the maintenance of the civil authorities in the faithful execution of the laws as the most efficient under existing circumstances. In war it is indispensable to repel force by force, and overthrow and destroy opposition to lawful authority. But, when insurrectionary force has been overthrown and peace established, and the civil authorities are ready and willing to perform their duties, the military power should cease to lead, and the civil administration resume its natural and rightful dominion. Solemnly impressed with these views, the General announces that the great principles of American liberty still are the lawful inheritance of this people, and ever should be. The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, and the natural rights of persons and the rights of property must be preserved. Free institutions, while they are essential to the happiness and prosperity of the people, always furnish the strongest inducements to peace and order. Crimes and offenses committed in this district must be referred to the consideration and judgment of the regular civil tribunals, and those tribunals will be supported in their lawful jurisdiction.
> Should there be violations of existing laws which are not inquired into by the civil magistrates, or should failures in the administration of justice by the courts be complained of, the cases will be reported to these headquarters, when such orders will be made as may be deemed necessary.
>
> While the General thus indicates his purpose to respect the liberties of the people, he wishes all to understand that armed insurrections or forcible resistance to the law will be instantly suppressed by arms.
>
> By command of Maj. Gen. W. S. Hancock,
>
> W. G. MITCHELL,
> Brevet Lieut. Col., Acting Asst. Adjt. Gen.

Shortly after the foregoing was issued, the following order was issued by Gen. Hancock:

> The true and proper use of military power, besides defending the national honor against foreign nations, is to uphold the laws and civil government, and to secure to every person residing among us the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property.
>
> It is accordingly made, by act of Congress, the duty of the commander of this district to protect all persons in these rights, to suppress disorder and violence, and to punish or cause to be punished all disturbers of the public peace, and criminals.
>
> The commanding General has been officially informed that the administration of justice, and especially of criminal justice, in the courts is clogged, if not entirely frustrated, by the enforcement of paragraph No. 2 of the military order numbered "special orders 125," current series, from these headquarters, issued on the 24th of August, 1867, relative to the qualification of persons to be placed on the jury list of Louisiana.
>
> To determine who shall and who shall not be jurors appertains to the legislative power, and until the laws in existence regulating this subject shall be amended or changed by that department of the civil Government which the constitutions of all the States under our republican system vest with power, it is deemed best to carry out the will of the people as expressed in the last legislative act upon this subject.
>
> The qualification of a juror under the law is a proper subject for the decision of the courts. The commanding General, in discharge of the trust reposed in him, will maintain the just power of the judiciary, and is unwilling to permit the civil authorities and laws to be embarrassed by military interference, and, as it is an established fact that the administration of justice in the ordinary tribunals is greatly embarrassed by the operations of paragraph No. 2, special orders No. 125, current series, from these headquarters, it is ordered that said paragraph, which relates to the qualifications of jurors to be placed on the jury lists of the State of Louisiana, be, and the same is hereby, revoked, and that the trial by jury be henceforth regulated and controlled by the constitution and civil laws, without regard to any military orders heretofore issued from these headquarters.

On the 1st of January, 1868, Gen. Hancock issued the following order:

> Applications have been made at these headquarters implying the existence of an arbitrary authority in the commanding General touching purely civil controversies. One petitioner solicits this action, another that, and each refers to some special consideration of grace or favor which he supposes to exist, and which should influence this department. The number of such applications and the waste of time they involve make it necessary to declare that the administration of civil justice appertains to the regular courts.
>
> The rights of litigants do not depend upon the views of the General. They are to be adjudged and settled according to the law. Arbitrary power, such as he has been urged to assume, has no existence here. It is not found in the laws of Louisiana or Texas. It cannot be derived from any act or acts of Congress. It is restrained by a constitution, and prohibited from action in many particulars.
>
> The Major General commanding takes occasion to repeat that, while disclaiming judicial functions in civil cases, he can suffer no forcible resistance to the execution of processes of the courts.
>
> By command of Maj. Gen. Hancock.
>
> G. L. HARTSUFF, A. A. G.

Since his appointment to the Military Department of the Atlantic, rendered vacant by the death of Gen. Meade, as noticed above, Gen. Hancock has devoted his entire time to the administration of the duties of that department, and is at present in the fulfillment of them, with headquarters on Governor's island, New York.

THE COMING VICE PRESIDENT.

A Brief Sketch of His Career.

William H. English was born in Scott county, Ind., Aug. 27, 1822. After spending three years at the University of South Hanover, he studied law, being admitted to practice in 1846. He had previously been elected Clerk of the House of Representatives of Indiana. During the administration of President Polk he was a clerk in the Treasury Department, at Washington. In 1850 he was Clerk of the State Constitutional Committee. In 1851 he was elected to the Legislature, and officiated as Speaker. A year later he was elected a Representative in Congress; re-elected in 1854, and made a Regent of the Smithsonian Institute. In 1856 he was again elected to Congress. During the first session of the Thirty-fifth Congress he took part in the Kansas compromise matter. He also officiated during this Congress as Chairman of the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads. He was re-elected to the Thirty-sixth Congress, serving on the same committee. His home is at Indianapolis. He was succeeded in Congress by James A. Cravens, and still later by M. C. Kerr, afterward Speaker of the House. Together with Washburne and Lovejoy, he voted for the bill which admitted Kansas as a free State.

At the opening of the Rebellion, Mr. English, who was still in Congress, favored pacification, if possible, and every measure tending to that result. On the subject of secession he was as firm and bold in opposing the views of his former political associates from the South as he had been in opposing the admission of Kansas as a State under the Lecompton constitution. He denounced it from the beginning, and made every effort to induce Southern members to abandon it. In a speech in the House of Representatives he plainly told the South that "the great Democratic party, that has so long and so justly boasted of its nationality, must not degenerate into a mere Southern sectional party, or a party that tolerates the sentiment of disunion; if it does its days are numbered, and its mission ended."

Mr. English was offered the command of a regiment by his personal friend, Gov. Morton, but declined, and in person took no active part in the war; but he was a firm and consistent supporter of the Union cause.

In 1863 Mr. English founded the First National Bank, of Indianapolis, and until July, 1877, he was engaged in various financial enterprises in that city. At the time mentioned he retired from active business life.

How Gen. Hancock Received the News of His Nomination.

The news of his nomination reached him at 12:20, and was contained in the brief announcement, "Hancock is nominated." Capt. Wharton, an Aide-de-Camp, conveyed the news to him. His first question was: "What do you think of it?"

Then very soon the wires began to bring in the dispatches of congratulation. In the forenoon he came to the city on private business, but was back in time to first learn of his nomination there. "You must excuse me from saying anything," he said, "for as yet I cannot consider myself anything more than a private citizen, for I have not yet been officially informed of the honor that has been done me. I can say honestly that it has been somewhat of a surprise to me."

"What will your policy be, General?" asked the reporter.

"Democratic, of course. Whether in or out of the high office of President, I believe that honest self-government is the highest gift a people can have, and that is, in a nutshell, what I believe to be the spirit of Democracy and the convention."

"But, General—"

"No. I thank you for your visit, but don't try to interview me now. Under the circumstances it would not be proper. There are a large number of telegrams from public men and others, and those you may see, for they are in a measure public."—New York telegram.

Tilden's Congratulation.

After the news of the nomination of Hancock was received Mr. Tilden promptly telegraphed to Speaker Randall:

> To the Hon. Samuel J. Randall, Chairman:
>
> I congratulate the convention and the Democratic party of the United States upon the nomination of Hancock and English. The people will condemn the fraudulent subversion of the election of 1876, and will assert their power and resume their sovereign right to choose their rulers.
>
> S. J. TILDEN.

To Gen. Hancock Mr. Tilden telegraphed:

> Gen. W. S. Hancock, Army Headquarters, Governor's Island:
>
> I cordially congratulate you upon your nomination.
>
> SAMUEL J. TILDEN.

To which Gen. Hancock responded:

> GOVERNOR'S ISLAND, N. Y., June 24.
>
> To S. J. Tilden:
>
> I thank you sincerely for your kind congratulations.
>
> W. S. HANCOCK.

A Paper Stove.

Perhaps the most remarkable object ever fashioned from paper was a fire-stove with a cheerful fire burning in it. We have from time to time noted the announcements of newly-invented railway carriages and carriage wheels, chimney pots, flour barrels, cottage walls, roofing tiles, and bricks and tiles for stamping, all made of paper. A material capable of so many uses, so diversified in character, is obviously destined to play a very important part in our manufacturing future. Articles of this kind which have just now perhaps the greatest interest, and which are among the latest novelties in this way, are paper "blankets." Attention has frequently been called to the value of ordinary sheets of paper as a substitute for bed clothes, or, at least, as an addition to bed clothes. The idea seems to have suggested the fabrication of "blankets" from this cheap material. The fact that they are not as durable as the genuine article is in their favor, as, in the case of the very poor, where the same bedding is used for years, a very cheap material that will last only a comparatively short time must be better than durable articles that are rarely or never washed.

M'LLE SARAH BERNHARDT is quoted as saying: "I touch upon everything; yes, I know it. I have been reproached with it often enough. I am an artist, and nothing that concerns art can be indifferent to me. I adore the theatre, although I consider that the actor's art is less complete than the other arts that I practice, and I do all I can to succeed on the stage. I adore painting and sculpture—two creative arts those!—and I carve and paint. I have been modeling now for a good many years. As for the palette, I am almost a beginner, but I am sure that I shall arrive at a result. I have got that into my head. As for music, that is one of the compartments that is wanting in my brain; I know nothing about it. I am sorry that such is the case.

INDIANA NEWS.

THE alligator formerly at the Indianapolis water-works has got loose and gone south.

SINCE the dreadful cyclone in Hanover township, Shelby county, five of the injured people have died.

THE first tickets ever sold from Indianapolis to Tucson, Arizona, were disposed of the other day on a through rate of $164.85.

IT is announced that the project of building the Indianapolis and Evansville straight-line railroad has been abandoned by the Eastern capitalists who were intending to furnish the means.

JAKE CRONE paid a novel bet at Indianapolis, one day last week. He was compelled to drive about the city a hack drawn by four white horses, and to wear upon his hat the inscription "Grant lost."

THE private banks in the Indianapolis collection district report their average deposits for the six months ending May 31 as being $25,172,214, against $19,712,603 for the corresponding period last year.

THE loss by the recent fire at Corydon is variously estimated at from $15,000 to $20,000, about one-half of which is covered by insurance. The fire was caused by a defective flue in the residence of Mrs. Brown.

WASHINGTON STEWART, colored, died at the City Hospital in Indianapolis last week. It is well established that he was 101 years old. He was born a slave in Virginia, and leaves a large family of children, one of whom, residing in Indianapolis, is well off.

MRS. GEORGE JOHNSON, near Monrovia, Morgan county, was drowned in a rain-barrel, head down. It is supposed she was deranged on account of disagreeing with her husband on religious matters. He is a progressive Friend, and she an old-time Friend.

THE ninth annual convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, State of Indiana, was in session at Madison last week. Twenty-five lodges were represented. The officers elected for the current year are: John Byrne, State Delegate; William Broderick, Secretary; John Murphy, Treasurer.

MR. DE PAUW is having several immense brick buildings erected upon the site of those recently destroyed by fire at New Albany. When completed, the immense glass-works will have its present facilities increased one-third larger.

THE Box family poisoning case, at New Albany, has virtually ended with the discharge of the accused poisoner, Moses Box, from arrest. If the family were really poisoned by arsenic, it is believed the poisoning was purely accidental.

THE large flouring mill of John Rhine, at Milton, was found to be on fire the other day, and the flames spread to the Whitewater Valley depot and also to Mr. Rhine's house, both of which were totally destroyed. It is supposed the fire originated in the smut machine, which had been running throughout the day. Total loss about $20,000; insurance $8,000.

A SHOOTING affray occurred at Dana, Vermillion county, the other day, in which two farmers fatally shot each other. The case was that the daughter of the elder, having separated from her husband, tried to take her child by stealth, under the protection of her father; discovering his loss, the husband started in pursuit. Coming in sight, both men commenced firing. The woman escaped with her child to Illinois.

THE Supreme Court of Indiana, in a test case, decided that the amendments to the constitution of the State approved by popular vote last fall, are not valid, not having been submitted or adopted in legal form. This overthrows all the work of that election, and leaves the constitution in every respect as it stood before the amendments were proposed. Among other effects, this continues Indiana as an "October State" in the matter of State elections. One of the nullified constitutional amendments provided for changing the October State elections to the date of the November Presidential election, so that Indiana's election for State officers next fall will take place, as heretofore, on the same day as that of Ohio—in October, about a month before the Presidential election.

THE boiler of Kendall, Barnes & Co.'s oil mill, at Richmond, exploded a few days ago, killing John Staley, a nurseryman, who was passing, and burying Hiram Carrington, the engineer, and Henry Schrader, George Schrader and Garrett Arkenschult, employes of the mill, under the ruins of the engine-house. They were taken out by the fire department as soon as the debris could be removed and taken to their homes, where they are lying in a very precarious condition. The mill, which is one of the largest in the State, has only been in operation a year or two, and the boiler was almost new. The night engineer, who left it a few minutes before, says there were sixty pounds of steam on, and two gauges of water. Carrington was drawing on his overalls and had not looked at the boiler or engine. It is thought that the night engineer had grown careless and let the water run down. The force of the explosion was terrific; wagon-loads of brick were strewn along the side street for a square and a half, and a frame house nearly 100 feet distant was riddled with holes, the bricks and timber going entirely through one wall and striking against the floor and the other wall. The Union Depot and a number of other buildings within a radius of two squares suffered more or less.

Census Estimates.

Evansville thinks a merely 6,000 increase of population in ten years rather slim, and the City Council will order a new enumeration. On the basis of votes polled there should be a population of 40,000, whereas the census-takers count only 28,000. Mad is no name for it in that town.

The population of Spencer was thought to be near 2,000, but the actual number is 1,660 according to the census just taken.

The census of Edinburg, just completed, shows a population of only 1,811. This is a great surprise, as everybody thought it had 2,000.

The census returns for Salem are completed. The population is 1,622; dwelling-houses, 315; number born in Indiana, 1,340; widowers, 1; widows, 82; old maids, none.

The census of New Albany is not yet fully completed, but sufficiently so to show the population to be 17,500. Since the census of 1870 the city limits have been greatly restricted, suburbs containing over 1,200 people having been cut off by the Council. If these suburbs were still in the city limits, as they were in 1870, the population would be within a fraction of 20,000. The statistics will show that within the past ten years the manufacturing capital of the city has increased $5,500,000.

The census of 1870 showed a population in Jeffersonville of a little over 7,000. This time it will reach over 10,000, an increase of 33 per cent., which is largely in excess of the growth of New Albany. The First ward of the city has nearly 3,100 inhabitants—almost one-third the entire population.

The Woman Who Writes.

We all remember the strange little woman in "David Copperfield," who kept Steerforth's nails in order for him and rendered similar service to other folk for moderate hire. Her industry was not stranger than is that of a little woman here in New York whose business it is to write notes for fashionable women whose indolence or lack of skill in penmanship or in the art of epistolary composition forbids them to write notes for themselves. This obscure worker knows how to turn sentences cleverly; she can say graceful things gracefully; she can write a note which sparkles all over with good humor and effects its purpose. This is her skill, her equipment, her capital in life. Of its kind it is as genuine as any. The things that she knows how to do are things that need to be done. There is as positive a need for her skill as for that of the plumber—if we may imagine a plumber who really has skill—and, however completely without recognition her business may be among trades and professions, it is as legitimate as any. There are women who cannot write the notes and letters required of them with satisfaction to themselves, and other women who can do so but dislike the occupation, and many of them are glad to pay for the service. The professional letter-writer has managed to discover this need and to turn it to account in securing employment for herself. She has many clients. Some of them engage her for specified hours of each day, to write whatever notes there may be occasion to send, while others employ her only upon particular occasions where there is more writing than usual to be done. Her experiences are varied and interesting. Sometimes she has to preserve answers to notes that she has herself written upon a few occasions, when invitations not yet received were known to be coming, she had to prepare answers to them at one house before writing them at the other, but being a discreet little body she keeps her own counsel in such cases, and does not reveal the nature of the replies, already prepared, to the client whose invitations they are meant to answer.—New York Post.

A LITTLE boy, 4 years old, having often been told it was wrong to ask for anything at table, was down at dessert. After patiently waiting for some time without being noticed, he exclaimed, "Mamma, please, may I have an orange, if I don't ask for it?" "Yes, dear," was the reply. But, after a considerable interval, the little fellow, not getting his orange, again addressed his mother with, "Please, mamma, I'm not asking for an orange." This time he was duly rewarded.

Getting on the Police.

"Well, my man," said a philanthropist to a hardened looking chap confined in the New Orleans Parish prison, "what are you in for?"

"In for thirty days, I reckon," said the prisoned, sullenly.

"No, not that. What offense did you commit?"

"Didn't commit anything. The judge committed me."

"Well, you must have been accused of some crime?"

"Oh, yes; I was accused of trying to get on the police."

"Nonsense. Trying to get on the police is no crime. I have myself recomended many worthy men for position on the police force, and have helped to get them on."

"It is a fact. That is all I was sent here for. You see there was two of us, and we both tried to get on the same policeman. We had him down, but some of the other peelers thought we were crowding the man too hard, and"—

"That will do, sir," said the philanthropist, "I understand your case perfectly. Here are a few tracts for the improvement of your mind, which just now appears to be a little warped."

Obeying Orders.

[Boston Transcript.]

It was just this side of Detroit that a man entered the car, took a seat and devoted his attention to the morning paper. After a time the conductor came along and touched him gently on the shoulder, but without affect. Again he tapped the passenger on the arm, but there was no response, and the official had to speak.

"Ticket, sir?"

The traveler looked wearily up from his paper and said, "I haven't any ticket."

"Money, then," said the conductor.

"I haven't any money."

"Then you must get off at the next station." "I will," was the submissive response, and the conductor passed along. The train stopped at the next station, started again, and was bowling along at twenty miles an hour, when the conductor again came through and saw the traveler on the same seat as before.

"I told you to get out of this car," he said, somewhat sternly.

"You did."

"Why didn't you do it?"

"I did."

"And then got in again?"

"I did."

"Now, look here, my friend, I don't want any more of this nonsense. Get out of the car at the next station, and stay out. You hear me?"

Again the train stopped and again it started, but in another car the conductor found the self-same traveler, as calm as a June morning.

"You are here again?" he asked.

"Yes"

"Didn't I tell you to get off this train and stay off?"

"No."

"I did."

"No; you told me to get out of that car and stay out, and I did."

"Now, my friend," said the conductor, "listen to me, and mind you do just as I tell you. At the next station get off this train and stay off. Do just as I tell you, or you will get into trouble."

"Agreed" said the traveler, and the conductor passed on.

Again the train stopped and started, anh again the traveler turned up on the train. The conductor was just reaching for the bell-rope to stop the train and eject him summarily, when the traveler stayed his hand.

"I obeyed orders," he said. "You told me to do just as you ordered. I got out and stayed out till you said, 'All aboard!' Then I got aboard, for I didn't want to get into trouble, you know."

The conductor gave him his hand, and it was noticed later in the day they ate together in the dining-car, and ate heartily.

Johnny on the Tiger.

This is littly Johnny's composition on the "Roil Bengol Tagger:" "One time there was a man which had a tagger, and the tagger it was a sho, and the man tuk the money fur to git in. The man had a big paper nailed onto the tagger's den, and the paper it said, the paper did: 'The Roil Bengol Tagger, sometimes called the Monnerk of the Jungle. Hands off. No techin' the tagger!' The monnerk of the jungle it was always a-layin' down with its nose between its poz, and the fokes which had paid for to get in they was mad cos it wuden't wock and rore like distant thunder. But the sho man he said: That's ol rite when I get the new cage done, but this is the same cage which the offle feller broke out in Oregon, time he et up them seventeen men and their families.' Then the fokes they wud ol stand back and tock in whispers while the tagger slept. But one day a feller which was drunk he take to punchen the tagger with the nase hed of his 'umberller,' which stamped the oddiences wild, and the wimmin fokes they stud into chairs and hollered like it was a mouse, but the drunk chap he kep a jobbin the monnerk of the jungle crewel. 'Pretty sone the monnerk it bellered offle and riggled, but the feller kep a pokin' like he was fireman to a steam engine. Bimeby the monnerk it jumped onto its hine feets and shucked itself out of its skin and roled up its sleefs and spit onto his hands and spoke up and said: 'I behang if I can't jest wollop the peagreen stuffin' out the gum dasted poloot which has been proddin' this ere tagger!' And the oddiences they was a stonished."

The Mockingbird.

The intelligence (says Wilson) which the American mockingbird displays in listening to and laying up lessons, from almost every species of the feathered creation withing his hearing, is really surprising, and marks the peculiarity of his genius. He posesses a full voice, strong and musical, and capable of almost every modulation, from the clear, mellow notes of the wood-thrush, to the savage scream of the bald-eagle. In the measure and accent, he faithfully follows his originals. In force and sweetness of expression, he greatly improves upon them. In his native groves, mounted on the top of a tall bush or half-grown tree, in the dawn of a dewy morning, while the woods are already vocal with a multitude of warblers, his admirable song rises pre-eminent over every competitor. Neither is this strain altogether imitative. His own native notes, which are easy distinguishable, are bold and full, and varied seemingly beyond all limits. They consist of short expressions of two, three, or at most five or six syllables, generally interspersed with imitations, and all of them uttered with great emphasis and rapidity, and continued with undiminished ardor. The buoyant gayety of his action arresting the eye, as his song most irresistibly does the ear, he sweeps round with an enthusiastic ecstacy; he mounts and descends as his song swells or dies away; and, as it has been beautifully expressed, "he bounds aloft with the celerity of an arrow, as if to recover or recall his very soul, expired in the last elevated strain." While exerting himself a bystander, destitute of sight, would suppose that the whole feathered tribe had assembled together on a trial of skill, each striving to produce his utmost effect, so perfect are his imitations. He many times deceives the sportsman, and sends him in search of birds that perhaps are not within miles of him, but whose notes he exactly imitates; even birds themselves are frequently imposed on by the admirable mimic, and are decoyed by the fancied calls of their mate, or dive with precipitation into the depths of the thickets at the scream of what they suppose to be the sparrow-hawk.

The mockingbird loses little of the power and energy of his song by confinement. In his domesticated state, when he commences his career of song, it is impossible to stand by uninterested. He whistles for the dog; Cæsar starts up, wags his tail and runs to meet his master. He squeaks out like a hurt chicken, and the hen hurries about with hanging wings and bristled feathers, clucking to protect her injured brood. The barking of the dog, the mewing of the cat, the creaking of a passing wheelbarrow follow with great truth and rapidity. He repeats the tune taught him by his master, though of considerable length, fully and faithfully. He runs over the quiverings of the canary, and the clear whistlings of the Virginia nightingale or red-bird, with such superior execution and effect that the mortified songsters feel their own inferiority and become altogether silent, while he seems to triumph in their defeat by redoubling his exertions.

This excessive fondness for variety, however, in the opinion of some, injures his song. His elevated imitations of the brown thrush are frequently interrupted by the crowing of cocks; and the warblings of the blue-bird, while he exquisitely manages, are mingled with the screaming of swallows or the cackling of hens; amid the simple melody of the robin we are suddenly surprised by the shrill reiterations of the whip-poor-will; while the notes of the killdeer, blue-jay, martin and twenty others, succeed with such imposing reality that we look round for the originals, and discover, with astonishment, that the sole performer in this singular concert is the admirable bird now before us. During this exhibition of his powers he spreads his wings, expands his tail and throws himself round the cage in all the ecstacy of enthusiasm, seeming not only to sing, but to dance, keeping time to the measure of his music. Both in his native and domesticated state, during the solemn stillness of night, as soon as the moon rises in silent majesty, he begins his delightful solo, and serenades us the livelong night with a full display of his vocal powers, making the whole neighborhood ring with his inimitable medley.

The New Dinner and Tea Service.

Ordered twelve months since for the White House, has arrived and was spread out for the benefit of the admiring few who had been advised of its coming. The service comprises about five hundred pieces, and the cost is about $3,000. The material is of the finest porcelain. The service was made at Limoges, France, by an American firm. It was designed by Theodore R. Davis and others. Engravers and painters to the number of fifteen were employed on it. The service consists of soup, fish, dinner, game, bird, dessert and fruit, coffee and tea series. The designs for all are entirely new and novel, exclusively relating to American products of the earth, air and water, and the decorations are elaborate and magnificent. For instance, on each piece of each series is inscribed a design pertinent to that series.

Permanence of Democracy.

[Boston Globe.]

When, after sixteen years subjection as a minority party, the democracy in 1876 elected its candidate for president by a popular majority of a quarter of a million, it was regarded as a wonderful instance of revived vitality. When, after another four years of existence as a party of opposition under a fraudulently-installed administration, it is now about to sweep the country by a majority which will without doubt be much greater than that which elected Mr. Tilden, the fact of this vitality becomes yet more apparent.

Why is it that the democratic party has preserved its life and held safe within itself the germs of growth under the stress of circumstances that would seem fatal to any political organization? Parties have sprung up in our republic, run their course and disappeared, while the democratic party has remained, sometimes in the minority, sometimes in power, but always an existing force. Other parties, which are now but a name or a tradition, have left the impress of their work upon some special feature of our history or our policy, while the democratic party has continued steadily on its course, sometimes an ally, sometimes an opponent, but always a living power.

The cause of this permanence of the democratic party is not far to seek. It is the fact that the democratic party is based upon the principles which underlie the whole structure of our republic. Its founder was the author of the constitution of the United States. Its early leaders were those who maintained the republican idea against the statesmen of monarchical leanings who always doubted the entire or permanent success of a government by and through the people. It must always exists so long as our form of government lasts. So long as we have the federal constitution, the union of the states, a government by popular election, we must have the democratic party, whose fundamental tenets these are. Temporary issues may become more prominent and men may for a time take an interest in them which obscures the great and permanent questions of our system of government, but these questions cannot be set aside, they are always with us, and the party which maintains them can never die.

The younger generation of voters has not been educated in the strict doctrinal school of their fathers. For a score of years sentiment and impulse have held too powerful a sway. Under their influence we have seen the constitution set aside as a rule of action, and broken through as if it were a barrier of straw. The rights of the states have been denied or abridged, and the rights of individual citizens have been encroached upon. Some fantastic cry, having a popular catch to it, or some pretended necessity of the occasion, has been made to do duty in justification of such a course, and the public have grown used to accepting it, unmindful of the fact that thus the very foundations of our government were weakened. Without such a weakening the great electoral fraud of four years ago would have been impossible.

But a return to democratic principles and to democratic control is inevitable. The country has seen these spasms of error expand themselves and pass away, time and time again. The first victory of the democratic party was the birth of the republic itself. This idea must be supreme while the republic lasts. In the very formation of the constitution the battle was fought out between centralization and democracy. In the succeeding years the contest was renewed; but the principle was already established, the republic was secure, and the democratic party lived. It was nearly ninety years ago that Alexander Hamilton said: "I own it is my opinion, though I do not publish it in Dan or Beersheba, that the present government is not that which will answer the ends of society by giving stability and protection to its rights, and that it will probably be found to be expedient to go to the British form." To approach this plan and give "stability," Hamilton's idea was that congress should have power to pass all laws which it might deem necessary to the common defence and general welfare of the union. Fortunately, Jefferson's doctrine prevailed; and his plan was the "support of the state governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the severest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies."

Against this party of the republic the democratic party, there have arisen other parties, each founded on some idea of a more or less ephemeral nature, and each passing away as its special issue was disposed of. The whig party, next akin to the federal party, made a handsome stand for a time, but went to pieces under the anti-slavery agitation, because it had not, like the democratic party, a basis solid and permanent as that of the union. The whig party is now only a memory. The free-soil party arose and did valiant battle for an idea that was only a side issue; and it went the way of the rest, and is now but a feeble recollection. The native American party caused a breeze and vanished like a breath.

The fate of its predecessors awaits the republican party. Like them it has no principle except that of expediency, it has no lasting idea as its basis, it has no cause for existence. Let it once be driven from the place and the power in which it is entrenched, and it can never recover itself. It will disappear as the old federal party disappeared, as the whig party disappeared, as the free-soil party and the native American party disappeared. There is nothing in its constitution to keep it alive. Its operations have always been directed to the production of temporary effects, never to the maintenance of the principles which lie at the bottom of our system of government. Its work has always been on the surface, with its pretended principles adopted for the occasion. It came into existence as the furious advocate of ultra state rights in their application to the extension of slavery; it closes its career as the ultra-opponent of state rights in their application to the control of local affairs.

When once thrown from power it can never consolidate on any issue of sufficient breadth to make it a national party. It will go to pieces; and while there will always be a party of the opposition, fighting on side issues for temporary ideas, it is improbable that there will ever again be the republican party. All our political history indicates that this is the end of republicanism as such, just as it warrants the permanence of the democratic party.

And as the republican party, the latest of these ephemeræ, is about closing its day of life, it is curious to observe that the one definite principle which it proclaims is the same as that on which the federalists stood and on which they were defeated. Apart from Delegate Flanagan's statement of the principles and purposes of the party at Chicago—to get offices—the one unequivocal idea set forth by the republican party is that we must have a strong centralized government as distinguished from a government by the people acting through the states as sovereign units. This question was long ago fought over and disposed of; and, with its victory on this field, the democratic party—the party whose very name proclaims the foundation of our republic, a government of the people—made itself as permanent as the republic.

When John Hancock and Samuel Adams were for the second time inaugurated governor and lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, Samuel Adams—the same whom Boston now honors with a statue in her busiest square, to be a monitor of sound statesmanship to all her citizens—as he was about to take the oath, said: "I shall presently be called upon by you, sir, as it is enjoined by the constitution, to make a declaration upon oath (and I shall do it with cheerfulness, because the injunction accords with my own judgment and conscience) that the commonwealth of Massachusetts is, and of right ought to be, a free, sovereign and independent state. I shall also be called upon to make another declaration, with the same solemnity, to support the constitution of the United States. I see the consistency of this, for it cannot have been intended but that these constitutions should mutually aid and support each other. It is also my humble opinion that, while the commonwealth of Massachusetts maintains her own just authority, weight and dignity, she will be among the firmest pillars of the federal Union." Samuel Adams then proclaimed, in the name of Massachusetts, the fundamental doctrine of the democratic party, which the democrats of to-day, ninety years after, repeat in their platform. It is this consistent adherence to the principles of our system of government which gives the democratic party immortality.

The History of Two Tomcats.

The Washington Post is authority for the following: A gentleman residing at one of our prominent city boarding-houses was, about a month ago, presented with a pair of youthful Maltese tomcats, which he finally concluded to name after the Chicago and Cincinnati presidential nominees. When the news of the Chicago nomination came, the elder cat was formally christened "Garfield," and, last Thursday, simultaneously with the announcement of the Cincinnati result, the younger was named "Hancock." Later in the afternoon of that day "Garfield" died. Nothing particular seemed to ail him, explained the gentleman; he was frisky enough until I named the other cat, when he quietly retired into a corner and was picked up dead.

Union and Civil Liberty.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The candidacy of General Winfield Scott Hancock for the presidency of the United States eloquently means these two things. General Hancock is the conspicuous representative of Union. His name is indissolubly linked to those of the foremost soldiers of the war for the Union. No general in the army was braver. No general in the army met the emergency of a great and critical hour with more promptness and soldierly power. Grant at Vicksburg was not greater than Hancock at Gettysburg. Sherman in his peaceful march to the sea was not so great as Hancock in the pivotal battle of the war. Sheridan, brilliant, dashing, swift-riding, was not more important than was Hancock, who also rode "twenty miles," to direct and inspire the battle of Gettysburg. Other duties and other responsibilities were imposed on other soldiers. No duties and responsibilities were met with fuller and readier capacity and courage. No soldier of the war was more manly and heroic than Hancock. He was the military intellect and the inspiration of the decisive battle of the war. He made the plan of the battle of Gettysburg and fought the battle after he had determined the place and plan. History asserts that this was the pivotal battle. The national capitol was in peril. The southern foe had ceased to be a defensive enemy. A vast and splendidly generaled foe had become an aggressive invader. This great battle was fought in a northern state. Northern cities and towns and hamlets were amazed at the stupendous audacity of the rebel armies They were not only astonished, but they trembled. What if the rebel arms should succeed in this great battle in a northern state? and Hancock, like Sheridan, was "twenty miles away." But it was Hancock who rode to the front, determined the plan and place of battle, really fought the battle, and its victory is largely his glory. And this is the one battle-ground of the war for the Union which has received the formal homage of art and eloquence. This was the towering battle-field. It was to this battle-spot that the silver-tongued Everett was invited to speak his words of consecration. It was this ground that Lincoln, in a speech unsurpassed in history in its eloquence and simplicity, consecrated by saying that it had been consecrated before. "But in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here." General Hancock's name has been accorded by history a place in this battle which we need not magnify and which none can disturb. There are but two living soldiers in the army with whose names Hancock's is comparable as history will record them. We have a right, therefore, to say that the name of the democratic candidate for the presidency stands as the splendid, lustrous, valorous, impregnable representative of Union.

We have said, also, that General Hancock represents civil liberty. It should be comparatively easy for the man trained in civil life to follow the impulses of civil authority. It is not easy for all men of civil career to do this, but it ought to be. All men think it lovable for civilians to show devotion to civil liberty. The world praises such acts as estimable deeds. But is it not more beautiful for soldiers to show devotion to civil liberty? When the soldier sheathes his sword in the presence of civil power, is there not an emphasized devotion to the gentle, unarmed civil authority? When the soldier surpasses the civilian in making obeisance to the musketless majesty of the noiseless constitution and the laws, has he not evinced a superior reverence for the civil power? To be able to recognize civil liberty in the darkness and in an hour of excitement is a statesmanlike quality. Is it not? When the civilians who remembered civil liberty were in a minority in the United States General Hancock recollected it. When there were few to say it, he said that he regarded the maintenance of the civil authorities in the faithful execution of the laws as the most efficient means to secure the ends of peace and quiet. He was earliest among soldiers after our civil war to say that "the military power should cease to lead, and the civil administration should resume its natural and rightful dominion." It was Hancock who pleaded for "the great principles of American liberty." It was Hancock who proclaimed when the war had ended: "The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, and the natural rights of persons, and the rights of property, must be preserved." It was he who said that "free institutions always furnish the strongest incentives to peace and order," when he faced frowning authority in so saying. Have we not a right to say that General Hancock represents civil liberty to an exceptional degree? All the more because he is a soldier whose respect for civil power was tested in trying times does he not stand as one of its shining symbols?

Union and civil liberty are the two issues of this campaign. We are to vote for, or against, pacification and the reign of the constitution and the laws. Who shall say that the hero of Gettysburg has not the nerve and the firmness to mantain the one, or that the hero of order No. 40 has not the splendid respect for the other to hold its banner white and victorious?

SUPPORTING THE GUNS.

How a Field Battery Comes Into Action.

Did you ever see a battery take position?

It hasn't the thrill of a cavalry charge, nor the grimness of a line of bayonets moving slowly and determinedly on, but there is a peculiar excitement about it that makes old veterans rise in their saddles and cheer.

We have been fighting at the edge of the woods. Every cartridge box has been emptied once and more, and a fourth of the brigade has melted away in dead and wounded and missing. Not a cheer is heard in the whole brigade. We know that we are being driven foot by foot, and that when we break back once more the line will go to pieces and the enemy will pour through the gap.

Here comes help!

Down the crowded hallway gallops a battery, withdrawn from some other position to save ours. The field fence is scattered while you could count thirty, and the guns rush for the hill behind us. Six horses to a piece—three riders to each gun. Over dry ditches where a farmer would not drive a wagon, through clumps of bushes, over logs a foot thick, every horse on the gallop, every rider lashing his team and yelling—the sight behind us makes us forget the foe in front. The guns jump two feet high as the heavy wheels strike rock or log, but not a horse slackens his pace, nor a cannoneer loses his seat. Six guns, six caissons, sixty horses, eighty men race for the brow of the hill as if he who reached it first would be knighted.

A moment ago the battery was a confused mob. We look again, and the six guns are in position, the detached horses hurrying away, the ammunition chests open, and along our line runs the command, "Give them one more volley and fall back to support the guns!" We have scarcely obeyed when boom! boom! boom! opens the battery, and jets of fire jump down and scorch the green trees under which we fought and despaired.

The shattered old brigade had a chance to breath for the first time in three hours as we form a line of battle behind the guns and lie down. What grim, cool fellows those cannoneers are! every man is a perfect machine. Bullets splash dust in their faces, but they do not wince. Bullets sing over and around them, but they do not dodge. There goes one to the earth, shot through the head as he sponged his gun. The machinery loses just one beat—misses just one cog in the wheel—and then works away again as before.

Every gun is using short-fuse shell. The ground shakes and trembles—the roar shuts out all sounds from a battle line three miles long, and the shells go shrieking into the swamp to cut trees short off—to mow great gaps in the bushes—to hunt out and shatter and mangle men until their corpses can not be recognized as human. You would think a tornado was howling through the forest, followed by billows of fire, and yet men live through it—aye! press forward to capture the battery! We can hear their shouts as they form for a rush.

Now the shells are changed for grape and canister, and the guns are served so fast that all reports blend into one mighty roar. The shriek of a shell is the wickedest sound of war, but nothing makes the flesh crawl like the demoniac singing, purring, whistling grape-shot and the serpentlike hiss of canister. Men's legs and arms are not shot through, but torn off. Heads are torn from bodies, and bodies cut in two. A round shot or shell takes two men out of ranks as it crashes through. Grape and canister mow a swath and pile the dead on top of each other.

Through the smoke we see a swarm of men. It is not a battle-line, but a mob of men desperate enough to bathe their bayonets in the flame of the guns. The guns leaped from the ground almost as they are depressed on the foe, and shrieks and screams and shouts blend into one awful and steady cry. Twenty men out of the battery are down, and the firing is interrupted. The foe accepts it as a sign of wavering and come rushing on. They are not ten feet away when the guns give them a last shot. That discharge picks living men off their feet and throws them into the swamp, a blackened, bloody mass.

Up now, as the enemy are among the guns! There is a silence of ten seconds, and then the flash and roar of more than three thousand muskets, and a rush forward with bayonets. For what? Neither on the right nor left nor in front of us is a living foe! There are corpses around us which have been struck by three, four and even six bullets, and nowhere on this acre of ground is a wounded man! The wheels of the guns can not move until the blockade of dead is removed. Man can not pass from caisson to gun without climbing over windrows of dead. Every gun and wheel is smeared with blood—every foot of grass has its horrible stain.

Historians write of the glory of war. Burial parties saw murder where historians saw glory.—Detroit Free Press.

Hands All Around.

[Pittsburgh Post.]

There is not a single sore spot upon which the friends of any candidate who was voted for at the Cincinnati convention can place his finger. Hendricks waves the flag in Indiana; the gallant Bayard speaks for the south and heartily endorses the nomination. Tilden and Seymour speak with authority for the empire state. Randall and Wallace clasp hands over Pennsylvania's favorite son and will insist on making their state, as in the days of Jackson, the Keystone of the democratic arch. From Maine to the golden strand of the Pacific, there is not a discordant note nor sign of discontent. Local jealousies are hushed and rivalries pushed aside. The hopes of the masses, stimulated by the prospect of success, like long pent up waters, overflow the land and overwhelm all impediments. Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small.

Remember that "We've Got you."

[Louisville Courier-Journal.]

We have "got" you on that ticket, republicans. You never sought statesmen for your candidates. You perfered to be the "war party." You put Grant in two terms because he was a Union soldier; you put Hayes in one term because he was a Union soldier; you nominated Garfield because he was a Union soldier. We now give the country a Union soldier the superior of all these men. We now give the country a Union soldier whose orders and letters during an important period of our history show him to be also a statesman. You can not match him. You have not matched him. Go back to your old mouldy drivel about "rebels" "loyalty," and you will make your defeat only more overwhelming. The people of the United States, through the length and breadth of the Union, will show you that they will not put up with the bilious republican leaders who have never advanced beyond the year 1864, and who see no hope for office except in the generation of disunionism, hatred, and sectionalism. That party is the party of disunion which fails to recognize all sections of our country as equally American, equally true to the constitution and the laws.

THE CAMPAIGN

Weekly Sentinel.

The first number of the Campaign Weekly Sentinel will be issued Wednesday, July 7, and be continued each week until November 10.

Each issue will contain a complete summary of the important political news and opinions of the week, and a large amount of interesting information.

The democratic party has never been more determined or more of a unit than it is to-day, and every indication points to a brilliant victory in November. But to insure that victory it is necessary that every true friend of honest government should "put his shoulder to the wheel" and do his utmost to help the common cause.

The importance of keeping the people thoroughly informed in such a contest cannot be overestimated. In no way can this be done so effectually as by circulating among them a live newspaper of established reputation, which furnishes every week a fresh, full and accurate account of current political events in the state and country, and presents the issues of the day clearly and forcibly.

The campaign Sentinel will be found thoroughly alive and up to the mark in every respect, and we bespeak for it a large circulation. A copy should be placed in the hands of every democratic or doubtful voter in the state and to this end we invite the co-operation of all our friends and subscribers and of democratic committees throughout the state. If subscriptions cannot in every case be obtained, send the paper free. A little money spent in this way now will be much more beneficial and far reaching in its results than ten times the amount expended in some other way near the close of the campaign.

The terms are exceedingly low and within the reach of all:

Single copies for the campaign	[illegible]
Two copies	[illegible]
Five copies	[illegible]
Ten copies	[illegible]
Twenty-five copies	[illegible]

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

New York has been experiencing a season of intensely hot weather. Two hundred deaths from sunstroke were reported in six days....The annual boat race between Harvard and Yale, at New London, Ct., was won with ease by the latter....Hon. Gilbert De La Matyr, the well-known Indiana Greenback Congressman, has just been married to a widow at Friendship, N. J....Mrs. Chick, of Kennebunk, Me., held her only child, a boy about 8 years old, under water until he was drowned, and then attempted to drown herself.

During the progress of the Yale-Harvard boat-race, at New London, Ct., F. W Lincoln, President of the Boston and Albany railroad, and Mrs. Dr. William Appleton, of Boston, who were viewing the contest from a railroad car, were accidentally thrown from the platform and almost instantly killed.

Mary O'Connor, of Jersey City, murdered her three children by cutting their throats with a razor. The unfortunate woman was undoubtedly temporarily insane. She says she has been sick for a long time suffering from malaria, and has been unable to take care of her children, and she thought that by killing them they would go to heaven, and that there was no other cause for her killing them.

The death-rate of New York city is on the increase to an alarming extent. The number of deaths last week were 1,297, against 1,036 for the preceding week....George Ripley, the well-known New York journalist and author, has just died at the age of 78....An explanation of the Seawanhaka disaster, on Long Island sound, has probably been found. The boiler is of the locomotive pattern, having fifty small tubes through which the hot air and fire are drawn from the burning coals. In one of the tubes has been found an ugly rent, large enough for the insertion of a man's fist. It is believed that the whole pressure of the steam in the boiler was transferred by this rupture to the fire-box, sending the doors open and scattering the hot coals over the firemen's room, setting fire to the woodwork about the fire-room and sending the flames up to the main deck....At Philadelphia, on the 5th of July, a ferryboat ran down a row-boat and drowned Mrs. Kate Mahoy, aged 22, Robert Orr 15, Lizzie Orr 9, and Katie Orr 6.

Jacob Kuntz, of Homestead Station, N. J., went to the house of his son, where his wife resided, and forbade her going to a picnic. Upon her refusing, Jacob fatally shot her. He then went into the barn and killed himself. Kuntz and wife were both over 60 years of age....Lawrence Jerome, son of the wealthy Leonard W. Jerome, of New York, has been arrested on a charge of receiving $60,000 worth of stolen securities....The census returns for Vermont show such decrease of population that it is questionable whether under the new apportionment the State will have more than two Congressmen.

Col. Pelton, nephew of ex-Gov. Tilden, who achieved considerable notoriety through his connection with the cipher dispatches, died last week, at the Everett House, of heart disease....About thirty buildings, including all the banks, the Opera House, and the postoffice, at Tyrone, Pa., have been burned. The loss is estimated at $150,000; insurance, $30,000....Lee & Murdock's mill and storehouse at East Douglass, Mass., have been destroyed by fire. Loss, $130,000; partly covered by insurance.

THE WEST.

By the explosion of the boiler of a pleasure steamer on Lake Minnetonka, Minn., the engineer and pilot of the boat, and the head waiter and a guest at the hotel opposite were instantly killed, and seven persons were seriously injured....Gen. Grant left Galena on the 1st of July for the far West.

Wheat in southeastern and northern Minnesota has been more or less damaged by chinch bugs and wet weather.

Gen. Grant was treated at Kansas City to a national salute, bell-ringing and a long procession....There was a big celebration at Minneapolis, Minn., on the 3d inst., of the discovery of St. Anthony's falls by Father Hennepin. There was a procession over a mile long, composed of United States troops, militia and civic societies. The formal portion of the programme included a historical oration, a poem, and a dinner, eaten by several thousand people. The informal portion consisted of speeches by Secretary of War Ramsey, Gen. Sherman and Gen. Rosser, late of the Confederate cavalry....Information has been received at the Chicago Custom House that a cattle plague has broken out at Winnipeg, in Manitoba. The disease, which is said to be of foreign origin, is in the form of inflammatory fever, very infectious, and nearly as fatal as pleuro-pneumonia. The acreage under rye and barley has decreased since 1879, but the yield will be about the same. Clover has an increased acreage; the increase, however, is confined to the cotton-growing States and the Pacific coast. The condition of the crop is not good. Fruit of all kinds will be quite plentiful, much more so than for the previous year.

A Minnesota physician, Dr. Tanner, maintained that a man could live forty days on water alone, and to prove the correctness of his theory went to New York, and, under the watchful eyes of a committee of local doctors, started out to put it to the test. A telegram from that city on July 6 reports progress as follows: "Dr. Tanner at noon to-day closed the eighth day of his continuous fast. He has lost sixteen pounds in weight since the beginning, and now weighs 141½ pounds. For the past two days, however, he has lost only three-fourths of a pound daily. He spent most of his time to-day on his cot, and a great deal of the time lay prone upon his face and stomach. He did not sleep well last night, and was unable to-day to shake up his bed, and along toward to-night he became quite peevish and irritable. In the evening he took a walk, accompanied by his watchers.

The ninth day of Dr. Tanner's fast in New York was bulletined on the evening of July 7 as follows: At 11 a. m. his pulse was 96, and his temperature 98 8-10. His time was passed in short naps, bathing his head, rinsing his mouth, and talking to the doctors. He seemed strong and confident. Lying down about 3, he was very restless, and suddenly pitched his rubber pillow out into the middle of the floor. He then quietly fanned himself with a huge palm leaf. Throughout the day he called for water oftener than previously, and he caused wet cloths to be placed upon his head and hands. At 6:15 his temperature was 97½ and his pulse 80. About 8 he took a toy marble into his mouth to excite the salivary glands. He was pleasant, and even inclined to joke.

Robbie's Verse.

A young lady who resides in that part of Pennsylvania which is called the "Switzerland of America" has a Sunday-school class of rather bright boys, averaging between 7 and 9 years. Recently she requested each pupil to come on the following Sunday with some passage of scripture bearing upon love. The lads heeded the request, and in turn recited their verses bearing upon that popular topic, such as, "Love your enemies" "Little children, love one another," etc. The teacher said to the boy whose turn came last:

"Well, Robbie, what is your verse?"

Raising himself up, he responded:

"Song of Solomon, second chapter, fifth verse: 'Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples; for I am sick of love.'"

Now what could be done with that style of boy?

Poisons.

If a person swallows any poison whatever, or has fallen into convulsions from having overloaded the stomach, an instantaneous remedy, most efficient and applicable in a large number of cases, is a heaping teaspoonful of common salt, and as much ground mustard, stirred rapidly in a teacupful of water, warm or cold, and swallowed instantly. It is scarcely down before it begins to come up, bringing with it the remaining contents of the stomach, and lest there be any remnant of the poison, however small, let the white of an egg or a teaspoonful of strong coffee be swallowed as soon as the stomach is quiet, because these very common articles nullify a large number of virulent poisons.

A Quack's Success.

A medical writer tells this story of a celebrated English quack: He was once visited by an old acquaintance from the country, who addressed him as "Zam."

"I'm glad to see thee'st got on so vinely, Zam," said the rustic, "but how is't, man? Thee know'st thee never had no more brains nor a pumpkin."

Taking him to a window, the quack bade him count the passers-by. "How many have passed?" asked the quack, after a few minutes.

"Nointy, or mayhap a hundred."

"And how many wise men do you suppose were among this hundred?"

"Mayhap one."

"Well, all the rest are mine."

A TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

Adventure with a Monster Rattlesnake in a Mine.

[Tombstone (Arizona) Epitaph.]

Dr. Bartleson, of this city, had quite a thrilling experience last week. While at Secorro on business he thought he would take a look at the mines near town. The object of interest is the old mine—we have forgotten the name—worked ages ago for aught anyone now living knows, and which has two shafts, one recently reopened to a depth of forty-five feet, where drifts indicate the first level. No explorations beyond a few feet from the depth named, have been made, though it is evident that the two shafts mentioned are connected at this level. Desirous of a jaunt under ground, and at the same time expressing astonishment that none of the miners of the camp or owners of the mine had worked up sufficient curiosity to extend the discovery, the doctor was lowered into the shaft. Emerging from the bucket, a taper was lighted, and the drift along the vein entered upon. A chamber 10x12x8 was soon entered by crawling a distance on all fours, after an examination of which and the selection of some ores the tour of discovery was continued. To proceed it was again necessary to crawl, and the doctor once more assumed the infantile position of locomotion. An advance of a few feet had been made, when a cold, clammy substance was touched by the hand, and two bright, glistening orbs gradually rose in air and flashed back with intensified brightness the feeble rays of the taper. Almost instantly a hissing rattling sound startled the hearing, and the doctor realized that he had encountered a rattlesnake. To retreat was the work of a second, and the chamber just left was soon regained. Assuming an upright position, the doctor cast a hasty glance at the aperture from whence he had emerged, and lo! and behold, there approached his adversary, which, when seeing the disturber of his quiet, coiled himself for a spring. A look was sufficient to satisfy the doctor that the snake was one of the largest of his species and a determined foe. Immediate action was necessary. To retreat was to invite and hasten the attack, with the chances in favor of the snake. To take the aggressive, then, was the work of another second, and, picking up a chunk of ore, the doctor hurled it with all his might at the protruded, vibrating head of the snake just as he was in the act of springing. The exertion of throwing the ore extinguished the taper, and the horror of the then situation can well be imagined but never accurately described—the darkness, the dread uncertainty of the locality of the reptile; the torturing ignorance of the success or failure of the blow, the fear to move, all combined to intensify the hair-raising, chilling terror of the situation. To relight the taper was determined upon, though not without the realization of the dread fact that the snake would take advantage of the first ray of light and spring upon its foe. With fear and trembling the doctor eagerly followed the advancing rays of the taper as they lit up the chamber, and his feelings of relief and joy can well be imagined as he saw stretched before him, not three feet distant, the stunned body of the snake—the aim with the rock had been a success. At this time the doctor bethought himself of his revolver, and, placing it near the reptile's head, effectually dispatched him. The snake was six feet in length, very large around, and numbered nineteen rattles. The doctor had explored sufficiently, and regained the surface as soon as possible. We imagine his hair is a shade grayer than before going to Secorro.

The Danger of Genius in Women.

Genius, when accompanied by right principles and self-control, is a more dangerous quality in a woman than a man. Nothing shows this more plainly than the life of Lady Caroline Lamb. No one was more fully alive to her faults than she was herself. When the Hon. William Lamb, then Lord Melbourne, laid his heart and fortune at her feet, she refused him, saying that she was afraid that her violent temper would wreck their happiness. Again, however, he proposed, and this time, unfortunately for herself, he was accepted. Lady Caroline's fear that she could not control her temper was by no means groundless. At the marriage ceremony she was seized with a fit of passion, and she thus afterward described her behavior: "I stormed at the Bishop, tore my valuable dress to pieces, and was carried nearly insensible to the carriage which was to convey me forever from my home." Lady Caroline was certainly at times not quite sane. Lord Melbourne made her a far better husband than most men would have done; and though at last he was obliged to separate from her he still retained a portion of his old affection.

Without undervaluing intellect, we think that no one will be inclined to deny that both in men and women the qualities of the heart are far more important than those of the head, and we cannot do better than conclude with the following lines of the late Canon Kingsley, addressed to young girls, and which bear closely on this subject:

> Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever;
> Do noble things, not dream them all day long;
> So making life, death and that vast forever,
> One grand, sweet song.

Pioneer Incidents.

A gentleman whose parents were among the early settlers of Clay county, Missouri, says that in 1824 there were only three men in the whole county who owned a suit of broadcloth. The usual dress was made from jeans and linsey, dyed with hickory bark. An incident occurred about that time which illustrates the simple habits of the people:

A young man, by serving in the United States army, had laid up some money. He came to a town in the county dressed in a suit of blue broadcloth. On his head he wore a fur cap made by himself. For days he was the most noticed man in the town—because he wore "store clothes."

In summer, it was usual for women, as well as for boys and girls, to go barefoot. Even those young ladies who would wear shoes were in the habit of wearing, when going "out," a pair of coarse shoes, and carrying their "Sunday shoes" in the pocket. Just before arriving at the place they started for, the coarse shoes would be taken off and the "Sunday shoes" put on.

In time this simple mode of dress came to be associated with piety. If a person was a church-member and wore a more stylish dress than the other people, the act would beget public criticism.

A gentleman of education who, though not a member of any church, was an upright man, once attended church dressed in a suit of broadcloth. The preacher, being old-fashioned and narrow-minded, associated broadcloth with those pomps and vanities which a Christian should renounce. During the sermon he referred to the gentleman as the smooth-faced young man whose fine apparel was contrary to the spirit of the gospel. The gentleman, however, listened with an appearance of respect to the criticism, knowing that the preacher was honest, if not wise.—Youth's Companion.

Strange Food.

Some score or so of contributors to a French sporting journal dined one day upon the ham and heart of a lion, killed by Constant Cheret in Algeria. The flesh of the lion was found to be particularly firm and close-grained, like that of a horse, but, although pronounced palatable, it only achieved what is termed a success d'estime, while the heart, skillfully prepared with truffles, was unanimously voted tough and indigestible. In fact, the French journalists were not much better pleased with their fare than was Bruce, the traveler, when the guest of the Arab tribe of Welled Sidi Boojanim, "the sons of the fathers of the flocks," bound by vow to eat lion's flesh once every day; for the traveler found male lion meat lean, tough and musky in flavor, lioness meat a trifle fatter and more palatable, and whelp flesh the nastiest of the three.

Mindful that an unlooked-for pleasure is thrice welcome, Frank Buckland did not advise his guests on a certain occasion that they were about to enlarge their gastronomic experiences, but, when the soup had been disposed of, asked a famous gourmand sitting near him how he liked it.

"Very well, indeed," was the answer. "Turtle, is it not? I only ask because I did not find any green fat."

Buckland shook his head.

"I fancied it had a somewhat musky taste—peculiar, but not at all unpleasant," remarked his neighbor.

"All alligators have," replied the host; "the cayman, especially—the fellow I dissected this morning, and which you have just been discussing."

Half a dozen of the suddenly-enlightened diners suddenly started to their feet, two or three slunk from the room, and the rest of the meal was enjoyed by only a portion of the original company.

"See what imagination is," said Buckland. "Had I told them it was turtle, or terrapin, or birds'-nest soup, or the gluten of a fish from the maw of a sea-bird, they would have pronounced it excellent, and their digestion would have been none the worse. I tell them that it is alligator soup, and their gorges rise at as good a dish as ever a man need have!"

Forewarned, and, therefore, forearmed, were the gentlemen who lunched on octopus at the Brighton Aquarium, trying it in turn boiled, broiled and cold. They found it excellent eating, resembling skate, but not so tender as might be. The verdict would probably have been still more favorable had the octopus been boiled first and then roasted, as is the way in Corsica, where the monster is esteemed a great delicacy.

The Beats of the Pulse.

By means of a little instrument called the sphygmograph, the pulse-beats may be accurately and permanently recorded. And now Dr. B. W. Richardson, LL.D., F. R. S., of London, by adding a microphone to a sphygmograph, has constructed a sphygmophone, by which the pulse-beat may be heard forty feet away.

It seems that the sounds heard correspond to those of the heart, and are three in number, one long and two short, resembling the words "bother it." The three sounds are caused, the first by contraction of the ventricle, as it throws the blood into the aorta, and the other two by the closing of the valve behind it and the recoil of the arterial column, as the contraction (systole) is finished.

It is found that the peculiar sounds of the heart, when diseased, and by which the physician's ear ascertains its condition, have their corresponding sounds at the pulse. As, for instance, those heard where there is a defective valve that allows the blood, which should be thrown forward, to regurgitate into the chamber behind.

Another interesting fact appears, viz., that a person's pulse is quickened by his laughter, the sound sometimes seeming almost like an echo of the laugh. Perhaps this may help to explain the hygienic value of a hearty laugh to one in a depressed and melancholic condition.

In severe palpitation the sounds are all lost in a sort of loud whirr as from a revolving wheel.

When the pulse-beats are over ninety a minute, there is, together with the ordinary sounds, a continuous sound resembling what is heard when a shell is held to the ear—possibly caused by the friction of the blood against the walls of the artery.

It is thought that the sphygmophone may be very useful in detecting minute and obscure pulsations in different parts of the body.—Youth's Companion.

A Lamentable Lot.

The woman who cannot grow old is jealous of her own children, and keeps aloof from them. She makes love while her son is making love. She beams and lowers her voice and steps out as gracefully as she can, and she is not unwilling that her figure should be compared with the figure of her son's lady acquaintances. Her morals are irreproachable. She never did a wrong; but that is not the fault of her dear, garrulous husband, who never knew how to make love to her. She wishes that some young fellow would make love to her, but she seldom finds him. When she does, her simpering folly calls blushes to the cheeks of her children, while the young man laughs at her.

Sacred Music.

Hymn singing is not always appropriate to occasions, and leaders often make singular selections. A minister preached a solemn sermon on the judgment, and gave out at the close:

> That awful day will surely come,

which the choir sang to the lively air of "Coronation." "Brother," said the preacher to the chorister in the vestibule, "why didn't you sing 'Yankee Doodle?'"

At an immersion baptism on the bank of a river, as each candidate, male or female, emerged dripping from the water, the people interjected the favorite revivalish chorus:

> They look like men in uniform.
> They look like men of war.

At a protracted meeting one of the hardest families in the neighborhood, by name Ransom, were persuaded to go to the front as subjects for prayer. The rejoicing people shouted lustily in prospect of half-a-dozen much-needed conversions:

> The year of jubilee has come;
> Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.

This made old Ransom mad. He took it as a personal insult, got up from his knees and took his bedraggled better-half by the arm, saying aloud, "Come on, old woman, they don't want the like of us here; come on, boys and gals!" and led the whole tribe out of church in flaming dudgeon.

An English leader set the advent hymn "Christ the Lord is risen to-day—hallelujah!" to the Tyrolese waltz, and a Southern camp-meeting Christian sung "When I Can Read My Title Clear" to the minstrel melody "Wait for the wagon, and we'll all take a ride!"—Troy Times.

Wild Pigeons' Nests.

One nesting of wild pigeons is about the same as another, and the first nest you come to like the million others in the vicinity. When these migratory birds have mated, decided where to settle and staked off their claim, they proceed to construct about the slightest nest that will hold an egg and a bird. "Three sticks and a feather" constitute about the material, according to one authority. The feather is often wanting, but a few more sticks are generally added. The nest is placed in the crotch of a tree, on two forked branches, or anywhere else in the tree where suitable support can be found. Cedar trees along the river bottoms seem to be preferred, but when the nestings are large beech and other trees are occupied. From half-a-dozen to fifty or sixty nests are built in a tree, and only one egg is laid in each nest.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

President Hayes visited recently the house in Branford, Ct., built by his great-grandfather, Ezekiel, 150 years ago.

It is charged by counsel for the prosecution in the Currin case at Marshall, Texas, that at least one of the jurors who brought in the verdict of acquittal was bribed.

The Campbellite sect, to which Gen. Garfield belongs, has 328,000 members in the United States. It is said that nine United States Senators and a good many Representatives are members of it.

A boy at Pittsburgh, Pa., named Oakins, saved a man named Finnan from drowning. As soon as the latter recovered from the effects of his adventure he deeded the lad a half interest in two houses and lots at McKeesport.

Canadians are not a little annoyed at the large emigration from the Dominion to the United States. It is stated that 57,000 Canadians have left Ontario during the last eight months, and that nearly all of them have located permanently this side the line. This class, too, it is said, is made up of the best of farmers and mechanics, who are dissatisfied with the Government and the slow progress and the steady increase of the public debt in Canada.

The British people move slowly in all matters involving encroachment upon long-established customs. They could not accept Mr. Stevenson's resolution, as introduced in the House, looking to the closing of public-houses on Sunday in England; but adopted an amendment impressing the opinion that provision should be made for the sale, during limited hours, of malt liquors, for consumption at home. The Englishman could no more dispense with his pint of beer than the German with his lager.

A Polish periodical, which numbers among its contributors some of the most eminent exiles who owe their banishment from their native country to their participation in the insurrection of 1863-'4, has just published some interesting statistics connected with the merciless repression of the movement in the Czar's lieutenants. From this date it appears that within the space of two years 83,434 Poles were condemned to perpetual expatriation, and transported to Siberia or to other outlying provinces of the Russian empire.

An extraordinary case of gravel is reported from West Jefferson, Ohio. A widow lady named Mrs. Thompson died, and the attending physicians were unable to agree as to the cause of death. Some attributed it to consumption and others to cancer or ulceration of the stomach. The disagreeing doctors held a post-mortem examination, and found in the bladder 337 grains of gravel, the smallest of which were as large as peas. The case is a little remarkable on account of the great number of stones and the peculiar character of the symptoms, which could so baffle the physicians in diagnosing the case.

A brilliant meteor is described in a recent telegram from Macon, Ga.: A meteor as large as a barrel, starting from the zenith, plunged down the northeastern sky, and exploded with a report that reverberated for thirty seconds and shook the earth at this point. The meteor was about five seconds falling, during which time the city was lit up as by an electric light. Much excitement prevailed in the negro quarters. The inhabitants rushed into their houses, closed the doors, and filled the air with their screams and prayers. The time between the disappearance of the meteor and the report was about fifteen minutes.

A movement, originated by Sir Andrew Galt and a few enthusiasts, is on foot for a British emigration scheme on a gigantic scale. The idea is a combination of the leading classes, to help out, with aid from the state, emigration to British colonies, for it is noted with alarm that those now seeking elbow-room outside the strained and crowded limits of England, go to swell the growth and greatness of the United States, instead of aiding to build up the colonies. In fifteen years, out of 2,000,000 of people who left the United Kingdom for lands beyond the sea, only 250,000 went to Canada, seven out of every eight (1,750,000) going to the United States.

John Steele, the "Coal Oil Johnny" whose astounding prodigality made him notorious throughout the country, is now a well-behaved and reasonably prosperous farmer at Franklin, Pa. It was in 1864, when he was 21, that the striking of oil on a farm that he had inherited began to yield him an income of $3,000 a day. This wealth turned his foolish head, and he began to spend the money in the most reckless and grotesque manner. He squandered all his property in three years. His wife had managed to get hold of $75,000, but that was lost in a bank failure. Steele gradually came to his senses, went to work at his old occupation of a teamster, next became a railroad baggage master, and slowly saved enough money to buy the farm on which he now lives.

The Emperor of Brazil is still indulging that fondness for material progress which caused him to express so much admiration for this country when visiting here. He has just given the last stroke to the new Rio Janeiro water works, letting into the city water from streams forty miles away, carried through vast intervening reservoirs to Rio Janeiro by two 32-inch mains; and he has also given the first stroke to a new and important railroad. These things, however, cost money, as the Khedive of Egypt found out. Brazil's finances show a prospective deficit for the new fiscal year, even exclusive of the $6,000,000 desired for public works. It is believed that she must continue for a while to add eight or ten millions a year to her debt, which now, including outstanding obligations in paper currency, is about 814,000,000 milreis, or about $407,000,000. It has been increased by about $17,000,000 the past year.

There is not another roll of contributors to any publication in Europe like the contributors to the Edinburgh Review. It takes in almost every name that is distinguished in statesmanship, in eloquence and learning for a couple of generations. It includes a Prime Minister, Lord John Russell; a Chancellor, Lord Brougham; a Lord Chief Justice, Lord Denman; two Chancellors of the Exchequer, Mr. Spring Rice and Sir G. C. Lewis; two or three Lords of Session and puisne Judges on the English bench; a Secretary of War, Macauley; a Secretary of State for the Colonies, Lord Lytton; metaphysicians like Sir William Hamilton; historians like Henry Hallam, Carlyle and Napier; political economists like John Stuart Mill and McCulloch; theologians like Henry Rogers and Dean Milman; almost all the poets who were invited to dine with Apollo—Tom Campbell, Tom Moore and Samuel Rogers; essayists like Sir James Stephen and Hazlett, and it was only by accident that Charles Dickens was not enrolled among the contributors, with the greatest of his rivals and contemporaries, W. M. Thackeray.

A strange story of the hardships of Russian captivity is related by a German engineer named Neumeyer. He was busily engaged in superintending the construction of a new railway in the South of Russia, when he saw himself suddenly surrounded by a body of police and made prisoner. On being shown a photograph portrait, he innocently exclaimed: "Where have you got this picture from? I have never had my likeness taken." This extraordinary resemblance of his to Louis Hartmann, or rather Wolkoff (the alleged author of the Moscow attempt on the Emperor's life), and a scar on his right hand, brought poor Neumeyer into a serious predicament. He was put in chains, taken to Moscow, submitted to a wearisome investigation, then dragged across the country on foot to Warsaw, with no nourishment other than bread, cabbage and spoiled fish on a journey of forty-four days. After spending about six weeks more in prison on bread and water, surrounded by a low set of criminals awaiting their transportation to Siberia, he succeeded in forwarding a letter to the Governor General of Polade, whose brother had formerly employed Neumeyer on his estates in Esthonia. Thanks to Count Kotzebue's intercession, Count Loris Melikoff allowed the poor victim to return to Germany in a penniless condition, covered with vermin, and wearing the same clothes in which he had been seized, and which had never been washed.

Dainty Eaters.

A menagerie elephant eats about one hundred pounds of the best timothy hay every twenty-four hours. Giraffes, camels, zebras and deer are also hay-eating animals, but are not so particular in reference to its quality as the elephant. Sea-lions have to be fed on fish, usually fresh and salt mackerel, each animal taking twelve to fifteen each meal twice a day, and consuming altogether one hundred pounds of fish daily. Next in point of delicate eaters come the polar bears, whose regular diet is bread soaked in milk, with fish now and then for a change. The black bears are also given bread, one hundred pounds being used daily. Vegetables of almost every sort are fed liberally to the different animals — cabbage, potatoes, carrots, onions and turnips. The elephants are great cabbage eaters, in addition to their standard diet, hay. The giraffes, singularly enough, are great onion eaters, while the deer and goats, and animals of the cow species, eat carrots and turnips and potatoes. Bran and oats and corn are also liberally distributed—mostly once or twice a week—among the hay eating animals. But the orang-outang is the most dainty feeder of all, living on bread and honey, beef and potatoes—a diet alarmingly like that of humanity.

Growth of Cleveland.

In 1870 the population of the city was 92,824, and it was estimated that the population for this year would reach 175,322, but the census reports, for this year, show a population of 157,946. The rate of increase from 1860 to 1870 was 115 per cent., and that for the ten years just passed is 70 per cent., showing that the increase from 1860 to 1870 was much larger than the increase from 1870 to 1880.—Leader, June 19.

FARM NOTES.

Breeding draught horses pays large profits to Western farmers, and they are at present the most profitable stock of any kind that can be raised.

The introduction of white grapes, says a writer in Colman's Rural World, has proven a great blow to grape-loving birds, for I have never yet observed one that was smart enough to discover that a white grape was good for eating.

War! war! war upon weeds! The farmer's success is the reward of constant vigilance. The fertile soil of the West, while yielding immense crops of grain, yields weeds in the same proportion. But, taken in time, on our mellow soil, the weeds are easily destroyed.—Exchange.

The New England Farmer has much faith in the future of the sugar industry in this country, but trembles for the lazy and shiftless farmers who have invested in the enterprise with high hopes of success, but without a due appreciation of the requirements necessary for securing profitable crops of beet roots.

The Farm and Fireside, of Springfield, Ohio, has this to say about these: "Take two wooden boxes, one three inches larger in every way than the other. Line the inside box with zinc. Fill the space surrounding it with dry sawdust, or, better, with fine charcoal. Let the cover to the inside box be covered with a piece of woolen blanket. Let a small piece of pipe pass from the bottom of the inner box down through the bottom of the lower box, so as to allow the water from the melted ice to flow off. This is just as good as many of the patent ice chests at less than one-fourth the cost.

Prof. Arnold says: "The assertion is often made, and many people believe, that water washes out the flavor of the butter; but it only cleanses the butter of the buttermilk, sugar and milk acid which may adhere to it, just as clarifying sugar removes from it the foreign matters which modify its true flavor. The flavor of butter consists of fatty matters, which do not combine with water, therefore cannot be washed away by it. The effect of washing upon the keeping quality of butter depends upon the purity of the water with which the washing is done. If the water contains no foreign matter that will affect the butter, it will keep better for washing the buttermilk out than by kneading it out."

The growth of trees and shrubs is made the first half of the season; after that the time is occupied in maturing the wood. The growth, therefore, should be pushed from the start, and this is done by manuring and cultivation; the latter is an aid to the former, and discontinued in time to give chance for maturing. Begin early, and work the ground for a large space, as the roots extend far. To stir or manure the ground only, as is so common, is of little or no benefit. The entire space between raspberries and blackberries should be gone over, and lightly, so as not to disturb the roots, which usually are near the surface. Treat currants, gooseberries, grapevines, young trees, etc., in the same way, using manure if needed, and to the amount required in connection with cultivation, applying it early, so as to get the full benefit. Barn manure is in general preferable, as it also serves to some extent as a mulch.

We sow our grain too thick, just as we set our trees and shrubs and plant our corn too close. With land made mellow and level, and the seed distributed evenly and properly covered, half the quantity now used is a great abundance. The drill is a convincing proof of this. Here is the all-important condition of uniform covering present, and as all the seed grows light seeding is necessary if the seed is sound and undamaged. More attention to the seed is, therefore, called for, and in securing this greater cleanliness will follow. Our grain will eventually all be drilled in, thus lessening the seed to about one-half. Even this will be reduced, for we sow too thick with the drill. Where the land is well prepared, as it should be, and the seed is all sound, broadcasting will admit of a reduction of nearly one-half, and the crop will be better. There will be larger straw, a larger and fuller head, and less disposition to lodge. More labor should be bestowed upon the seed bed, which enriches it, as well as improves it otherwise, and less seed sown, passing it first through the fanning-mill with a full wind on, as the light or imperfect seed makes a feeble growth.

Many farmers are very stingy in the matter of supplying animals with salt. They seem to think that the money invested for animals is virtually thrown away, and they study how to avoid this loss as far as possible. Occasionally a farmer will find that some sheep will live six months without eating salt, and he loses no time in making his discovery known to the world. A large proportion of farmers furnish salt to their animals but once a week. On these occasions they eat so much of it that they feel uncomfortable during the following day. Stock of all kinds should have salt constantly within their reach, whether they are in the yard or pasture. It is very easy to keep a supply of salt in an open box in a shed where cattle can have free access to it. It requires but little ingenuity to erect a salt-box in a pasture so that its contents will not be wasted. All that is required is a hanging roof, that can be moved by the heads of cattle and sheep. When cattle have a supply of salt always within reach they will never eat so much at any time as to render them uncomfortable. Salt is not a luxury, but a necessity, and it should be supplied without stint. Animals know better than their owners do how often they require salt. Any stock-owner would object to being allowed to taste salt but once a week.

French Palaces.

The "Direction des Batiments Civils et des Palais Nationaux" has lately had the chief palaces and chateaux formerly occupied by the crown valued, and the estimate has been made public. The Palais de Versailles, with its park and dependencies, comes first, being valued at 112,000,000 francs. The Luxembourg, with its immensely valuable art collections, is set down at 60,000,000 francs. The beautiful Chateau of Fontainbleau is valued at 30,000,000 francs. The Palais de Trianon, the special favorite of Queen Marie Antoinette, is placed at 18,500,000 francs, and the Chateau of Compiegne at 18,000,000 francs. The Palais Royal and the Elysee are each estimated at 10,000,000 francs. The Palais de St. Cloud, even in its present defaced condition, is valued at 4,750,000 francs, and the Chateau of Rambouillet at 3,045,000 francs.—Swiss Times.

Jonathan Edwards.

It is impossible that people of ordinary sensibilities should have listened to his torturing discourses without becoming at last sick of hearing of infinite horrors and endless agonies. It came very hard to kind-hearted persons to believe that the least sin exposed a creature God had made to such exorbitant penalties. Edwards' whole system had too much of the character of the savage people by whom the wilderness had so recently been tenanted. There was revenge—"revenging justice" was what he called it—insatiable, exhausting its ingenuity in contriving the most exquisite torments; there was the hereditary hatred glaring on the babe in its cradle; there were the suffering wretch and the pleased and shouting lookers-on. Every natural grace of disposition; all that had once charmed in the sweet ingenuousness of youth, in the laughing gayety of childhood, in the winning helplessness of infancy; every virtue that Plato had dreamed of, every character that Plutarch had drawn—all were branded with the hot iron, which left the blackened inscription upon them, signifying that they were accursed of God—the damning word nature.

There is no sufficient reason for attacking the motives of a man so saintly in life, so holy in aspirations, so meek, so laborious, so thoroughly in earnest in the work to which his life was given. But, after long smothering in the sulphurous atmosphere of his thought, one cannot help asking, Was this or anything like this—is this or anything like this—the accepted belief of any considerable part of Protestantism? If so, we must say with Bacon: "It were better to have no opinion of God at all than such an opinion as is unworthy of Him." A "natural man" is better than an unnatural theologian. It is a less violence to our nature to deify protoplasm than it is to diabolize the Deity.—Dr O. W. Holmes, in International Review.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

A table-spoonful of salt will weigh about one ounce.

Cool rain-water and soda will remove machine grease from washable fabrics.

Cut bread fine for filling for fowls; this is better than to crumble it. No sogginess.

Large holes in a loaf of bread are proof of a careless cook. The kneading has been slighted.

Milk-cans or pans not kept clean are liable to impart to the milk a dangerous fermentive poison.

To clean kettles easily, pour a little hot water into them and put a cover on; the steam will soften the dirt so that it may be easily removed.

To keep seeds from the depredations of mice, mix some pieces of camphor with them. Camphor placed in trunks or drawers will prevent mice from doing them injury.

Papered walls are cleaned by being wiped down with a flannel cloth tied over a broom or brush. Then cut off a thick piece of stale bread with the crust on and rub them down with this. Begin at the top and go straight down.

Chocolate Cookies.—Take the white of six eggs, half a pound of sugar, half a pound of grated chocolate, five ounces of flour; first stir the whites of the eggs and the sugar together, then add the chocolate, and lastly the flour; drop by the spoonful on greased tins, and bake in a moderate oven.

Brandy Cherries.—Choose fine, firm fruit, wash, pick the stems off, stick the cherries in two or three places with a needle; pour over them a sirup made by boiling a pound of sugar (to every pound of cherries) in a gill of water; add a pint of brandy for every four pounds of sugar; pour the sirup hot over the cherries; cork and tie up carefully when cold. They will be fit to eat in a week, and will keep for an indefinite time.

Raspberry Vinegar.—Pick and wash five pounds of raspberries and pour over them a gallon of the best white wine vinegar; let it stand twenty-four hours, then strain through a flannel jelly-bag and put this liquor over five pounds more of raspberries. Let it stand again a day and night. Strain a second time through a flannel bag, and add ten pounds of lump sugar. Put in a three-gallon stone jar; set the jar in a pot of hot water and let it simmer for twenty minutes, skimming any froth that may arise. When perfectly cold bottle and cork carefully. Keep in a cool place during the summer.

Salt-and-Water Cucumbers.—Put fifty freshly-pickled cucumbers in a stone jar, separating each layer with fresh grape leaves, and a sprig of sweet fennel. Pour over them a pickle made by boiling a pint and a half of salt in a gallon of water, and a table-spoonful of cayenne pepper; only let it come to a boil; have it perfectly cold before putting it over the cucumbers; cover well with grape leaves; put a clean piece of light wood and a brick on top to keep the cucumbers down; they will ferment, be slightly acid, and be ready for use in three weeks. This is a Holland recipe.

The Human Figure.

The proportions of the human figure are six times the length of the feet. Whether the form is slender or plump, the rule holds good, any deviation from it is a departure from the highest beauty in proportion.

The Greeks make all their statues according to this rule. The face, from the highest point of the forehead, where the hair begins, to the chin, is one-tenth of the whole stature. The hand, from the wrist to the middle finger, is the same. From the top of the chest to the highest point of the forehead, is a seventh. If the face, from the roots of the chin, be divided into three equal parts, the first division determines the place where the eyebrows meet, and the second the nostrils. The height, from the feet to the top of the head, is the distance from the extremity of the fingers when the arms are extended.

INDIANA NEWS.

Fifty of the seventy deaths reported in Indianapolis for the first half of June were of children under 5 years of age.

Cholera infantum is prevailing in Jeffersonville, and can almost be called epidemic. Quite a number died last week.

Rev. W. R. Halstead, President, and Prof. Ogg, Vice President, of DePauw Female College at New Albany, have resigned.

The remains of the late Gen. Laz. Noble have been brought from Alpine, Col., where he died last November, and interred at Vincennes.

In a fracas near Mount Vernon, a stray shot from the pistol of Nat Monroe hit a young lady, also named Monroe, inflicting a probably fatal wound.

The daughter of a farmer named Taylor, living ten miles south of Terre Haute, aged 10 years, was thrown from a horse and instantly killed.

Judge W. A. Woods, was elected a Trustee of Wabash College, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Samuel B. Gookins, of Terre Haute.

The wife of His Excellency Governor J. D. Williams, residing about sixteen miles east of Vincennes, died, one day last week, after a lingering illness resulting from a fall some months since.

At a picnic in the northern part of Crawford county, James Murphy and William McBurnie, who had been partners in a saw-mill, met and renewed an old quarrel, and Mr. Burnie was shot dead.

Work on the new State House at Indianapolis has now advanced so far that the Commissioners will soon be able to name the day of laying the corner-stone. The ceremonies will probably be held during August.

The recorded movement of cars through Indianapolis last week shows a total of 17,857, of which 13,140 were loaded. These would make a train reaching from Indianapolis to New York, not including the locomotives necessary to move it.

There will be a general meeting of the Morton Monument Association, at Indianapolis, Sept. 1, to pass upon all designs, models or suggestions that may be presented by the various sculptors competing for the contract to erect the statue of the late Senator Morton.

Rev. E. G. Wood, D. D., of the Southeastern Indiana Conference, died at his residence at Moore's Hill, a few days ago. Dr. Wood was one of the ablest ministers in his denomination in the State, and was for more than fifty years an efficient preacher of the gospel in Indiana.

About $40,000 has been received into the endowment fund of Indiana Asbury University during the past year, and money that had been invested in railroad stocks which had depreciated in value so that it brought no income has, during the year, risen until it is at par, and will now make its regular dividends.

A young lady of Terre Haute was taken ill, and after being nearly restored to health was attacked by the most torturing pains in her limbs, which were not subdued until after six weeks of suffering. At the end of that time she was able to be removed from her bed to a chair, when the astonishing discovery was made that she had grown one foot and a half.

James A. Stretch, one of the most prominent and influential citizens of Grant county, died at Marion last week, of rheumatic troubles. He had held the office of Justice different terms, extending over a period of thirty years. He was Captain in the Fifth Indiana Cavalry in the late war, and editor of the first newspaper printed in the county. His age was about 60 years.

A restraining order has been issued in the Circuit Court at Evansville against Rev. George Chainey, to prohibit his preaching in the Church of the Unity, and to perpetually enjoin him and his adherents from appropriating said church to the furtherance and advancement of atheism and infidelity, and to protect all who adhere to the Unitarian church and to the original constitution of the same.

In the breach of promise suit of Elizabeth McPherson against John Warble, for $10,000, at Shelbyville, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. Considerable interest was taken in the case, owing to the ages of the parties, both being on the shady side of life and rather too old to be figuring in an affair of the heart.

Kirk Bundy, a well-to-do farmer of Posey county, had discharged one Phœnix, a hired man, whose attentions to his daughter were unpleasant to her, and let Phœnix have the use of a gun, which a little later he heard fired in some woods not far from the house. Next morning the bodies of Phœnix and the girl were found in the path leading to her grandmother's house, where Bundy supposed his daughter had staid over night. The fiend encountered her on the way home, and shot her through the heart.

A lad named Bailey was struck by lightning and instantly killed, near Economy, while retreating from the harvest-field with his father before a storm. The father was almost beside him. The work of death was so quick and silent that he did not know but the boy was following behind him, until he reached the door-yard and was told by persons who had seen the boy fall with the flash from the house. He returned to the field and found his son lying in the stubble, with nothing but a faint red line from his ear to his shoulder to mark the work of the deadly fluid.

Census Returns.

The census will show Knightstown to have a population of about 1,760, or an increase of a little over 100 in ten years.

The census returns give Kendallville a population of about 2,600, Waterloo 1,900, Auburn 1,600, Butler 1,200, Lagrange 1,400, Albion 1,000, and Ligonier 2,005.

The present population of Fort Wayne (official) is 25,957, against 17,718 at the last census (1870), an increase of 8,239 in ten years, or about 46.5 per cent.

South Bend is pleased with a census enumeration of a little over 12,000.

Richmond has 17,000 population.

The Supervisor of Census reports that Indianapolis has a population of 75,031, being an increase of about 50 per cent. in the past ten years. This is fully 25,000 less than was claimed. The fact is also developed that the death-rate is alarmingly large.

Nothing less than 25,000 would be listened to in Lafayette. The census men have finished, and enough is known to show that Lafayette will have to drop almost if not quite 9,000 from her expectations. There has been but a very small increase. Ten years ago so great was the disappointment at the figures that the City Council ordered, at city expense, a retaking of the census. The result was that the last report made it less than the first; so we are not likely to have a repetition of that trick.

The census enumerators for Richmond and vicinity have finished the canvass and find that there are over 17,000 people in the city and suburbs, fully 1,000 more than had been claimed for it. In the First ward they found a man, Father Janhoff, who is 106 years old, and in good health, with a prospect of living many years. The register of his birth and enlistment under Napoleon the First, and various other records, go to prove that his statements and those of his children, concerning his age, are correct.

The annual revenue of the imperial family of Russia is $12,500,000. They give, in annual charities, $2,500,000.

The Indians are reaping a rich harvest in the vicinity of Quileute, W. T., by catching fur seals. The profit of one day's work frequently reaches $20. The skins are worth from $8 to $10 each, according to size and quality.

A little girl visiting friends at Melrose Highlands, near Boston, while playing in the barn, fell from the haymow into a stall, and impaled herself upon the horn of a cow, the horn passing through her cheek into her mouth. Luckily the cow was gentle, and the little sufferer, who was only 5 years old, was released without further injury.

One of the richest and most famous monasteries in Italy is that of Monte Casino, on the line of railway between Rome and Naples; it was founded in 1629, and has continuously existed ever since. Its library is wonderfully rich in written and printed documents, and the rents of the domain are adequate to maintain the institution. Its abolition and confiscation are now urged by the Italian Radicals.

Green, the celebrated detective sergeant of the London city police force, is dead. He was notable as the hero of one of those extraordinary chases after criminals which occur more frequently in sensational novels than in real life. Last year a defaulting bank manager absconded, and Green was put on his track. Passe Partout, in Jules Verne's "Round the World in Ninety Days," had scarcely a more abnormal experience of a man hunt, for the pursuit was continued through half a score of countries, and occupied six or eight months. In the end the bank manager was run to ground at Buenos Ayres, and arrested, but he succeeded in obtaining a warrant against the officer for an attempt to kidnap him, and but for the British Consul matters would have gone hard with Green, who was forced to return without his man.

Church Towers.

The towers of Cologne Cathedral are now the highest in the world, the height they have attained being 5 feet higher than the tower of St. Nicholas' Church in Hamburg, which has hitherto been the highest edifice. Ultimately they will be 51 feet 10 inches higher. The Cologne Gazette gives the following as the heights of the chief high buildings in the world: Towers of Cologne Cathedral, 524 feet 11 inches from the pavement of the cloisters, or 515 feet 1 inch from the floor of the church; tower of St. Nicholas, at Hamburg, 473 feet 1 inch; cupola of St. Peter's, Rome, 469 feet 2 inches; cathedral spire at Strasburg, 465 feet 11 inches; Pyramid of Cheops, 449 feet 5 inches; tower of St. Stephen's, Vienna, 443 feet 10 inches; tower of St. Martin's, Landshut, 434 feet 8 inches; cathedral spire at Freiburg, 410 feet 1 inch; cathedral of Antwerp, 404 feet 10 inches; cathedral of Florence, 390 feet 5 inches; St. Paul's, London, 365 feet 1 inch; ridge tiles of Cologne Cathedral, 360 feet 8 inches; cathedral tower at Magdeburg, 339 feet 11 inches; tower of the new Votive Church at Vienna, 314 feet 11 inches; tower of the Rath-haus at Berlin, 288 feet 8 inches; towers of Notre Dame, at Paris, 232 feet 11 inches.

Republican papers insist that Garfield was prominent all the time as a probable nominee for president, and that he was not, therefore, a dark horse. They can't gainsay the fact that he has a dark record, though.

The noblest Roman of them all is Thomas A. Hendricks. He frankly writes that he has no grievance by reason of the action of the Cincinnati convention; that none of the delegates who were impressed so persistently by the New York delegation with the idea that he could not carry that state should have thought of voting for him if they believed such to be the fact, and that by proper effort Hancock and English will sweep Indiana. No pouting about Thomas A.! The cause, in preference to the man, is his doctrine. And his motto now is "Up guards and at them,"—that is, at DeGolyer and his followers.

Garfield Consents.

It is actually so. Yes, Garfield consents. Nominated in convention on the 8th of June last, where he was himself a member, and after having alternatively taffied, and ogled, and posed, before the delegates to gain their favor and ingratiate himself into their sweet wills, with a view to pave the way for the expected emergency;—after having, to say the least, very equivocally paltered in a double sense with the interests of the friend he was in honor bound to serve to the uttermost, and finally, himself taking eagerly away with him, to the sequestered shades of classic Mentor, the coveted honor, he has been there pondering and brooding for the solemn period of five weeks, and at length comes forth with the momentous announcement that he accepts—yes, actually accepts—the nomination!

The letter might be said to be one of glittering generalities, were it not for the fact that there is—no glitter. He is very grateful for all the confidence—using the familiar colloquial phrase of the Beecher litterateur—that the nomination implies. He cordially endorses something he calls a platform. He is on record, he says, on most of the questions embraced in it. He does not say that he proposes to live up to that record, however, and takes good care not to say that he asks an endorsement of it. On the contrary, the pliant sail is attempted to be dexterously shifted to suit the prevailing or the passing breeze. Conceding that, under the constitution of the United States, there are rights reserved to the people and to the states respectively, which should be strenuously defended, there follows a few platitudes about the United States being a nation and its constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof being "the supreme law of the land." Novices such as ourself will not care to take issue upon the propriety of the iteration by a would-be president of doctrines about which there is so little controversy, but when he proceeds to talk about the paternal hand of the United States being interposed between the people and the right of suffrage, he advances a doctrine at war not only with the traditions of the government and its immortal founders, but with the spirit of the constitution itself.

When speaking lugubriously about "every elector being permitted freely and without intimidation to cast his lawful vote * * and have it honestly counted, and that the potency of his vote shall not be destroyed by the fraudulent vote of any other person" he not only enunciates a principle which no democrat disputes, but this illustrious "visiting statesman" and member of the electoral commission, in penning it, must have remembered that he himself was one of those, acting in the double capacity referred to, through whose foul wrong whole states, on a most recent occasion, had "the potency of their vote destroyed" by acquiescence in and approval of the most damning frauds. The wounds of the war in the south he seems disposed to heal by enacting the role of the libeler, and, on the subject of unfair elections, endeavoring to raise the convenient cry of stop thief. That such a document should be seasoned with a homily on so trite a subject, and one so foreign to the occasion, as common schools, is probably owing to the fact that the author was once a teacher and still imagined himself lecturing his scholars.

The great blessing of favorable weather and opportune seasons, and the industry and energy of our people in taking advantage of them by timely manipulation of the soil, the development of our immense resources through the enterprise and thrift of our artisans and business men; the consequent multiplication of commodities, and return of prosperity and of resumption of specie payments, is all, of course, in the estimation of Mr. Garfield, the work, directly, of this administration, and, consequently, indirectly, of the Louisiana returning board and the electoral commission! This happy state of things he is now going to perpetuate by doubling on his own track as a former free-trader and member of the Cobden club, whose sole mission was the glorification of free trade; and, with one eye on Pennsylvania, supporting protection, and with the other eye on California eating his words in congress when he declared by all the gods the Chinese must all come in, and now declaring in favor of their exclusion!

But it won't all do, De Golyer dear. By your works shall ye be judged; and, judged by these, when weighed in the balance ye shall be found wanting.

What troubles Weamer, of the Republican, Baxter of the Press, Myers of the Standard, and all that class of reasonably candid and tolerably good fellows, is, that when they strike at Hancock they instinctively feel that, in scriptural phrase, they are literally "kicking against the pricks."

Garfield, like all other delinquents, says he relies on the favor of God. A little of the FEAR of God would have been a good thing for him in the days of Credit Mobilier and the DeGolyer business; for it is said in the good book that it pricketh the heart and reins, and he might, through its efficacy, have been reined away from all that superlative wickedness.

They're talking about a convention of Irish republican clubs at Indianapolis. Well, if that isn't a solecistic absurdity, we'll give it up! Talk about white blackbirds, pale negroes, unsoiled chimney-sweeps, or the no-scratching seven-years' itch; but for heaven's sake don't conglomerate the language into such inconsistent phrases as "Irish republicans!"

A FORCIBLE LETTER.

What President Johnson once said of the Coming President.

Gentlemen of the senate and house of representatives:—"An official copy of the order issued by Major General Winfield S. Hancock, commander of the fifth military district, dated headquarters in New Orleans, Louisiana, on the 29th day of November, has reached me through the regular channels of the war department, and I herewith communicate it to congress for such action as may seem to be proper in view of the circumstances.

"It will be perceived that General Hancock announces that he will make the law the rule of his conduct; that he will uphold the courts and other civil authorities in the performance of their proper duties, and that he will use his military power only to preserve the peace and enforce the law. He declares very explicitly that the sacred right of trial by jury and the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be crushed out or trodden under foot. He goes further, and in one comprehensive sentence, asserts that the principles of American liberty are still the inheritance of this people, and ever should be."

"When a great soldier, with unrestricted power in his hands to oppress his fellow man, voluntarily foregoes the chance of gratifying his selfish ambition, and devotes himself to the duty of building up the liberties and strengthing the laws of his country, he presents an example of the highest public virtue that human nature is capable of practicing. The strongest claim of Washington to be 'first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen,' is founded on the great fact that in all his illustrious career he scrupulously abstained from violating the legal and constitutional rights of his fellow citizens. When he surrendered his commission to congress, the president of that body spoke his highest praises in saying that he had 'always regarded the rights of the civil authorities through all dangers and disasters.' Whenever power above the law courted his acceptance, he calmly put the temptation aside. By such magnanimous acts of forbearance he won the universal admiration of mankind, and left a name which has no rival in the history of the world."

"I am far from saying that General Hancock is the only officer of the American army who is influenced by the example of Washington. Doubtless thousands of them are faithfully devoted to the principles for which the men of the revolution laid down their lives. But the distinguished honor belongs to him of being the first officer in high command south of the Potomac, since the close of the civil war, who has given utterance to those noble sentiments in the form of a military order.

"I respectfully suggest to congress that some public recognition of General Hancock's patriotic conduct is due, if not to him, to the friends of law and justice throughout the country. Of such an act as his at such a time, it is but fit that the dignity should be vindicated and the virtue proclaimed, so that its virtue as an example may not be lost to the nation.

ANDREW JOHNSON."
Washington, D. C., Dec. 18, 1867.

The Hon. W. H. English's Unpopularity.

Concerning which The People, an independent newspaper published at Indianapolis, says:

Some of the republicans are very busy circulating that our fellow townsman, Hon. Wm. H. English, is personally unpopular. Men of positive traits of character and fine business qualities often are, and yet they make our best and most successful citizens and public officers. But it is easier for the republicans to say that Mr. English is unpopular than it will be for them to prove it. Where is the evidence of unpopularity? Was it in early life, when he was elected to the legislature in a county opposed to him in politics? Was it when he was elected to congress, in a district which was then very close in politics, by 500 majority, and by an increasing majority in the same district at each election, until the majority was 2,000, and this at the same time when the democrats were on the down grade everywhere else?

Was it when he was elected principal clerk, and afterwards speaker, of the house of representatives?

Was it when he was elected principal secretary of the convention that formed the present constitution of Indiana?

Or, coming down to latter times, was it when, aided by the editor of The People, he defeated the celebrated coal-road project in this city, carrying every ward against the most fearful odds in the beginning?

Or, was it only last year when he elected his son to the legislature in a republican district?

No, gentlemen republicans, your assertion in this regard is mere partisan gasconade, and you do not believe it yourselves. You know that Wm. H. English was never defeated before the people, and that he generally succeeds in whatever he undertakes. All your misrepresentations and lies will make him stronger before the people. If Mr. English lives he will be the next vice-president of the United States, and he will be a credit to the state of Indiana, of which he is a native, as well as a favorite son.

MR. PROVINES AGAIN.

An Outsider's Opinion.

EDITORS COURIER: I see that the Republican takes it quite to heart because you noted, as a news item, that foolish remark said to have come from John Provines, that "he didn't want any democratic votes," and the editor seems to think your action to be a personal fling at Provines,—that you were "throwing mud," etc. Now, Messrs. Editors, not only of the COURIER, but of all other local papers, I appeal to all of you that we denounce during the coming campaign everything of a personal character, whether it be towards the candidates, our prominent politicians, or the opposite party. You and I know that such a course does no good whatever, but breeds hatred, ill-will and bad feeling all around.

But, Messrs. Editors, it must first be ascertained what "throwing mud" is, and what personalities are. Every person of ordinary sense knows the difference between a man's personal or private character and his political character. That which is injurious to a man's private or personal character may not injure his political standing, and that which would militate against him politically may not effect him morally, or in his private or personal character. Provines may have said that which is charged upon him even a thousand times, but would that injure his private, moral character or his personal relations to the world? I don't think that the editor of the Republican would claim that it would. No one will say that such a remark would affect his standing in the Republican ranks, among his own party followers. If, then, it does not hurt him in his private character nor among his political associates, it certainly can only injure him in the political party that is in opposition to him;—in other words, in that party to which he does not belong and in which he has not and ought not to have any standing. If he is so fortunate as to have any standing in the democratic party, then it is his political standing in that party that would be affected by such a remark, and consequently the item was directed against his political character, which I presume was a legitimate object of attack.

But his friends say that he did not make the remark, but, like Adam in the garden, "his father said that he (the father) would not hold an office procured by democratic votes." Now, suppose the elder Provines did say it, and it would be quite natural that he should, and ten times more natural that the son should say it, for he has not only the example of his father, but has had the teaching ever since he wore bibs, from every republican speaker and every republican paper he ever saw or read, that every democrat in the United States was a rebel, or a rebel sympathizer, a traitor, murderer, bulldozer, secessionist, thief, scoundrel and villian of the deepest and most damnable character, too vile to live and too mean to die, and even in the issue of the Republican which condemns your publication you will find those charges against the democrats. Every republican speaker thus far in the campaign bases his charges against Hancock, that he is only a tool in the hands of the Confederate brigadiers and rebel sympathizers in the north to turn the government over to Jeff. Davis and the secessionists, and to re-enslave the blacks. If such has been his teaching from childhood, and if that teaching be true, as young Provines evidently thinks it is, he as an honest man would say, "I want nothing of these traitors and rebels." He would also say, "I spurn and loathe you with contempt as the enemies of my country, and I don't want you to vote for me." The teachings of the republican press and orators are coming back to them as chickens come home to roost. Let them quit teaching such lies and falsehoods, and they will not have to apologize for the fruits they thus bring forth. It seems they can publish and speak all manner of evil against democrats, calling them traitors and rebels, but because you show them the fruits of the seed they have sown, a terrible crime has been committed. Such cant on the part of the Republican editor is equalled only by the shallowness of young Provines in the remark he made.

Yours for Hancock,
CONCORD.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O.24-tf

A Small Smash-up.

Number three, a mixed train on the Fort Wayne road, ran off the track at Auburn Junction Sunday morning, due to a switch having been left open by train No. 36 on the Wabash. The train was delayed about three hours, and the tender of the engine, "Waterloo," was somewhat broken. The employes of the Wabash train were of course to blame, and they will doubtless have to suffer the penalty, while the company will foot the bill for damages.

That Excursion.

Last Tuesday's frolic at Rome City, which was a private enterprise, worked like a charm. The originators of the scheme are ahead some, financially, but much further ahead in solid enjoyment, and each one who invested his dollar in it—managers and all—are more than satisfied. About three hundred of the best people of Auburn and Butler were on the train, and they had enough provender on board to feed all the tramps in the country, after the rest had finished; and if anybody says it wasn't the gayest little trip of the season, he is a li—able subject for ostracism from this community.

Almost an Ascension.

Billy Groscop, the saloonist, came near taking the explosion route to his happy hunting grounds night-before-last. After lighting a lamp in his bedroom, which is above the saloon, he fired the match through the bung-hole of an empty barrel in which the gases of ages had accumulated, and immediately thereafter William heard something go off. The lamp he held in his hand took a straight shoot through the ceiling, the chimney going by a separate route, and there wasn't enough left of the barrel to make up into a toothpick. Upon examination, William found himself all there, but he mentally resolved to use only moonlight hereafter or swear off on going to bed altogether.

A Handsome Home.

The new brick residence of C. C. Shaffer, corner of Fifth and Van Buren streets, has lately been completed and the family is domiciled therein. The writer took a survey of the premises one day last week, guided by Mr. Shaffer, and was surprised at the completeness of everything about the house, and the beauty and convenience of its arrangement; the parlor, sitting-rooms and bed-rooms are all of good size, well ventilated, and handsomely finished, which, added to its attractive external appearance and fine location, make it a corner that Auburn can be proud of. The greater portion of the painting was the work of John Cannon, and the carpentering was done by Sam. Buss, both of which are lasting monuments to their skill in those particular branches of industry.

Mr. Shaffer takes justifiable pride in his new home, having furnished it in a correspondingly tasty manner, and we hope to see his example followed by other citizens of Auburn who contemplate building in the future.

Don't Get Excited, Dear Brothers.

The Waterloo Press, Garrett Herald and Auburn Republican are apparently agitated over the statement, in our issue of July 1, that Mr. Provines, republican nominee for clerk, had been heard to remark that "if any democratic votes were necessary to elect him, he didn't want the office." These papers charge us with having manufactured the "yarn" for political purposes—call it an "electioneering lie," etc. The Courier, differing from the three "stalwarts" above-named, is not in the lie manufacturing business; they have judged us by themselves, charging us with an action which, as honest democratic editors, we would scornfully refuse to perform. We have only to say that we are prepared to substantiate in full every line above quoted; we have the name of "a responsible person who heard Mr. Provines make the remark,"—at all events, being a red-hot republican, we presume he is a "responsible person." Probably by next week, or after we have heard a little more "kicking" about it, we may deem it a good plan to enlighten the Press, Herald and Republican to their entire satisfaction.

MALICIOUS CUSSEDNESS.

A Dastardly Proceeding near New Era.

For pure, unadulterated devilishness, the case below recorded excels anything before heard of, in its particular line, in this county, and it is altogether likely that the whole state could not produce the record of a transaction of equal meanness. Here are the facts:

Joseph Pepple, a well-known and respected farmer living in Butler township, near New Era, recently purchased of Messrs. N. & G. Ensley one of the celebrated "Agitator" threshing-machines, manufactured by G. I. Case & Co., of Racine, Wisconsin, for which latter firm the former act as agents at this place. Last Saturday evening, after having used the machine but two days, Mr. Pepple took it to the farm of Wm. Thrush, where he left it, prepared to go to work Monday morning; but some time during the night, actuated by a desire to stop Mr. Pepple's work, which was doubtless interfering with their own, some scoundrels set fire to the threshing-machine and burned it completely up, demolishing also a new steam engine which was bought at the same place. Mr. Pepple's loss will be about $400, as the company has furnished him a new machine, discounting $150, and the engine has been repaired.

—But for the boys in the harness shop adjoining us, who are generous enough to pass their pail around in the print shop, our employes would be compelled to make many trips to Groscop's, after a drink of sparkling—ice-water.

—Last Friday night, at what hour the deponent knows not, some peculative gentleman entered a freight-car at Auburn Junction and secured shoes enough to last his whole family and all their relatives for a year—fifty dollars' worth in all. Police!

—A guest at the hotel Swineford remarked, last Tuesday, "It's too hot to eat," and the balance of the boarders were for a time unable to catch the drift of his remark, though it is believed that he alluded to a nice hot beef-steak which sat before him.

—Doc. Cowan took an impromptu drink at the horse-trough on the west side of the square, Tuesday, by request of Ben. Williams and Bill Showalter, who tipped him up by main force and ducked his face under. It was a very funny proceeding, and Doc. says he didn't so much object to the performance itself as to the nature of the drink.

—A man can accomplish considerable through the day, and manage to endure the sweltering heat, if he gets the alotted seven or eight hours of rest and sleep at night; but when it becomes necessary to spend six of the eight hours in chasing around the room with a big club after a burly mosquito, life loses all its charms and he is no good to any body on earth.

—Last Monday afternoon, at the junction, while fooling around a loaded freight-train, it went off and seriously injured Fred. Clark in the ankle. At first it was thought that the joint was out of place, but after examination by Dr. Littlefield it was pronounced a sprain, though of a very painful and serious character, and Fred. has had a "hard row to hoe" this week.

—Tom Mays thinks he has finally struck a fat thing, and says there is no doubt but that there is millions in it. For some time past he has been "monkeying around" at various things, and now he has gone into the monkey-wrench business. We have examined the wrench and must pronounce it a decided improvement over all others. J. C. Beeks, of Fort Wayne, is the patentee, and the manufactory is at Indianapolis.

—Tuesday evening, by some means unknown, Mr. Allen's gentleman horse tied himself loose and pranced up through town, bent on some fun; and for a few minutes things were decidedly in his favor, until, just as he was about to get into a dispute with another animal, Os. Allen slipped up and nipped the racket in the bud and the horse by the fore-top, conducting him to the barn, where he was locked up in his dismal cell for three minutes, on bread and water.

—We wish to state to a correspondent who signs himself "J. S. D." that if he ever paid us for the publication of any contribution from him, which did not appear because it lacked a signature, the money awaits his calling. In the first place, it is not our custom to receive money consideration for publishing communications of the ordinary character; and secondly, we will print no person's manuscript who does not give us his full name—a statement which we have too frequent occasion to make.

—Last Saturday night Geo. Weamer and Will. Armstrong had a racket in Billy Rainier's saloon—or would have had if George had stayed to see it out—in which billiard-cues made music in the air for a few minutes. The trouble arose from Armstrong's having heard that Weamer was going to publish him in some way, under which circumstances Armstrong's attack was wholly unjustifiable. The proper time, if any, to settle such matters is after the publication has been made, and then in a more civilized manner.

—Practical jokes are in order all along our side of the square, and there is blood on the moon. Day-before-yesterday John Leasure, with a view to getting even, got onto Coop. Ralston's fine, large, Chinese, two-story, high-toned roof—ordinarily called a hat—and painted the dome on top a beautiful fiery red, since which time Coop. has been so wrathy that he doesn't know a stick of candy from a rolling-pin, and he threatens to get pay for that decorated tile or clean out the whole north side of the block. Paint a stripe of blue around the hat, Coop., and it will make a daisy for the national campaign—red, white and blue.

Butler Township.

—Quite a number of our citizens took in the excursion Tuesday.

—The normal at Cedar Creek opens August 9th, and the prospect for a large attendance is flattering.

—Threshing-machines are so numerous that the farmers find it difficult to secure hands, three and four machines sometimes thresing almost within sight of one another.

—Joseph Pepple, living one mile west of New Era, had a new "Agitator" separator destroyed by fire, and the engine pretty badly hammered up, last Saturday night. The work is supposed to have been done by some scoundrel who was probably meeting with some opposition in threshing.

—William Merica has purchased David Lung's farm. Mr Lung, his sons, John, Adam and Joseph, also Emanuel Krumlauf, all good citizens and true democrats, intend to emigrate to Michigan. We are sorry to lose them from our ranks, yet if the remaining democrats prove true to the party, democracy will come out ahead by a nice little majority anyway.

St. Joe.

—Mrs. J. D. Leighty returned from Fort Wayne Friday.

—M. E. Olds and wife attended the Sunday-school encampment at Rome City last week.

—The saloon at the west end has again changed hands. Nelson Ulm now holds forth and is said to keep everything in tip-top shape.

—"Doc." McClaren, recently of Auburn junction, is in charge of the railroad office at this place.

—Wm. Vollmer has moved into his new residence, and he is apparently much elated with the change.

—Vince Dilley is one of the happiest men in this part of the country. He is a pa, and the new arrival is a boy.

—Elijah Imhoof, of Newville, sold the first load of new wheat in St. Joe last Friday. Price, 96 cents.

—E. Bell, bridge watchman, contemplates resigning his position to accept the office of president of the B. & O. railroad. It is said that Garrett, the present chief officer, will be Bell's successor.

—We are unable to give the particulars of the Kingtown affair, just at present; suffice it to say that H. H. H. still holds the fort, and it is probable, as long as the ammunition holds out, that the fort will not be abandoned.

—Blake, Filley & Co. are busily engaged in rebuilding their mills, which were burned a few weeks ago, and to show that the people of St. Joe appreciate the mill company, they have raised in cash a nice little sum of money to help them rebuild.

—Very little is said in this region regarding the impending presidential campaign, but the enthusiasm thus far manifested is in favor of Hancock and English. Democrats of Concord, who have for a few years back been in the habit of splitting their tickets and helping to elect republican officers, will go straight this fall; and when the votes are counted at the October election, some of the republican nominees of Concord will see the need of democratic votes, and there will be much turmoil in the republican ranks.

Gleanings From the Census.

The majority of our readers are probably not aware of the large number of aged people in this county—people who were seventy-five years old, or upwards, on their last birthday, prior to June 1, 1880—and, therefore, we give their names and ages below. The list may be imperfect in some respects, but it is as returned to the clerk's office by the various enumerators who completed their labors a few days since. Here are all "the old folks at home:"

Thus it will be seen that there are seventy-eight males and sixty-nine females, making a total of one hundred and forty seven, who are over seventy-five years of age—the oldest man being Thomas Dalton, of Richland, aged 94; the next oldest John Crawford, of Waterloo, aged 93; and the oldest lady being Ellenor Day, of Waterloo, aged 92.

How many of us at the present day will reach such ripe old ages? We hear no answer.

IN THE LONG RUN.

In the long run fame finds deserving man.
The lucky wight may prosper for a day,
But in good time true merit leads the van,
And vain pretense, unnoticed, goes its way
There is no chance, no destiny, no fate,
But fortune smiles on those who work and wait,
In the long run.

In the long run all godly sorrow pays,
There is no better thing than righteous pain;
The sleepless nights, the awful thorn-crowned days
Bring sure reward to tortured soul and brain.
Unmeaning joys enervate in the end,
But sorrow yields a glorious dividend
In the long run.

In the long run all hidden things are known;
The eye of truth will penetrate the night,
And, good or ill, thy secret shall be known,
However well 'tis guarded from the light.
All the unspoken motives of the breast
Are fathomed by the years and stand confest
In the long run.

In the long run all love is paid by love,
Though undervalued by the hearts of earth;
The great eternal government above
Keeps strict account and will redeem its worth.
Give thy love freely; do not count the cost;
So beautiful a thing was never lost
In the long run.

QUAND MEME.

The sun comes up and the sun goes down,
And day and night are the same as one.
The year grows green and the years grows brown,
And what is it all when all is done?
Grains of sombre or shining sand,
Gliding into and out of the hand?

The fisher drops his net in the stream,
And a hundred streams are the same as one,
And the maiden dreams her love-lit dream,
And what is it when all is done?
The net of the fisher the burden breaks,
And the dreaming dreamer always wakes!
—Boston Advertiser.

The tide comes in and the tide goes out,
And a hundred tides are the same as one,
For who can say what I'm writing about,
And what is it all when all is done?
But dipping my pen in the ink, and then?—
O! nothing but taking it out again

For people must read a great deal of rot,
(And rubbish and rot are the same as one.)
They may as well read what I write, why not?
But what is it all when all is done?
Some lines of type, and a metre rough,
And not an idea in the whole of the stuff.

THE RUNAWAYS' REUNION.

BY MRS. J. V. H. KOONS.

CHAPTER I.

"Well, for my part, I am very sorry the old farm was sold, and the Hustons have left us. They lived there many a year, and were hard-working, pious, quiet people, and it will be a long time before we shall have their like again for neighbors."

"I hope it will, father," said 10-year-old Ned, with a sigh of relief. "I hope the new-comers will not make me churn or carry a load of stove-wood every time I'm sent there in a hurry of an errand."

"Chores are the making of boys, and they should always be ready to perform them," answered the stern, mistaken parent.

"I think I have quite enough to do at home to make or break any boy, and, if I'm ever sent to Mr. Maynard's, I trust there'll be no old Mrs. Maynard there to set me churning, or carrying crockery from the cellar, swill to the pigs, or wood from the shed, as old Mrs. Huston always did."

"I think you will not be troubled in that way," said meek-eyed Mary, a sweet-faced girl of 14, whose dread of endless drudgery fully equaled that of her little brother. "Mrs. Carroll told me yesterday that there were but three in family of the Maynards, and that Mrs. Maynard is an accomplished lady, keeps a housekeeper and a waiting-maid, and devotes all her time to the study of music and painting."

"Ha! ha! a fine specimen for a farmer's wife!" exclaimed Mr. Woodruff, with a glance at his daughter that made her shiver.

"I cannot understand," ventured Mary, "why farmers' wives and daughters, if they have any taste and talent for it, should not study books, music, painting or anything else that tends to educate or elevate them. I have lately read that women all over the country are forming themselves into reading societies and art clubs, and are making rapid progress in whatever study they take up."

"Nonsense! nonsense! Lately read! I like that sound! Where have you lately read such stuff?" demanded the infuriated father.

"In a paper that Mrs. Maynard sent to Mrs. Carroll."

"I am sure I have always taken great pains to keep all kinds of story papers and books out of my house and out of my children's sight, and now you, Mary, dare to tell me that you lately read— St. Paul, help me, or such nonsense will be the death of me."

"It was not a story paper, father, but a journal devoted to—"

"Devoted to fiddlesticks! I'll hear nothing more of it, and now I here forbid you to touch any more papers from Mrs. Carroll. I shall not allow her progressive ideas to creep into and poison your mind as they did your sister's—remember, I say, I'll have you read no more of them—it is time now that you and Ned were about your evening work."

Glad of any escape from her father's pinching presence, poor Mary started for the cow pasture with Ned, while Mr Woodruff, to the annoyance of his tired wife, continued grumbling about the degeneracy of the times and the growing idleness and forwardness of girls. In the rage of a moment he had mentioned his eldest daughter, and as a consequence his wife was in tears, Mary had darted away from him with a sorrowful face, and Ned took on a look of adamant, and somehow his self-trust was always shaken whenever he thought of her, and all his household seemed to slip from under his control if her name escaped his lips.

The sight of Mr. and Mrs. Woodruff naturally suggested hawk and dove, yet there was much in common between them. His long and tiresome march in the straight and narrow way, his puny idea of woman's sphere affected the life of his gifted, shrinking wife, as the absence of light and warmth affects a flower. He had admired all the beauty his prosaic eye could detect in her paintings before they were married, but he was surprised and disappointed that she she should attempt or even desire to touch brush or pencil after they were married, for wife to him meant little more than servant of all work; but he gave up at last that she should paint all the pictures she chose provided she taught their daughters nothing that would in any way interfere with their becoming first-class housekeepers and fit in every sense for hard-working farmers' wives. Like Milton, he thought "one tongue enough for a woman," and desired his daughters only to know how to read the English language, and to know only enough of arithmetic to keep their butter and egg account exact. Glad of the privilege of following the only line of light that stretched itself before her, she studied and worked, doing double duty, keeping in order her household and feeding the spirit within her that never ceased its clamor for one more and higher taste of the beautiful; her studio was her closet of prayer, her temple of worship, the one sunny spot in the lives of her children, the star that shone through all the darkness of their lives. Unconsciously, its influence was warming the hard soil that surrounded the inner and better life of Mr. Woodruff. The first that came to brighten their home was little Helen, who in her babyhood possessed a vast amount of surplus energy that manifested itself in pranks of sauciness and self-will. Now, thought her father, was his opportunity. So he began to break her, not as he would a 2-year-old colt, by first coaxing it, but by abrupt and ill-timed commands to do, and not to do, whatever would thwart her girlish purposes, by surprising her in her moments of inspiration and burning her bits of verse or drawing, and sending her at once to some dull, dry task, to fit her, he would say, for womanhood's stern duties. Galled in spirit, year after year, she endured such harsh and uncalled-for treatment. And only one sweet in a vast desert of bitterness bound her to her father; he had found time to hear her Bible lessons, all that he permitted her to study; they had committed to memory, and could repeat together, a number of the psalms. And many a time Helen would wonder how one who could love and appreciate such beautiful songs could be indifferent or dead to the budding hopes and aspirations of girlhood. "Perheps his father taught him as he tries to teach me—and he was teachable; he says that I am 'perverse and obstinate.' I think I am, from his standpoint, but he shall never subdue and crush me as my dear mother has been subdued and crushed. My gifts are God-given, and too sacred for even my father to trample upon, and I shall use them to the glory of the Great Giver; if not under the roof of home then away under the bending blue somewhere, I shall find a place that shall be to me a sanctum sanctorum." And the young girl looked determined as a lioness as she uttered this declaration of independence.

CHAPTER II.

DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER: I am assistant teacher in the High School of this place; am engaged for a year. A maiden sister of Mrs. Carroll, your old neighbor, is Principal. I am boarding with her. I have the use of her piano; I take two lessons each week from a good music teacher, and find time each day to keep up my drawing. I crave your forgiveness. You will not forget my struggles to enter the life for which I felt myself born. I found nothing but disappointment, until in flight I made "way for liberty," and you must feel what the separation cost me, while you are sorry for, and doubtless blame, your loving daughter, HELEN.

Thus read the letter that came to the half-crazed Mrs. Woodruff in one month after their daughter was among the missing. "Driven from home," the anguished mother would have said, had she not felt that she must comfort, not accuse, the sorrowing. Never before had she known the depth of her husband's love for his children. Baffled and broken as his spirit was now, true to his nature, he could not forgive; and, for all his days of grief, his sleepless nights of suffering, he still protested that his wayward child must be punished, and accordingly he wrote:

HELEN: You can justly claim nothing from the home you so foolishly deserted. If you remain away it must be in a silence that will not be broken by your FATHER.

"Cruel! cruel!" sobbed Helen, as she read and re-read the words that seemed to freeze her heart and shut her out of the world. Her childhood had known nothing but the yellow leaf, but the sadness of autumn had not rendered her cold or misanthropic. The opening bud of love, watered by the dew of faith, was trembling to blossom in her pure young heart. She sought strength and consolation in prayer for the loved ones she had deserted. A sad, sweet picture she made as she sat in that capacious old arm chair by the little parlor window, in the cozy home of the schoolmistress. She was simply and neatly clad in an evening dress of pink muslin, with a white bow of lace at her throat; one ring, a plain gold band, that encircled the forefinger of her left hand, was all the jewelry she wore. It was a gift from her mother's father, who prayed, as he placed it upon her finger, that if she inherited any of her mother's talent she would also inherit, in an equal degree, her father's will power. Her glossy brown curls were fastened carelessly back with a spray of white lilac. It was sunset, but the lingering beams of light that kissed her fair young face revealed the bitter tears she could not keep back as she unfolded again and read aloud her father's icy words. The wound was opened afresh, and in her agony she cried:

"Oh, my dear mother, why did you not say just one little word to me? It would have been kind, and kept my heart from breaking. But, oh! I know my father would not permit you, sweet, patient mother, dear little sister and brother, and with all your faults my dear, dear father, how can I live without you! What, oh what shall I do?"

No audible answer came to the stricken young heart, but rest and love and home awaited her, for Mark Maynard had seen, heard and recognized his own, and had silently withdrawn from the room he had entered unseen, and said to himself as he walked away:

"Dear Helen, thou art the fresh, sweet spring in the desert of my lone life." I can scarcely believe in special providences, but surely God's own hand has led her to the heart that has ever loved her, and when the wave of sorrow that is now sweeping over her goes by a lover shall claim his own."

Brief and to the point was the courtship that ended in the union of two congenial spirits, and Helen Woodruff was duly installed mistress of the superintendent's home that the town people had named "Batchelor's Button," because of its round, smooth-cut appearance. The modest little building lay in the center of an eight-acre lot just out of the corporation of the city; it was surrounded by the choicest fruits and flowers. Four rooms had answered Mark Maynard's purpose, a front and back room above and below, with bay window below and above that looked to the east, south and west. The south room below was large, light and airy, and handsomely furnished, and answered the purpose of sitting-room and parlor. The room above it was Mark's study, filled with all that a student's heart could desire; back of this was his bedroom, beneath which was kitchen, dining-room, pantry and hall combined, furnished with overcoats, shoes, overshoes, hats and caps in the wildest profusion. But it was the first place that Mark had ever found a real home. His boyhood had been homeless in all save the name; he was left an orphan at the age of 2 years, and was adopted by his uncle, a well-to-do farmer, who had no other thought than to bring Mark up a first-class farmhand, but the fates had determined otherwise. His uncle had allowed him three months a year in school, but Mark resolved to have more time for study than three months yearly afforded him. Long and wearily he tried to get rainy days and odd times for his own, but his Uncle Huston was a model farmer, and there was always a hoe to scour, or some repairs to make that could be done under shelter, so the time went by till, one bright May morning, there was a vacant chair at the Huston table. The family had not been awakened as usual by the old bell that Mark had rung so early and so promptly for so many years, and long after the sun had peeped into his empty room did Mr. Huston enter it in a rage, with a rebuke and a lecture on early rising he was swelling to deliver to the offending Mark. "Why, Mark! Mark!" he began, but ended by taking from a bare table and reading the following explanatory note:

DEAR UNCLE: I cannot beg. I can claim nothing that is mine till I am of age. You know the one desire of my heart is an education. To rid you of daily disappointment and vexation, and to keep my own life from starving, I leave your home and care, confidently believing "the Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want." That He will bless you and yours here and hereafter, is the prayer of MARK MAYNARD.

CHAPTER III.

Poor Mr. Huston went back to the breakfast table with a breaking heart, for he really loved all of the boy that his narrow life could understand. "I am afraid," said he, "that Mark is only a new edition of his father; and he frittered all his time away and fretted himself into the grave over his books; and my poor dear sister seemed to think it was all right, too, for her last words to me were: 'Do give my son a good education;' and by way of silencing an uneasy conscience continued, "I am sure there was nothing in the way of the boy's education had he remained here and tried to learn." Search after search was made for many and many a day all over the country, but all in vain; no clew could be gotten of the runaway. Buried in the desert of a great city, Mark Maynard entered the home as errand boy of one of the best educators in the land, and eventually became his pupil. There he remained for six years, at which time, through the influence of his teacher, he was made principal of the High School of L—. For five years he labored there with all the zeal of an earnest teacher, and was then made superintendent, at which time Helen Woodruff glided quietly into the school and filled her place with becoming dignity, and as quietly in a short time afterward was made the wife of him who had been marked out by his friends for an old bachelor.

The marriage created no little excitement in the gossipy circles of the city, but a calm followed Mark's innocent confession that Helen was his "first and only love," which thread led to the unraveling of both their lives. Busy-bodies were satisfied when the heard that Mark Maynard, at the age 14, had kissed Helen, a child of 8 years, his only playmate in his uncle's neighborhood, just the evening he ran away, that he had not forgotten her, that he had intended to go back and claim her, who, by a strange coincidence, had come to him. All the city bade them good-by regretfully, after two years of happy life spent in their midst. They sold "Bachelor's Button," and took their departure for the old Houston home, now all their own, and so near the one still dear to Helen in spite of all the bitter memories that clustered around it. Theirs was a charity, a work of reformation that was to begin at home.

The Hustons had settled down to easy, quiet life in a neighboring village and whispered not the secret intrusted to their keeping, that the Maynards, who had taken possession of their old place, were no others than the two runaways, Mark Huston, as he was called in his boyhood, and Helen Woodruff. From cellar to garret a new life ran through the old home; large old rooms that had been dark and dusty for years were filled with sunlight and fresh air and flowers; happy birds sang in bright-colored cages that hung from vine-tangled windows; where all had been silence before, music gushed forth in sweet, entrancing tones. The Maynard place became the admiration, if not the envy, of the whole neighborhood. More than a year had gone by, and what of the new neighbors? There had been enough gossip about them and their new way of country living, but nothing was positively known of them save that Mark Maynard had once been Mark Huston, that he had run away from his uncle, educated himself, made money enough to buy his uncle's interest in the farm, that he had married a lady, and was living in elegant style. None of the country people, except Mrs. Carroll, had ventured to call on the "high-flyers," as they had been termed by those from whose inner lives the ideal had been crushed and driven out by the rude hand of the real. None, shall I say? Mary and Ned Woodruff, that very evening they had started so gloomy of soul after the cows, had wandered on beyond the limits of their own meadow into an adjoining wood of the Maynard farm, wandered, talking busily of their trials, hopes and fears, when they came upon a vision that was light indeed to their weary young lives. There, on a large, mossy stone, sat sister Helen. Mary sprung toward her with a cry of joy; Ned stopped suddenly, turned pale, and stood as motionless as a statue. Helen Maynard was not long in securing the entire confidence of her sister and brother, and they were ready to obey any command, or to act upon any suggestion from her. She understood the part she must play to accomplish her work, and struck the notes accordingly. Their father must not know anything of their designs until they were all executed; and right well was their secret kept. Ned was hired to saw wood once or twice a week at the Maynards'. Mary was employed at 50 cents a week to take charge of baby Maynard on washing and ironing days. The ruse worked like a charm, and Master Ned was furnished with the best books and became quite an elocutionist. Mary learned the principles of music, and, under the kind and careful teaching of Helen, she could play several pieces in a very creditable manner, was conversant with a few good books, and had acquired a little knowledge of all kinds of reform literature. Many times in the dead still of night mother and daughter had met on the sly, working and praying together for the resurrection of the soul they both loved—the soul that lay buried under the hard-beaten sod of custom. To be brief, a year had rolled by and everything was working together for good. Ned had committed and paraphrased several of the psalms, by which he had secured his father's attention, if not his heartfelt but unexpressed praise.

The journey had been made, the feast was spread, the victors were waiting to be crowned. Nor had they long to wait; the hour in its fullness was at hand, and never was a home filled with truer, deeper joy than the Maynard home, that beautiful day, when the Hustons, Carrolls, Woodruffs, and a host of neighbors and friends met to banquet and rejoice in the reunion and reconciliation of father and daughter, uncle and nephew.

The seed has been sown broadcast, and year after year the golden harvest ripened. Silent struggle and suffering broke down the cold, hard crust from the life of Mr. Woodruff. The spirit of Christ's tender words, "Except ye become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven," fell for the first time into his heart like a balm. A new life opened within him; a new earth stretched itself before him, and a new heaven bent above him.

The wilderness of the Woodruff place blossomed as a rose, and celebrated as artist, author and elocutionist became the names of Helen, Mary, and Ned.

Look long enough
On any peasant's face here, coarse and lined,
You'll catch Antinous somewhere in that day.
Then persist,
And if your apprehension's competent
You'll find some fairer angel at his back
As much exceeding him as he the boor.

Disinfectants.

Bad smells indicate the presence of decomposition somewhere and in some form or other, and this is the sure harbinger of zymotic diseases. Wherever bad smells are found it may be assumed that the generation of bacteria is going on, and these subtle and various forms of the life which proceeds from decay have been proved by modern science to be always more or less associated with the causation of preventable diseases. Good disinfectants, if used in abundance, will always destroy these becteria, and when this is effected we know that the causes of disease are destroyed with them. Hence, it is important to know what sort of disinfectants are good. With a view to ascertain this, Dr. George M. Sternberg, surgeon in the United States army, has been making some valuable experiments, under the auspices of the National Board of Health. In the latest bulletin issued by that body he reports his observation in connection with carbolic acid and other disinfectants. The result of his experiments was not favorable to the employment of carbolic acid. The crude acid, such as manufactured and sold in New Orleans expressly for disinfecting purposes, utterly failed to prevent the formation of bacteria. Test tubes, in which the acid was used in connection with bacteria, all failed to prevent the substance from spreading and propagating itself by inoculation, except when the pure acid, in its crystaline form, was used to the extent of ten grains. This amount, Dr. Sternberg says, is equivalent to seventeen pounds of pure acid for a room twelve feet square and twelve feet high (1,728 cubic feet), "and" he adds, "to fulfill the conditions of the experiment in disinfecting on a large scale, it would be necessary to scatter this amount over the floor of a room having these dimensions, and to suspend articles to be disinfected near the floor for at least six hours, care being taken that all apertures were closed so that the fumes of acid might not escape." It would require sixty-eight pounds of the crude acid to disinfect the same room under the same conditions. Forty-six fluid ounces of the crude acid in a room of this size failed to destroy the potency of vaccine virus, and consequently would fail to destroy the yellow fever germ or the poison of small-pox. In conclusion, Dr. Sternberg says of his interesting and valuable experiments that they show "that the popular idea, shared, perhaps, by some physicians, that an odor of carbolic acid in the sick room, or in a foul privy, is evidence that the place is disinfected is entirely fallacious, and, in fact, that the use of this agent as a volatile disinfectant is impracticable, because the expense of the pure acid and the enormous quantity required to produce the desired result." Sulphurous and nitrous acid gases, however, and chlorine, he found to destroy bacteria at once and effectively. The general result of his experiments is to show that chloride of lime is a more trustworthy disinfectant than carbolic acid. It is probable that a strong solution of copperas (sulphate of iron), liberally used, is the best wash for promoting the purity of drains and sinks. But it must be used liberally and regularly in order to secure good results.

A High Place.

No one dares address the Turkish Sultan, even if he speaks to them, except in monosyllables, with their foreheads almost touching the floor, the only exception being the Grand Vizier, who dares not look up, but stands almost bent double. He is a man of fierce temper, and has many whims. One of his manias is a dread of fire. He has had acres of houses pulled down, and an enormous new palace built further out of town. All the flat candlesticks must be surrounded by a saucer of water. He recently half murdered the wife o one of his Colonels for transgressing this rule. He neither drinks, smokes, nor takes coffee, but he eats eleven times a day an enormous meal. There are always ninety-four dishes prepared from which he may take his choice. The Sultan is not allowed to marry, but the slaves, who are the mothers of his children, are called Sultanas, and are not permitted to work. His children are called Princes and Princesses, and have great power. They can marry whom they choose, no matter what obstacles stand in the way.

"Singing Joseph."

It is a well-known fact that a stammerer can sing without difficulty, though he can't speak six words without stuttering. The fact explains this incident:

When the supper was on the table, I suggested that we wait for his father and mother to come before we should eat supper. The poor fellow immediately piped up in a plaintive strain:

"They'll not come when the rain is falling,
Falling, falling, falling;
They're at Deacon Potter's calling,
Calling, calling, calling, calling."

While still singing he seated himself at the table, and motioned me to draw up opposite him. After pouring the tea as handily as a woman, he turned to me and sang in a still different tune:

"Will you please, sir, ask a blessing,
On the bread and meat and pudding,
On the bread and meat and pudding,
Will you please, sir, ask a blessing?"

Much surprised, and ashamed that I had not anticipated the request, I said grace, and, much reassured by the little incident, made a hearty supper.

After my strange companion had done up the chores, and made everything snug for the night, he sat down in the corner of the fireplace and looked at me steadily. His fixed regard made me nervious again, and I said something impatiently.

"Why are you so obstinate as to answer me in this saucy, sing-song way whenever I speak to you?"

The tears rushed quickly to the youth's eyes; he essayed to speak, but, although he made the most frantic effort, he could not utter a word.

Soon he recovered himself, to my great relief, for I thought he was going into a fit, and to my astonishment, sang more musically than ever:

"Don't you see, sir, how I stutter?
I can neither talk nor stutter;
So God lets me sing my say,
And I thank Him every day."

I never felt so chagrined in my life as when I found out the truth in regard to the poor fellow. It was a good lesson to me. I have never formed a hasty judgment since.

"Singing Joseph," he was called, and I conversed with him until a late hour. I found him very intelligent, although his ideas, always without a moment's hesitation on his part, set themselves to music, some of the strains the sweetest and most pleasant I ever heard.—Exchange.

The Armenians.

Armenia, where a famine is now raging—there is always famine in some part of the East—is the original seat of one of the oldest civilizations. It has had different boundaries in different centuries, but its present area is estimated at 90,000 square miles, and its population at 2,000,000. Although long subject to the despotism of the Turks and Persians, the Armenians have preserved their nationality, both physically and morally; their religion, and, despite the loss of most of their ancient culture, a higher civilization than that of their conquerors. Christianity appears to have been introduced into that country as early as the second century. The form of theology called Armenianism ascribes only one nature to Jesus, and holds that the Spirit comes from the Father alone. Concerning what is known as the seven sacraments, they believe that a person at baptism must be sprinkled three times, and also dipped three times; that confirmation must be united to baptism; that the Lord's Supper must be commemorated with pure wine and leavened bread, and that extreme unction should be given to ecclesiastics only, and immediately after instead of preceding death. They believe in the worship of saints, but not in purgatory; they excel the Greek church in the number of their fasts, but have fewer religious festivals. Service is usually held in Turkey at night; mass is celebrated in the old Armenian language, though the preaching is done in the new. The head of the church, whose title is Catholikos, lives at Etchmiadzin, a monastery near Erivan, capital of Russian Armenia, whither every Armenian must make at least one pilgrimage in order to be secure of salvation. Turkish persecution has driven many Armenians from home. In Hungary, Transylvania and Galicia they number 10,000; they are very common throughout Asia Minor, and in the neighborhood of Constantinople reach 200,000. They are, indeed, scattered all over Asia and Europe, and are to be found in the United States, and are often the shrewdest merchants.

Reserved Seats.

In traveling, one meets with many selfish people; among them countless women who insist on monopolizing two seats in a railway car under the pretense that one of them is engaged by an attendant gentleman, supposedly in the smoking-car for a brief interval. We saw two women of this sort rightly served during a summer trip. For fifty miles they succeeded in warding off travelers who sought the shady side of the car, and the seat in front of them was the convenient receptacle of their baggage. Finally, however, an uncouth-looking individual quickly removed the baggage and turned the seat. The astonished ladies paused in their conversation to each other and raised their hands as if in remonstrance, but it was too late; the thing was quietly and quickly accomplished, and the two foreigners who were seated there seemed to understand no words or gestures. Public opinion, in that car, at least, sided with them. On another occasion, when our party entered a car, not a seat was available. One person was guarding four, others one and two; the aisle was uncomfortably crowded. "This way," said the conductor, "room in the palace car for those who are standing." The engaged seats were at a discount (plenty of room now), but the conductor insisted that they should be retained by their occupants, and all were made comfortable. "Do as you would be done by," is a good rule when traveling as elsewhere.

WINFIELD SCOTT HANCOCK.

His Wise and Patriotic Record upon Questions of Public Liberty.

He Hedges the Great Shield of the Constitution for the Defense of the People's Rights—He Maintains Civil Law Against Arbitrary Authority—He Defends the Principles of Free Government Under All Circumstances—Sentiments and Language Worthy of President George Washington.

[From The Sun of Nov. 19, 1879.]

Gen. Winfield S. Hancock rendered services in the field during the war of the highest importance to the country; but the services he rendered after the close of hostilities were of incalculable value, and deserving of everlasting remembrance. As commander of the Department of Missouri (1866-'7) and of the Department of Louisiana and Texas (1867-'8) he had to deal with civil questions requiring the best statesmanship and the soundest judgment; and the way in which he dealt with them showed that he possessed the qualities necessary for their proper decision. In times of peril to the constitutional rights of the States and to the fundamental liberties of the people, he went to the full extent of his power in maintaining those rights and liberties, and made for himself a record that the American people must keep before their eyes in the days that are now upon us. We have brought together from his orders, letters and speeches, while commanding the departments just named, a few passages of profound, permanent, and practical interest.

ORDER NO. 40.—MILITARY AUTHORITY GIVES WAY TO THE CIVIL—THE PRINCIPLES OF AMERICAN LIBERTY OUR LAWFUL INHERITANCE.

The General commanding is gratified to learn that peace and quiet reign in this department. It will be his purpose to preserve this condition of things. As a means to this great end, he regards the maintenance of the civil authorities in the faithful execution of the laws as the most efficient under existing circumstances.

In war it is indispensable to repel force by force, and overthrow and destroy opposition to lawful authority. But when insurrectionary force has been overthrown and peace established, and the civil authorities are ready and willing to perform their duties, the military power should cease to lead, and the civil administration resume its natural and rightful dominion. Solemnly impressed with these views, the General announces that the great principles of American liberty are still the lawful inheritance of this people, and ever should be. The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, the natural rights of persons, and the rights of property must be preserved.

Free institutions, while they are essential to the prosperity and happiness of the people, always furnish the strongest inducements to peace and order. * * * While the General thus indicates his purpose to respect the liberties of the people, he wishes all to understand that armed incursions or forcible resistance to the law will be instantly suppressed by arms.

THE INTERPOSITION OF THE MILITARY POWER FOR THE TRIAL OF ORDINARY OFFENSES, WHEN THE CIVIL COURTS ARE OPEN, FULL OF DANGER TO LIBERTY.

It must be a matter of profound regret to all who value constitutional government that there should be occasions in time of civil commotion when the public good imperatively requires the intervention of the military power for repression of disorders in the body politic, and for the punishment of offenses against the existing laws of the country framed for the preservation of social order; but that the intervention of this power should be called for, or even suggested, by civil magistrates, when the laws are are no longer silent, and civil magistrates are possessed, in their respective spheres, of all the powers necessary to give effect to the laws, excites the surprise of the commander of the Fifth Military District.

In his view it is of evil example, and full of danger to the cause of freedom and good government, that the exercise of the military power, through military tribunals, created for the trial of offenses against the civil law, should ever be permitted, when the ordinary powers of the existing State Governments are ample for the punishment of offenders, if those charged with the administration of the laws are faithful in the discharge of their duties.

GEN. HANCOCK IN REPLY TO A REPUBLICAN GOVERNOR—HE FAVORS THE LARGEST LIBERTY OF OPINION AND DISCUSSION—EXTRACT FROM HIS LETTER TO GOV. PEASE, OF TEXAS.

MY DEAR SIR: I am not a lawyer, nor has it been my business, as it may have been yours, to study the philosophy of statecraft and politics. But I may lay claim, after an experience of more than half a lifetime, to some poor knowledge of men, and some appreciation of what is necessary to social order and happiness. And for the future of our common country I could devoutly wish that no great number of our people have yet fallen in with the views you appear to entertain. Woe be to us whenever it shall come to pass that the power of the magistrate—civil or military—is permitted to deal with the mere opinions or feelings of the people.

I have been accustomed to believe that sentiments of respect or disrespect, and feelings of affection, love, or hatred, so long as not developed into acts in violation of law, were matters wholly beyond the punitory power of human tribunals.

I will maintain that the entire freedom of thought and speech, however acrimoniously indulged, is consistent with the noblest aspirations of man, and the happiest conditions of his race.

When a boy, I remember to have read a speech of Lord Chatham, delivered in Parliament. It was during our Revolutionary war, and related to the policy of employing the savages on the side of Britain. You may be more familiar with the speech than I am. If I am not greatly mistaken, his Lordship denounced the British Government—his Government—in terms of unmeasured bitterness. He characterized its policy as revolting to every sentiment of humanity and religion; proclaimed it covered with disgrace, and vented his eternal abhorrence of it and its measures. It may, I think, be safely asserted that a majority of the British nation concurred in the views of Lord Chatham. But who ever supposed that profound peace was not existing in that kingdom, or that Government had any authority to question the absolute right of the opposition to express their objections to the propriety of the King's measure in any words or to any extent they pleased? It would be difficult to show that the opponents of the Government in the days of the elder Adams, or Jefferson, or Jackson exhibited for it either "affection" or "respect." You are conversant with the history of our past parties and political struggles touching legislation on alienage, sedition, the embargo, national banks, our wars with England and Mexico, and cannot be ignorant of the fact that for one party to assert that a law or system of legislation is unconstitutional, oppressive, and usurpative, is not a new thing in the United States. That the people of Texas consider acts of Congress unconstitutional, oppressive, or insulting to them, is of no consequence to the matter in hand. The President of the United States has announced his opinion that these acts of Congress are unconstitutional. The Supreme Court, as you are aware, not long ago decided unanimously that a certain military commission was unconstitutional. Our people everywhere, in every State, without reference to the side they took during the Rebellion, differ as to the constitutionality of these acts of Congress. How the matter really is, neither you nor I may dogmatically affirm.

If you deem them constitutional laws, and beneficial to the country, you not only have the right to publish your opinions, but it might be your bounden duty as a citizen to do so. Not less is it the privilege and duty of any and every citizen, wherever residing, to publish his opinion freely and fearlessly on this and every question which he thinks concerns his interest. This is merely in accordance with the principles of our free Government; and neither you nor I would wish to live under any other. It is time now, at the end of almost two years from the close of the war, we should begin to recollect what manner of people we are; to tolerate again free popular discussion, and extend some forbearance and consideration to opposing views. The maxims that in all intellectual contests truth is mighty and must prevail, and that error is harmless when reason is left free to combat it, are not only sound but salutary. It is a poor compliment to the merits of such a cause that its advocates would silence opposition by force; and generally those only who are in the wrong will resort to this ungenerous means. I am confident you will not commit your serious judgment to the proposition that any amount of discussion, or any sort of opinions, however unwise in your judgment, or any assertion of feeling, however resentful or bitter, not resulting in a breach of law, can furnish justification for your denial that profound peace exists in Texas. You might as well deny that profound peace exists in New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, California, Ohio and Kentucky, where a majority of the people differ with a minority on these questions; or that profound peace exists in the House of Representatives or the Senate at Washington, or in the Supreme Court, where all these questions have been repeatedly discussed, and parties respectfully and patiently heard.

THE BABCOCK COURT—GEN. HANCOCK'S MOTION TERMINATING PROCEEDINGS.

Gen. W. S. Hancock arose in his place and, addressing the court, said:

MR. PRESIDENT: I have a motion to make to the court which will be proper to be made before the court is sworn, if it be made at all. If the court are prepared to hear me, I will proceed at once.

Lieut. Gen. Sheridan—Proceed, General; the court will hear you.

Gen. Hancock then read the following motion: A sense of duty to the laws, to the military service, and to the accused impels me to ask your concurrence in a postponement of this inquiry for the present. We are all bound to believe in the entire innocence of Gen. Babcock, and this presumption cannot be repelled without the evidence. It is due to him to suppose that the Court of Inquiry was asked in good faith for the reasons given. What were these reasons? In the course of a legal trial in St. Louis, Col. Babcock was alleged to be guilty of a high criminal offense. He asked for a hearing in the same court, but was informed that he could not have it, because the evidence was closed. These circumstances had led him to demand a Court of Inquiry, as the only means of vindication that was left. Since then he has been formally indicted, and is now certain of getting that full and fair trial before an impartial jury which the laws of the country guarantee to all its citizens. The supposed necessity of convening a military court for the determination of his guilt or innocence no longer exists. It is not believed that our action as a military tribunal can oust the jurisdiction of the court in which the indictment is pending. The President has said, through the Attorney General, that such was not the intention. Then the trial at St. Louis and this inquiry must go on at the same time, unless we await the result of the inquiry there.

The difficulties are very formidable. The accused must be present at the trial of the indictment. Shall we proceed and hear the cause behind his back, or shall we vex him with two trials at once? The injustice of this is manifest.

I presume from the nature of the case that the evidence is very voluminous, consisting of records, papers and oral testimony. Can we compel the production of these while they are wanted for the purposes of the trial at St. Louis? Certainly not, if the military be, as the constitution declares, subordinate to the civil authorities. Shall we proceed without evidence, and give an opinion in ignorance of the facts? That cannot be the wish of anybody. I take it for granted that the trial at St. Louis will be fair, as well as legal, and that the judgment will be according to the very truth and justice of the cause. It will, without question, be binding and conclusive upon us, upon the Government, upon the accused, and upon the world. If he should be convicted, no decision of ours could rescue him from the hands of the law. If he is acquitted, our belief in his innocence will be of no consequence. If we anticipate the trial in the civil court, our judgment, whether for the accused or against him, will have, and ought to have, no effect upon the jurors. It cannot even be made known to them, and any attempt to influence them by it would justly be regarded as an obstruction of public justice. On the other hand, his conviction there would be conclusive evidence of his guilt, and his acquittal will relieve him of the necessity of showing anything but the record. I do not propose to postpone indefinitely, but simply to adjourn from day to day until the evidence upon the subject of our inquiry shall receive that definite and conclusive shape which will be impressed upon it by the verdict of the jury, or until our action, having been referred to the War Department, with our opinion that our proceedings should be stayed during the proceedings of the court of law, shall have been confirmed. In case of acquittal by the civil court, the functions of this court will not necessarily have terminated. The accused may be pronounced innocent of any crime against the statute, and yet be guilty of some act which the military law might punish by expulsion from the army. In case of acquittal, he may insist upon showing to us that he has done nothing inconsistent with "the conduct of an officer and a gentleman," as the article of war runs; but the great and important question is, "Guilty or not in manner and form as he stands indicted?" and this can be legally answered only by a jury of his country.

GEN. HANCOCK DECLINES TO INTERFERE IN CIVIL CONTROVERSIES—ARBITRARY POWER HAS NO BUSINESS HERE—IT IS RESTRAINED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

Applications have been made at these headquarters implying the existence of an arbitrary authority in the commanding General touching purely civil controversies.

One petitioner solicits this action, another that, and each refers to some special considerations of grace or favor which he supposes to exist, and which should influence this department.

The number of such applications and the waste of time they involve make it necessary to declare that the administration of civil justice appertains to the regular courts. The rights of litigants do not depend upon the views of the General—they are to be adjudged and settled according to the laws. Arbitrary power, such as he has been urged to assume, has no existence here. It is not found in the laws of Louisiana or of Texas; it cannot be derived from any act or acts of Congress; it is restrained by a constitution and prohibited from action in many particulars.

The Major General commanding takes occasion to repeat that, while disclaiming judicial functions in civil cases, he can suffer no forcible resistance to the execution of the processes of the courts.

STAR SPANGLED BANNER.

Gen. W. S. Hancock at Gettysburg.

In the Philadelphia Times is a pen picture of Gen. Winfield S. Hancock from his boyhood days up to the present time, written by Gen. J. S. Brisbin. We extract the following graphic account of the part played by the heroic General in the terrific conflict at Gettysburg:

"It was at Gettysburg Hancock again loomed up before the country as a hero. When he arrived on the field he found the army in confusion, and retreat had already begun. Planting some infantry and batteries on Cemetery hill, he threw his whole energy into the battle and checked the enemy. Schwerin and Saxe were said to be worth each a reinforcement of 10,000 men to any army; Torstensin was rated at equal to 15,000, and the Duke of Wellington said the arrival of Napoleon on a battlefield was a better reinforcement to the French army than the accession of 40,000 fresh troops. What, then, shall we say of the value of Gen. Hancock's arrival at the critical moment on the battlefield of Gettysburg, a battle that by common consent is now admitted to have decided the fate of the Union, and fixed the final result of the war?

"Of Gen. Hancock's individual attention at Gettysburg it would require a volume to tell. His was really the action of the army, and Round Top, Culp's Hill and Cemetery Heights were his creations. He sent word to Gen. Meade that that was the place to fight, and, seizing the favorable positions, with the eye of a consummate General, hung on to them with the advance until Meade brought up the whole army and delivered his battle.

"Hancock was grand and magnificent in the battle of Gettysburg, and seemed the very incarnation of war. On the second day he was at Cemetery Heights during the frightful cannonade when the rebels concentrated the fire of 150 guns on our lines. The air was full of missiles; streams of shot and shell hissed everywhere; it seemed as if nothing could live under that terrible fire—men and horses were torn limb from limb; caissons exploded one after another in succession, blowing the gunners to pieces. The infantry hugged the ground closely and sought every shelter that the light earthworks afforded. It was literally a storm of shot and shell, like the fall of rain-drops or the beat of hail-stones. Those who had taken part in every battle of the war never had seen anything like that cannonade, and the oldest soldiers began to be uneasy for the result. Hundreds and thousands were stricken down; the shrieks of animals and screams of wounded men were appalling; still the awful rushing sound of flying missiles went on and apparently never would cease. It was then, when the firmest hearts had begun to quail, the army witnessed one of the grandest sights ever beheld by an army on earth. Suddenly a band began to play "The Star Spangled Banner," and Gen. Hancock, with his staff—Maj. Mitchell, Capt. Bingham, Capt. Parker, Capt. Bronson—with corps flag flying in the hands of Private Wells, appeared on the right of his line uncovered and rode down the front of his men to the left. The soldiers held their breath, expecting every moment to see him fall from his horse pierced by a dozen bullets, but still he rode on, while the shot roared and crashed around him, every moment tearing great gaps in the ranks by his side.

Stormed by shot and shell,
Boldly he rode, and well.

"Every soldier felt his heart thrill as he witnessed the magnificent courage of this General, and he resolved to do something that day which would equal it in daring. Just as Hancock reached the left of line the rebel batteries ceased to play, and their infantry, 18,000 strong, were seen emerging from the woods and advancing up the hill. Hancock knew the artillery fire had been intended to demoralize his men and cover the advance of their infantry, which was to make the real attack. Turning his horse he rode slowly up his line from left to right, holding his hat in his hand, bowing and smiling to the troops as they lay flat on the ground. Hardly had he reached the right of the line when the men, who, inspired by the courage of their General, could now hardly restrain themselves, received orders to attack the advancing rebels. Eighty guns which Hancock had concentrated opened their brazen mouths and streams of blue bullets flew from the muzzles of our rifles to the breasts of the Confederates. It was an awful day, and Longstreet's 'Old Guard of the South' melted away like wax under that terrible fire. Of the 18,000 who came to the attack, 5,000 fell or were captured on the hillside. Thirty stand of colors and an immense amount of small arms were taken. Hancock was everywhere riding the storm of battle as if he bore a charmed life. At last, just in the moment of victory, he was seen to reel in his saddle and would have fallen to the ground had he not been helped from his horse. A ball had pierced his thigh, and for a time it was thought the wound was mortal.

"'Tell Gen. Meade,' said Hancock, addressing his aide, Col. Mitchell, 'that the troops under my command have repulsed the enemy and gained a great victory. The enemy are now flying in all directions in my front.'

"When the aide delivered this message to Gen. Meade, and added his General was badly wounded, Meade said: 'Say to Gen. Hancock that I am sorry he is wounded, and that I thank him for myself and for the country for the service he has rendered to-day.'"

SCHUYLER COLFAX AND JAMES A. GARFIELD.

[From the New York Sun.]

In the summer of 1872, when the Sun first made public the testimony of Col. Henry S. McComb in the Credit Mobilier suit, Schuyler Colfax and James A. Garfield were both conspicuous leaders of the Republican party. Mr. Colfax was Vice President of the United States; Gen. Garfield was Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations.

Writing to Col. McComb in 1868 in regard to Credit Mobilier stock set apart for the purpose of corrupting legislators, Oakes Ames had said, "I have used this where it will produce most good to us, I think." Penciled on the back of the same letter was Oakes Ames' memorandum list of Senators and Congressmen bribed. There were thirteen names in all. Here are two of them:

S. Colfax, Speaker........$2,000
Garfield, Ohio........2,000

Most of the persons affected by this preliminary revelation hastened to deny their guilt. The denials of Schuyler Colfax and James A. Garfield were alike explicit and impressive. Colfax went from his desk in the Senate Chamber before a committee of the House of Representatives, and, having sworn in the name of God to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, made this statement:

> I state, explicitly, that no one ever gave or offered to give me any shares of stock in the Credit Mobilier of the Union Pacific railroad. I had never received, nor had tendered to me, any dividends in cash, stock or bonds accruing upon any stock in either of said organizations. I never received a dollar in bonds, stocks or dividends.

In the Senate Chamber, again, Colfax shed tears while protesting his innocence, and appealed to the Eternal Tribunal of Justice to establish the truth of his words.

Gen. James A. Garfield also swore in the name of God to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and, having taken that solemn oath, he said:

> Mr. Ames never gave nor offered to give me any stock or other valuable thing as a gift. I once asked and obtained from him, and afterward repaid to him, a loan of $300; that amount is the only valuable thing I ever received from or delivered to him. I never owned, received or agreed to receive any stock of the Credit Mobilier or of the Union Pacific railroad, nor any dividends or profits arising from either of them.
>
> Q.—Were any dividends ever tendered to you on the stock of the Credit Mobilier upon the supposition that you were to be a subscriber? A.—No, sir.
>
> Q.—The loan you have repaid, if I understood you correctly? A.—Yes, sir.

Both Colfax's and Garfield's sworn denials were made under the pressure of the emergency, and before it was known or supposed that Oakes Ames would ever be a witness to the truth. Circumstances, which it is not now necessary to recall, brought Oakes Ames to the stand, with his memorandum book. By the record of his transactions with Colfax the account stood:

> Colfax, twenty shares Credit Mobilier, cost $2,000; interest for seven months and ten days, $86.72, making a total of $2,086.72, less 80 per cent. bond dividend at 97, $1,542—$534.72.

The same book showed that a 60-per-cent. cash dividend of $1,200 was paid by him to Colfax. Gen. Garfield's account in the same memorandum book was as follows:

> Garfield, ten shares Credit Mobilier, $1,000; seven months and ten days' interest, $43.36—$1,043.36; 80 per cent. bond dividend at 97, $776—$267.36; interest, June 20, $3.64; balance, $271. Ten shares Credit Mobilier stock, ten shares Union Pacific stock.

And in another place a general statement:

J. A. G.		Dr.
1868.—	To ten shares Credit Mobilier of A........	$1,000.00
	Interest........	47.00
June 19.—	To cash........	329.00
		$1,376.00
1868.		Cr.
	By dividend bonds, Union Pacific railroad, $1,000, at 80 per cent., less 3 per cent........	$776.00
June 17.—	By dividend collected for your account........	600.00
		$1,376.00

Schuyler Colfax swore that he had never received the $1,200 which Ames claimed to have paid him as cash dividend. Oakes Ames swore that he had paid it by check on the Sergeant-at-Arms. Sergeant-at-Arms Ordway produced the canceled check:

> WASHINGTON, June 20, 1868.
> Sergeant-at-Arms, U. S. House of Representatives:
> Pay to S. C. or bearer $1,200, and charge to my account. OAKES AMES.

This check, which Colfax swore he had never seen, was drawn June 20. The books of the Sergeant-at-Arms showed that it was paid June 21. The books of the First National Bank of Washington, where the Vice President kept a private account, showed that on June 21 Schuyler Colfax deposited there $1,200 in cash, and the deposit ticket in his own handwriting was produced. His perjury as well as his bribe-taking was proved. His closest friends ceased trying to defend him. After one effort, pathetically absurd in its weakness, he ceased to try to defend himself.

James A. Garfield's case was even worse. To the evidence of his corruption and perjury was added evidence of an attempt on his part to suborn perjury. His cash dividend, paid to him June 19, 1868, by Oakes Ames, amounted to $329. After the investigation had begun, he went to Ames and besought him to let this payment "go as a loan," and when Ames had refused to perjure himself to save him he made figures to show that Ames still owed him $2,400 of the bribe money!

Oakes Ames testified as follows:

> Q.—You may state whether, in conversation with you, Mr. Garfield claims, as he claimed before us, that the only transaction between you was borrowing $300?
>
> A.—No, sir; he did not claim that with me.
>
> Q.—State how he does claim it with you; what was said? State all that occurred in conversation between you. A.—I cannot remember half of it. I have had two or three interviews with Mr. Garfield. He wants to put it on the basis of a loan.
>
> Q.—What did you say to him in reference to that state of the case? A.—I stated to him that he never asked me to lend him any money; that I never knew he wanted to borrow any. I did not know he was short. I made a statement to him showing the transaction and what there was due on it; that deducting the bond dividend and the cash dividend there was $329 due him, for which I had given him a check; that he had never asked me to loan him any money, and I never loaned him any.
>
> Q.—After you made that statement, what did he state in reply? A.—He wanted to have it go as a loan.
>
> Q.—Did he claim that it was in fact a loan? A.—No, sir; I do not think he did. No, he did not.
>
> Q.—State all you know in reference to it. A.—I told him he knew very well it was a dividend. I made out a statement and showed it to him at the time. In one conversation he admitted it, and said, as near as I can remember, there was $2,400 due in stock and bonds. He made a little memorandum of $1,000 and $1,400, and, as I recollect, said there was $1,000 of Union Pacific stock, $1,000 of Credit Mobilier stock, and $400 of stock or bonds, I do not recollect what.
>
> Q.—Have you the memorandum that Mr. Garfield made? A.—I have the figures that he made.
>
> Paper in Mr. Garfield's handwriting was shown to the committee, containing figures as follows:
>
> $1,000
> 1,400
>
> $2,400
>
> Q.—You say that these figures were made by Mr. Garfield? A.—Yes, sir.
>
> Q.—That was his idea of what was coming to him? A.—Yes, sir.

All this, be it remembered, occurred after the investigation had begun—after James A. Garfield had sworn that he "never owned, received, or agreed to receive any stock of the Credit Mobilier or of the Union Pacific railroad, nor any dividends or profits arising from either of them."

And, after Garfield had sworn to this falsehood, a Republican committee of the House of Representatives, made up of his own political and personal friends, and with Judge Poland, of Vermont, as its Chairman, branded him forever as a bribe-taker and a perjurer in these blasting words:

> He (Garfield) agreed with Mr. Ames to take ten shares of Credit Mobilier stock, but did not pay for the same. Mr. Ames received the 80 per cent. dividend in bonds, and sold them for 97 per cent., and also received the 60 per cent. cash dividend, which, together with the price of the stock and interest, left a balance of $329. This sum was paid over to Mr. Garfield by a check on the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Credit Mobilier exposure shattered a good many reputations; but it left no characters worse damaged than those of Schuyler Colfax and James A. Garfield.

Schuyler Colfax, unnoticed, is living out the last years of a dishonored life; while, by a curious turn of a memorable struggle in a nominating convention, James A. Garfield, his fellow criminal, is the Republican party's candidate for President of the United States.

GARFIELD'S NEIGHBORS.

What They Think of His Record—An Incident of 1876.

The Buffalo Courier recalls the fact that the independent Republicans of Garfield's Congressional district held a mass-meeting at Warren, Sept. 6, 1876, and adopted the following stinging resolution:

> Resolved, That it is useless and hypocritical for any political party to declare for reform in its platform, papers, and public addresses, while it insists on returning to high official place and power men who have been notoriously connected with the very schemes and fraud which render reform necessary and urgent; that there is no other man to-day officially connected with the administration of the National Government against whom are justly preferred more and graver charges of corruption than are publicly made and abundantly sustained against James A. Garfield, the present representative of this Congressional district, and the nominee of the Republican Convention for re-election.
>
> That since he first entered Congress to this day there is scarcely an instance in which rings and monopolies have been arrayed against the interests of the people that he has been found active in speech or vote upon the side of the latter, but in almost every case he has been the ready champion of the rings and monopolies.
>
> That we especially charge him with venality and cowardice in permitting Benjamin F. Butler to attach to the appropriation bill of 1873 that ever-to-be-remembered infamy, the salary steal, and in speaking and voting for that measure upon its final passage.
>
> That we further arraign and denounce him for his corrupt connection with the Credit Mobilier, for his false denials thereof before his constituents, for his perjured denial thereof before a committee of Congress, for fraud upon his constituents in circulating among them a pamphlet purporting to set forth the finding of said committee and the evidence against him, when, in fact, material portions thereof were omitted and garbled.
>
> That we further arraign and charge him with corrupt bribery in selling his official influence as Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for $5,000 to the DeGolyer pavement ring, to aid said ring in imposing upon the people of the District of Columbia a pavement which is almost worthless at a price three times its cost, and in procuring a contract to procure which it corruptly paid $97,000 for "influence;" selling his influence in a matter that involved no question of law upon the shallow pretext that he was acting as a lawyer; selling his influence in a manner so palpable and clear as to be so found and declared by an impartial and competent court upon an issue solemnly tried.
>
> That we arraign him for gross dereliction of duty as a member of Congress in failing to bring to light and expose the corruption and abuse in the sale of post-traderships, for which the late Secretary Belknap was impeached when the same was brought to his knowledge by Gen. Hazen, in 1872, and can only account for it upon the supposition that his manhood was debauched by the corruption funds then by him just received and in his own purse.
>
> That neither great ability and experience nor eloquent partisan discussion of the dead issues of the late civil war will excuse or justify past dishonesty and corruption, or answer as a guarantee of integrity and purity for the future.
>
> That, believing these statements in the foregoing resolutions set forth, we can not, without stultifying our manhood and debasing our self-respect, support at the polls the nominee of the Republican Convention of this district for re-election, nor can we, without surrendering our rights as electors and citizens, sit silently by and see a man so unworthy again sent to represent you in the National Legislature. That, strong to the conviction of right, we call upon the electors of this district, irrespective of former or present party attachment, who desire honest government, to unite with us in an earnest, faithful effort to defeat the re-election of Gen Garfield and elect in his stead an honest, reliable man.

AN experienced matron says: "A man will eat soggy biscuit twice a week without complaint, when his best girl invites him out to tea. But after the girl becomes his wife, if there is the faintest indication of a touch of saleratus in them, the neighbors will think there is a district school out for recess by the racket he makes."

A Mother at Twelve Years.

A census enumerator in a New Hampshire town found one family where the mother's age was twenty-six years and that of her eldest son fourteen years. Inquiry revealed the fact that the mother was married, when eleven years and six months old, to a man twenty-three years old. She is a native of Rhode Island, and claims to have been the youngest mother in the state.

Watering House-Plants.

The Garden disputes the rule that water should be given in moderately small quantities, and supplied frequently. If the causes of failure where plants are cultivated in windows are minutely investigated, the dribbling system of watering would be found to be the principal cause. A plant ought not to be watered until it is in a fit condition to receive a liberal supply of that element, having previously secured a good drainage in order that all superabundant water may be quickly carried off. Those who are constantly dribbling a moderately small quantity of water upon their plants will not have them in a flourishing condition any length of time. This must be obvious to all, for it is quite evident that the moderately small quantity of water frequently given would keep the surface of the soil moist, while at the same time, from the effects of good drainage, which is essential to the well-being of all plants in an artificial state, all the lower roots would perish for the want of water, and the plant become sickly and die.

What Flowers Will Grow in the Shade.

The question is put to me every spring by scores of the city people, whose little patch which they wish to devote to flowers is so walled up by neighboring houses that the direct rays of the sun never touch it. But few plants will develop their flowers there, and none will do it as well as if it were lighted up by sunshine a part of the day. Fuchsias, pansies, forget-me-nots, violets, lobelias, lilies of the valley, phloxes, and other herbaceous plants whose native habit is shady wood, will do best, but even these languish if denied all direct sunlight. The best effect in such situations is produced by ornamental leaved plants, the beauty of which is not dependent upon their flowers. Among these may be ranked the gold and silver variegated leaved geraniums, achryanthus, alternantheras, begonias, caladiums, centaureas, coleuses, &c., which, if planted so as to bring the various shades in contrast, produce a pleasing effect, which continues during the entire summer months, and is not surpassed by any display of flowers.—Peter Henderson.

A SAD ROMANCE.

The Story of a Colored Woman's Life.

By the death of a poor and wretched colored woman named Mrs. Minnie Andrews, nee Mink, on the 13th of June, in a miserable hovel at 64 School street, Chicago, a romance of the old slavery days is revived. She was the daughter of James Mink of Toronto, who, about 1858, owned all the stage lines in Canada, and was one of the wealthiest men in that dominion. The daughter was nearly white and very handsome. He had an absorbing desire to have her marry well, and offered $30,000 to any respectable and well-to-do white man who would take her for his wife. A man named James Andrews accepted the offer. He married the girl, secured the $30,000 and then set out for a southern tour. At Richmond, Va., Andrews sold his bride into slavery. At the first opportunity she escaped and made her way back to her father, but her life was blighted, and she became reckless and entered a life of shame, which ended here, as discribed, at the age of forty-five years.

A Way to "Raise the Wind."

"Why, George, how are you getting along?" said one young man to another in front of the New Orleans postoffice, the other day.

"Splendid! never had so much fun in all my life," was the answer.

"How's that, George?"

"Well, you see, Ned, after I lost my situation all my friends left me and used to pass by without even recognizing me. I was determined to get even, so I circulated a report among them that I was the fortunate holder of one-half of a lottery ticket that had just drawn a big prize."

"Did it take?"

"You just bet it took! Why, in two days' time I had received no less than a dozen invitations from fellows whom I had almost forgotten. I was presented with two suits of clothes, four new hats, two dozen embroidered pocket handkerchiefs, a silk umbrella, a beautiful amethyst ring and a handsome pair of gold sleeve-buttons. I visited Spanish Fort five times, took a trip to the jetties on the cannon and borrowed, all told, $150 in United States currency. Did it take? Well, I should smile."

John Steele, better known as "Coal Oil Johnny," after foolishly squandering all his money, commenced teaming, and has worked hard ever since as teamster and baggage-master. Thus he has slowly saved enough to buy a farm, on which he now lives, near Franklin. This is infinitely to his credit, and he will doubtless be far happier as a farmer than as a millionaire.

Which Commands the Cheer?

[From one of Garfield's soldiers.]

"Not Mission Ridge, but Gettysburg, Commands a nation's cheer;
'Tis Hancock riding to the front—
And Garfield to the rear."

CAMPAIGN SONG.

We'll rally round the banner of our glorious Washington;
We're bound to win the battle, ne'er use the sword or gun;
We'll rally round the banner and never let it fall,
With Hancock and English we are bound to beat them all.

Chorus—
Hoist up the flag of the red, white and blue,
For Hancock the patriot and brave commander too;
Hoist up the flag without one star erased,
With Hancock commander, it ne'er can be disgraced.

The boys who wore the gray and the boys who wore the blue,
Are fighting now together, with a purpose pure and true.
They're bound to win the battle, they're bound to gain the day.
With Hancock and English and Landers and Gray.
Chorus—Hoist up the flag, etc.

We'll gather from the hillside, we'll gather from the plain;
We'll heed not the sunshine, neither mud nor rain,
We'll gather round the banner of Landers and Gray;
With such noble leaders, we're bound to win the day.
Chorus—Hoist up the flag, etc.

From the everglades of Florida to the unsalted seas,
The banner of Hancock is flying in the breeze.
From golden California to old Virginia's shore
The people are aroused as they never were before.
Chorus—Hoist up the flag, etc.

When Hancock's elected, he's bound to take his seat;
The electoral fraud they dare not repeat.
For he's commanding soldiers who wore the gray and blue,
Who are bound and determined to see him safely through.
Chorus—Hoist up the flag, etc.

Landers never accomplished anything of permanent good in his native state.—Exchange.

Didn't eh? You are probably not aware of the fact that about 500 people—a small army in itself—are more or less dependent upon Frank Landers for their support. Such is the fact. To put bread into the mouths of five hundred people, we take it, is accomplishing some permanent good to the people of his native state. Will some one please tell us what permanent good the Hon. Albert A. Porter ever accomplished to his native state? He certainly has never put his money where it would do the most good. A considerable amount went into that palace of his on Tennessee street. It is doubtful if Porter feeds a half dozen mouths, let alone five hundred.—The People.

The Colossus of Roads.

"Colossus" is the name that has been given to what is, so far as has been discovered, the largest horse in the world, says the New York Sun. The animal has just been brought to this city from Buffalo.

Colossus is twenty-one hands high, and a man, to be able to stand on the ground and look over the highest part of his back, would have to be about seven and one half feet tall, or like Chang, the Chinese giant. When he is in harness and "checked up," his ear tips are ten feet above the level of his shoes. This mammoth horse was born in Erie county, Ohio. His sire was below the medium size, weighing about 1300 pounds. His dam was very small, weighing, it is said, only 950 pounds. Thus Colossus' father and mother together weighed 2250 pounds, while their son alone, when in good condition, weighs 2500 pounds. When four years old a Cleveland coal dealer bought the colt, thinking he would do exceedingly well in hauling heavily-laden coal carts up and down the streets of that city. But almost the first time this indignity was attempted on him the monster colt ran away with the load of coal, and in crossing a bridge broke it down and tumbled through. In this accident he received a severe injury to one of his hind legs, from which he has never wholly recovered. After several more efforts to make the animal earn his living by hard work, he was given up as a good-for-nothing, and sold at a low price to a man living near Dunkirk, in this state. This man failed in business, whether it was on account of his being the owner of so much dead weight in Colossus or not, is at present unknown. A "hired man" had a claim against the owner of the horse and a mortgage upon the horse himself. To satisfy this claim as far as possible the horse was offered for sale by auction. The hired man bid on him and got him for $35. This hired man immediately set about to do with the animal what nature had evidently intended him for. He made a "show" out of him, traveled all through Ohio with him, and made much money.

In October last Colossus fell sick, and the owner, fearing he was going to die, sold him at a low price to a Buffalo man. Colossus suffered a good deal in his journey from Buffalo, and is now in a stable on Hudson street, eating his three pecks of oats a day and doing nothing.

The little hired man who formerly owned him is still retained to take care of him. His work consists mainly in getting up each morning at 4 o'clock and taking Colossus out for a five-mile walk. In these early morning rounds the animal excites the wonder, sometimes the fear, of such persons as are obliged to be out at that hour. Sober men wonder why so small and delicate a man should walk when he has such a giant of a horse to ride.

and have letters patent therefor. This invention has relation to machines for separating Grain, Seed and Chaff, each from the other, and adapted to employ the same High Blast for each separation, and to conduct the grain and seed to opposite ends of the machine, whence they are conducted by proper chutes into sacks, held in position by the machine itself. I expect to have ready by June 1 to Garfield at Home.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

In 1872 General Garfield received 19,189 votes in his congressional district, which then, as now, was composed of the counties of Ashtabula, Geauga, Lake, Portage and Trumbull. His opponent received 8,245 votes. Garfield's majority was 10,944.

In 1874 Garfield's majority was reduced to 2,526—a loss of 8,418 in the majority in a single congressional district.

In 1876 Garfield's majority was 8,638. This was the presidential year when the republicans of the western reserve were impressed into the service, and induced to overlook some developed facts in the life of Mr. Garfield. But here was a loss in Garfield's majority in the district of 2,812.

In 1878, the year of the last congressional election, Garfield's majority was 6,350, a loss of 4,594 from the splendid majority he received eight years ago.

These are the losses which the name and candidacy of General Garfield have inflicted on the republican party in one-twentieth of the state of Ohio. He has never been a candidate for any office before the people of the state. It would be unkind to say that he is more popular among strangers than at home.

In each of these elections since 1872, Garfield has not only diminished his previous majority and vote, but his votes and majorities have fallen largely behind the votes and majorities of his party in the same elections. In 1874 the republican majority in the counties composing Garfield's district was 3,050; Garfield's majority was 2,526. In 1876 his vote was less than that of Hayes in the counties of his district by 2,543. In 1878 Barnes received over Paigne in these counties a majority of 9,340, while the majority for Garfield was 6,350.

This has been the popularity of Garfield in his own district, where he is known and loved—in one-twentieth of his own state.

Another Gallant Republican Stands by Hancock.

NEW YORK, July 15.—Gen. Patrick H. Jones, a prominent republican, comes out for Hancock. He served in the army of the Potomac and in the western army from Nashville to Savannah, beginning in 1861, and was made brigadier-general by President Lincoln in February, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services in the war." General Jones has been a prominent republican. He was once elected register on the municipal republican ticket, and was for several years postmaster of New York city. Gen. Jones' letter as published in the Sun, is as follows:

SIR: In replying to your letter inquiring whether Gen. Hancock will have my support in the political campaign now pending, I will say that I have been so long estranged from the councils of the democratic party that my views may not be fully in accordance with the notions of some, except so far as the sentiments and principles of that party are enunciated through the Cincinnati platform, and illustrated by the public life of the eminent gentlemen who have been placed in nomination for president and vice-president. In common with the great body of citizens of the country, I approve and endorse both the platform and the candidates. Of late years it has been the custom to disregard the provisions of the party platform on the accession of a candidate to office, but I believe that the gallant and intelligent gentleman who heads the democratic ticket, and who never yet disobeyed an order, will carry out the excellent provisions of his party platform. If elected, as he undoubtedly will be, I shall have the utmost faith that his administration will recognize the distinction between the civil and military authorities of the government; will adjust and establish the relations properly existing between them; will restore, so far as lies in his power, the old-time commercial prosperity of the republic, and will protect the public domain from the grasp of corporations and schemers, reserving it for the use of actual settlers. Hoping and believing in the success of the principles that have been fought for three times in the field and upon the floor of every congress in the history of the country,

I am, sir, yours very respectfully,
PATRICK H. JONES.

The following lines were written by the late Hon. S. J. Bayard, of New Jersey, in 1871. They are of manifest interest now:

"O gallant Hancock! patriot soldier brave,
If thine cannot, no other name can save;
How would the hosts, which in the bloody war
Followed thy plume, as sailors the north star,
Crowd to thy ranks, and bear thy standard on,
Victor of Gettysburg, to Washington!
Corruption then would hide her hideous face,
Rascals in congress to good men give place;
Honor the test of merit then would be,
And virtue smile on triumphs she would see."

Enthusiastic Republicans at Norristown in Favor of Hancock.

Dr. L. W. Reed, surgeon general, says: "I am a republican, but Hancock will get my vote, and there are thousands more like me. Why, there is George Bullock, one of the strongest republicans in this county, the owner of the immense mills at Balligomingo—in fact, the owner of the village. He has thousands of employes, who live upon his land, and to whom everything is provided in the way of necessities—yes and the luxuries of life. He, in a word, is a philanthropist in the true sense of the word, and wields an immense influence. He is a radical republican, but he has announced his determination that if Hancock was nominated, to raise a Hancock flag on top of his mills, where it should wave throughout the campaign. Why here, sitting beside me, is C. L. Nyce, a republican. 'Now what are you going to do, Nyce?' 'I shall vote for Hancock,' said Mr. Nyce."

Dr. William Carson, one of the oldest citizens, though a radical republican, says he thinks Hancock a most admirable man, and one very hard to beat.

Republican Nominating Convention.

Persuant to official call, delegates from the counties of Noble, DeKalb and Steuben, assembled at Auburn, DeKalb county, July 16, 1880, for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate for prosecuting attorney for the 35th judicial circuit of the state of Indiana.

The convention was called to order by Wm. Bunyan, who stated the object for which the convention was called, when, on motion, R. Wes. McBride was chosen chairman of the convention, and C. O. Meyers secretary, with the republican editors of the district assistant secretaries.

The announcement of candidates being in order, the following names were announced: Henry C. Peterson, Edward D. Haines, Orrin Z. Hubbell, Charles E. Emanuel.

A motion prevailed that the first ballot be an informal one. The result of the first ballot gave

Edward D. Haines	13 votes
Orrin Z. Hubbell	11½ "
Charles E. Emanuel	4 "
Henry C. Peterson	8½ "

The name of Mr. Haines was then withdrawn, and the second ballot gave

Henry C. Peterson	23 votes
Orrin Z. Hubbell	13 "

Mr. Peterson having received a majority of all the votes cast, was declared the nominee of the convention, when, on motion of Mr. Hubbell, seconded by Mr. Emanuel, his nomination was made unanimous.

R. WES. MCBRIDE, Chairman.
C. O. MEYERS, Secretary.

The Question Answered.

In a recent speech at Indianapolis, A. G. Porter, republican nominee for governor, said:

"I might ask any democrat in the state of Indiana what pledge has the republican party made that it has not fulfilled."

To which the Indianapolis Sentinel makes the following reply, rather effectually answering Mr. Porter's cheeky inquiry:

And we might ask Mr. Porter if the republican party was pledged to keep an army of carpet-bag thieves in the south to steal everything in sight. If so, did it fulfill its pledge? Was the republican party pledged to create the Freedman's saving bank and rob the confiding negro of his last dollar? If so, did the republican party keep its pledge? Was the republican party pledged to keep Federal soldiers in the southern states and maintain a military despotism? If so, did the republican party fulfill its pledge, or did the democratic party create the "inevitable" and compel Hayes to remove the troops? Was the republican party pledged to keep in office an army of thieves, such as Robeson, Belknap, Boss Shephard, Williams, Babcock and others, and did it fulfill its pledge, or did the democratic party, when it obtained control of the national house of representatives, compel these thieves to step down and out? Was the republican party pledged to reverse the will of the American people as expressed at the ballot-box in 1876, and, by the agency of crimes, seat Hayes? Was the republican party pledged to surround the polls with Federal bayonets to intimidate American citizens in the exercise of the right of suffrage, aided by a set of supervisors, marshals and deputy marshals, pimps, bummers and convicted felons, to arrest without warrant and imprison without trial? And did the republican party fulfill its pledge? And now, Mr. Porter, will you answer? You must do it, or you must sit dumb as a dead oyster. In due time, Mr. Porter, we will ask you more questions, since asking questions seems to be your style. You are the candidate of a party whose leaders are corrupt; of a party that has cloven down constitutional rights; that has invaded the most sacred rights of citizenship; that has bludgeoned truth and exalted fraud, stolen the public funds and debauched every department of the government, and that now has a candidate for president whose record as embodied in a committee of his peers you dare not read on the stump. Indeed, we challenge you to do it, Mr. Porter.

A LARGE PROGENY.

Twenty Little Canine Babies Born of One Mother—A Variegated Brood in Cincinnati.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

When the telephone conveyed the information to the ears of an Enquirer scribe yesterday afternoon that a canine mother with a new family of twenty little pups was at 62 George street waiting to be interviewed, it must be said, for the sake of the truth, that the pencil-pusher mentally ejaculated, "Too thin," or some other expression of like significance. When, however, a few moments later a messenger arrived post-haste from the scene of wholesale birth with the same story, it behooved the news-gatherer to take a trip westward-ho and investigate the matter.

Arriving at 62, Joseph Meyer's livery and boarding stable, a crowd of curious, gaping men and boys were found surrounding a handsome brown-and-white English pointer which lay upon a pile of sawdust and shavings in the rear of the building. Clambering all over the gentle animal were a squirming lot of little pups, all extremely anxious to get the first chance at supper, for there were entirely too many of them for all to get in at the first table.

There were pups as black as the ace of spades; pups with white tipped ears; spotted pups and white pups; pups with black tails and pups with white ones. Twenty of them, a full score, on actual count. It was a sight worth seeing, although the mother seemed to think that she had more little ones to look after than she had bargained for.

The first one made his debut into the light of the "Paris of America" at 9 o'clock in the morning, and the way the reinforcements began to come was a caution to the natives thereabouts. The majority of them were of the female persuasion, but there were just enough boys in the lot to keep the other giddy things under control.

The mother who gave birth to such a wonderful family is an English pointer of pure stock, and her present owner, Mr. Meyer, bought her only a few weeks ago from Joe Todd, a peddler, who resides in Avondale. She is as gentle a brute as can be imagined, and she allowed the bystanders to freely examine the diminutive beasts without interference.

The present case is without a parallel, we believe, in the annals of natural history, although it is a common thing for a sow to have a litter of young numbering quite as many. An English pointer is generally proud if his spouse presents him with a family of six or seven, but when the old gentleman who is responsible for this, learns the fact, it is probable that he will hardly associate with his fellows on terms of equality hereafter.

The dam who thus has made herself famous answers to the name of "Rose," and every member of her big family remains alive and exceedingly active. They are all of the usual size, and are as cute as little pups always are. "Rose" showed wonderful sagacity during the day, and when one small specimen was ushered into existence in a seemingly dead state, she at once made endeavors at resuscitation, in which she was finally successful, and that little brute was just about as lively as the rest of the gang last evening. At last accounts all of the twenty were still on hand, none of them having got away, while there were no more additions to chronicle.

A California Heroine.

[San Francisco Call.]

Miss Jennie Parker, who resides upon her father's ranch on the east fork of Scott river, in Siskiyou county, is deserving of a place among the heroines of the day. A few days since a black bear made its appearance in the front yard, evidently bent upon a foraging expedition. Her father was absent, but, unlike most lone females, Miss Parker did not close and bolt the doors and take refuge under the bed. She summoned the family dogs and turned them loose upon her visitor. Bruin made a masterly retreat to the nearest tree, and from an overhanging branch began to concoct measures for making an approach upon the milk-house, keeping up a loud growling all the time in opposition to the barking of the dogs. After looking over the situation for a few moments, Miss Jennie took down her father's Winchester rifle, and, walking to the foot of the tree, took deliberate aim and fired. Fortunately, the first shot proved a mortal one, and the bear fell down from his perch dead. Miss Jennie is said to be a young lady of diminutive physique and unusually quiet demeanor. Her latest exploit, however, stamps her as possessing the true quality of which heroines are made.

HOW ANDREW JACKSON'S WIFE DIED;

As Told by "Old Hannah," a Personal Servant Still Living.

There was to be a grand supper given ole master in Nashville the next day, and in the evening she tole him he must lay down and get some sleep. He hadn't had his clothes off since Wednesday; but he said "No." Ole mistus said he must, and she had a bed brought into the parlor for him. Betty, who was old, and talked to master as she pleased, said to him he should lay down, and that he should not go to town next day; that she saw death on the old mistus' face. He then went into the parlor, took off his coat, westcoat and boots and lay down. He said he couldn't sleep, but he might rest awhile, and to come for him quick if there was any change in mistus. In a little while mistus said she wanted to get up. Me and Betty helped her up and placed her in a chair. Betty was about to fix the bed, when mistus, who was leaning on me, said, "Ah!" and her head dropped on my shoulder. Just then George came to the door. He was going home, and his wife wanted him always to ask how old mistus was before he started. I tole him to call master. Master run in, and we placed her in bed. She did not breathe. George went for the doctor, who was asleep in another room. When he came in master said, "Bleed her, bleed her, doctor." The doctors shook his head. Master again said, "Bleed her, doctor, for God's sake!" The doctor then struck the lancet in her arm, but there was no blood. He then tried the temple; there was just a drop of blood—hardly enough to stain her cap. Then he said, "General, she is dead." She never drew a breath after she said "Ah!". Moses, a colored boy on the place, mounted a horse and galloped to Nashville to tell the news to friends and relatives. Master Andrew Donelson and Major Lewis came about daylight. I remember their hats were covered with frost. It was a cold, clear night. Others came in afterwards, and, with the neighbors, soon filled the house. Master never left the room where mistus lay. He stayed while we washed, combed and shrouded her. We tried to get him away, but he wouldn't go. He sat in a chair with his face in his hands, crying all the time. Nobody could comfort him. After the mistus was laid out he sent upstairs for ten blankets for the body to be laid out on. Me and Betty and Mary Matthews went up and fetched them down. They were spread on a table in the parlor, where the body was to lay, and it was put upon them. He thought she might come to in the night, and said she would lay so hard on the bare board. When this was done, my little boy Byron came in. Master called him to him and stood him between his knees. "Your ole mistus is gone, Byron," he said, and began again to cry. Miss Matthews took Byron away from him. He sat by the corpse all night, holding his head down and mourning so pitiful. Every now and then he would uncover the face and kiss it, and watch to see if there was any sign of life. When she was buried he could hardly walk, and had to be helped to the grave by two of his friends. He said to one of the gentlemen when they got back to the house: "What is the world's honors to me since she is taken from me?" He had a small frame house built over her grave. He said he didn't want the rain to fall on her. It remained there until Mr. Harris put up the monument. Master kept ole mistus' cap with the spot of blood on it many years. I don't know what ever 'cum of it.

Matter Enough.

The editor of a leading journal discovers one of his reporters evidently in a furious rage.

"What in the world is the matter?" he asks.

"Matter? Matter enough! There, I had received news of such a promising catastrophe—a railway train off the track—ten—twenty—fifty killed! And now comes the information that the report was false. Isn't that matter enough?"

Had it not been for Garfield, the odious salary-grab law would never have been passed. He had a nearly all night meeting and insisted upon the passage of the bill, although he promised several members opposed thereto that it should not be called up. It was rushed through with indecent haste. It is true that he covered his grab into the treasury. He found that he had bitten off more than he could chew. That it was too unpopular a measure, and would politically damn him—and so, we believe, he was the second member to cover the grab back into the treasury. He certainly deserves credit for this. The same credit that Judas deserved when he went out and hanged himself. —The People.

MURDERED BY A MANIAC.

Two Men Killed and One Seriously Wounded.

[Special to the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

DENVER, COL., July 12.—A special to the Republican from Byer's Station says a horrible tragedy has just occurred there. Two men were killed and another severely wounded. The assault was entirely unprovoked. The facts are as follows:

Last evening about nine o'clock, as Samuel Green and John McGlynn were sitting on the steps of the depot at this place, a man about thirty years old, apparently a tramp, came along, laid down on the steps, and entered into conversation. The talk was on the weather and general topics for about twenty minutes, when suddenly the tramp leaped to his feet and, without warning, drew from his bosom a large bowie-knife and sprang upon Green with arm and knife upraised. Green partly stopped the blow with his arm, but was badly cut over the left eye. The tramp made no further attempt to hurt Green, but attacked McGlynn, who stood aghast a few feet distant, and stabbed him in the abdomen, making a long cut, through which his bowels protruded. The telegraph operator, Frank McCracken, hearing the noise of the scuffle and groans of the wounded men, came out of the door of his office, and was immediately attacked by the tramp, who now had the frenzied gleam of a lunatic in his eyes. Before McCracken realized the situation he received a stab in the left side, and then ran, shouting loudly for help. Just opposite was the open door of a saloon, for which McCracken started, hotly pursued by the tramp. The inmates of the place, hearing the shouts, came rushing out, Constable Frank Wiggins in the lead. Wiggins took in the situation at a glance, and, pulling his revolver, shot over McCracken's shoulder, instantly killing the tramp.

McCracken's wounds as well as McGlynn's, are considered fatal. Dr. Riddle, of Denver, was taken to Byers on a special engine immediately to attend to the wounded men. There is nothing to identify the tramp, who was without doubt a maniac. Coroner Linton will hold an inquest to-morrow.

Cigarette-Smoking.

[New York Cor. Boston Courier.]

That a great many ladies in this city indulge in the fragrant cigarette is an open secret. Indeed, the custom has become so universal that it can hardly be called a secret at all. It used to be very common for girls, when a party of them met in the same place, where there were no men, to take a few puffs at a cigarette for the sake of the forbidden fruit sensation. But now they are more bold about it, and I will venture to say that the majority of New York girls smoke cigarettes. A number of gentlemen have told me that their wives would take a cigarette after dinner when they took their cigar, and they approved of the custom. I knew one lady, one of the highest born in the land, who was an inveterate smoker until forbidden by her physician. Spanish, Russian and Polish ladies smoke almost as much as the men, and no one thinks the worse of them for it. I should not like to see ladies smoke cigars or pipes, but I can see no impropriety in an occasional cigarette. There is a great difference in the way they are smoked. I have seen some women smoke a cigarette so daintily that it was a beautiful sight to watch the delicate smoke curling up from their rosy lips, while others puff away in such a masculine manner that one becomes thoroughly disgusted. I have been at a number of dinner parties where cigarettes were passed around to the ladies when the cigars were brought to the gentlemen. I am talking about the best people now, and not Bohemians. If the waiters of Delmonico's or the Brunswick would tell you, you would be surprised at the number of the private parties where cigarettes are smoked by ladies. If you ask a lady plump out whether she smokes, she will evade the question until she has sounded your opinions, and if they are favorable she will generally confess in the affirmative. I have heard some people say that they would rather see a woman drink than smoke; that they thought the latter more masculine. I do not think so, and the effects of a cigarette are certainly more innocent than of champagne or whisky.

The Shenandoah News has the following picnic piece:

Beneath a shady tree they sat,
He held her hand, she held his hat,
I held my breath and lay right flat
They kissed, I saw them do it,
He held that kissing was no crime,
She held her head up every time,
I held my peace and wrote this rhyme
While they thought no one knew it.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

An examination of Dr. Tanner, at New York, on the twelfth day of his fast, showed the tongue slightly coated; pulse, 88; temperature, 98.35; respiration, 14; weight, 139⅜ pounds, showing a loss of about 17 pounds. In the evening the doctor was irritable, refusing to be calmed by music, and complained of lack of fresh air. He suffered excessively from heat. At 10 o'clock, after visitors had left the hall, a curious scene occurred. The doctor, complaining of heat, tore off his clothes, the lights were partially turned down, and he promenaded about the railing, switching himself with a towel.

The condition of Dr. Tanner, the Minnesota doctor, on the thirteenth day of his fast, indicated no collapse. His color was rosy and his condition as favorable as at any time after the fifth day. The faster seemed easier, in fact, and confidence was growing that he would succeed in carrying out his intention of existing forty days without food. His pulse on the evening of the thirteenth day was 96; temperature, 100; respiration, 14. At 7 p. m. he took a walk of a few blocks, accompanied by watchers.

The explosion of a boiler in an iron mill at Pittsburgh killed the second engineer and one of the firemen, and damaged the property to the extent of $3,000.

Dr. Tanner completed the fourteenth day of his fast on the 12th of July. His weight was 133 pounds, a loss of twenty-four and a half pounds in the fourteen days. His pulse and temperature showed him to be growing weaker, though outwardly he remained the same.

Many were maimed in a shocking manner. Three of the men were fatally injured.

Dr. Tanner completed the eighteenth day of his fast as fresh as a daisy. The pulse, temperature and respiration indicated a healthful condition, and he showed a slight increase of strength. During the day he drank seventy ounces of water, and an increase of one and three-fourths pounds was noted in his weight. A dispatch from New York says that "Scientists are in despair. Tanner not only lives, but seems better than before. He sleeps quietly, reads the daily papers, naturally enjoys his daily rides, and appears in much better spirits than on preceding days."

The Department of Agriculture shows the cotton crop to be in fine condition. The average condition of corn throughout the country is the highest for many years, although in the Mississippi valley and north of the Ohio river there is complaint of too much rain. Winter wheat exhibits a slight improvement, though there is a large falling off in the South. Spring wheat exhibits a marked decline since June. West of the Mississippi the general average is high, Minnesota being 101.

POLITICAL.

The Democratic National Committee met at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York, on the 13th inst. William H. Barnum, of Connecticut, was unanimously elected Chairman, and Frederick O. Prince, of Massachusetts, Secretary. The members of the committee, in company with the committee appointed by the Cincinnati Convention, then proceeded to Governor's Island to officially notify Hancock and English of their nomination. Gen. Stockton was the spokesman of the party, the candidates replying briefly. The Democratic Congressional Committee also met in New York on the 13th and effected a reorganization. The committee, as it now stands, consists of Senators Wallace, McDonald and Whyte and Congressmen Eppa Hunton, H. G. Davis, and J. C. S. Blackburn, together with August Belmont and Gen. W. B. Franklin. The committee will have headquarters at Washington, and will co-operate with the National Committee.

On account of the prohibition likely to be issued by the Government little grain will be exported from Russia this year; and Germany, and, for that matter, England, will depend largely for their grain supply on the United States, which will be glad news for American farmers.

The celebration of the national fete day—anniversary of the fall of the Bastile—occurred at Paris on the 14th of July, and was one of the most imposing demonstrations ever witnessed at the French capital. President Grevy opened the ceremonies in the hippodrome at Longchamps, in the presence of a magnificent assemblage. His remarks, which were brief, were followed by a salvo of artillery, a review of the troops and the presentation of new colors to all the regiments of the army. The enthusiasm and the brilliancy of the spectacle were unparalleled even in France. Notwithstanding the vast crowds, the best of order prevailed.

Russia's Dead Empress.

Empress Maria, of Russia, was the daughter of the Grand Duke Ludwig II, of Hesse Darmstadt, and was born August 8, 1824.

Alexander II, her husband, met her first in his travels through the continent, when a comparatively young prince, and married her in 1841. The reign in which she has participated has been a most eventful one in the history of her adopted country. She became Empress by the accession of Alexander in 1855. The ukase of 1856 granted pardon to a large class of the Polish exiles and changed considerably the political complexion of that element of Russia's subjects, and the ukase of 1861 freed twenty-three millions of serfs and made the Czar and Czarina intensely popular with the lower class of people. The Czar's picture was regarded with superstitious love by the people, while the national antagonism to the nobility has caused various complications until the recent socialistic movements have again solidified the union between the crown and the traditional aristocrats.

The offspring of the marriage of Alexander and Maria are the Grand Duke Alexander, heir-apparent, married to Maria Dagmar, daughter of King Christian IX, of Denmark; the Grand Duke Vladimir, the Grand Duke Alexis, the Grand Duchess Maria, wife of the Duke of Edinburgh; the Grand Duke Sergius and the Grand Duke Paul.

The royal family of Russia is descended in the female line from Romanoff, Czar in 1613, and in the male line from Duke Karl Friederick of Holstein Gottrop, the union of these two families being one of those diplomatic matrimonial strokes of policy intended to unite the interests of Russia with those of the Western States of Europe. After 1730 other alliances made the Romanoff family still more Teutonic in blood, among which the marriages with the royal houses of Baden, Wurtemberg and Prussia are the most notable.

The Many Races of India.

The Calcutta Statesman remarks that the people of India offer to a stranger a a spectacle more interesting than any of the natural features of the country. Sir George Campbell once had a kind of a man-show got up for him in Assam, in which specimens of all the different races of that province were brought together. A similar exhibition for all India would show us over what a motley population England rules. Every type of Asia has found its way into the peninsula, and has been there retained. Even the princes and chiefs brought together in Dubar form a sufficiently incongruous group. The effeminate faces of refined Rajpoots and Brahins, the heirs of the great houses of antiquity, contrast with the marked features of the Mahrattas, descendants of low caste robbers. The Afghan stares at his fellow barbarian, a Chinese prince from the other extremity of the Himalayan range. Our army, too, what a study does it present? In every battalion there is one constant element, the familiar white face, which we at once recognize as English, however disguised by the turban. But the rest is all strange and incongruous. We have Sikns, Hindustanis, Goorkhas, Belooches, men of Jheend, Cashmere Mooltan, Madras. Every province in the Empire, except Bengal, is represented, and not a few frontier States send recruits to share our pay and fortune. The camp is a Babel of strange languages. The soldiers differ from each other in color, size, shape, religion, race. They are, however, united for a common purpose by the only bond between them, the habit of discipline and of obedience to the English word of command.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

According to the Hinesville (Ga.) Gazette the census enumerators are bringing to light some more of the servants of Gen. Washington. In the lower part of Liberty county one has been found who gives his age at 115, and stoutly maintains that be carried milk to Gen. Washington's headquarters in Virginia. He says he remembers exactly how Washington appeared.

In Buncombe county, N. C., recently, a one-legged man married a woman similarly maimed. Two souls with but a single thought, two legs that serve for the entire family.

THE MORMONS.

What Brigham Young's Daughter Thinks of the Church of the Latter-Day Saints.

Several weeks ago five of the daughters of Brigham Young, late head of the Mormon Church, were expelled from the church for the crime of having gone to law with certain of the brethren who attempted to rob them. Afterward the elders, wishing to make peace with the expelled litigants, sent a couple of "teachers" to interview them. They repaired to the residence of Miss Dora Young. What occurred there is told by the Salt Lake Tribune, as follows:

"We want to see, Sister Dora, if you will not come back to us."

"I have received a note calling on me to appear to answer a charge; what would you do?"

"Oh," replied Brother Morris, "I should go by all means—by all means."

"But I won't do that," replied the heiress, "not for the world."

"Oh, come now, Sister Dora, don't say that. If you have done anything wrong it will be forgiven."

"Yes, but I havn't done anything wrong. What have I done?"

"You had a suit with your brethren didn't you?"

"Yes, and I wish to gracious I had another one."

"What, with the brethren?"

"Yes, with the brethren?"

"Don't say that, Sister Dora; we don't want to hurt your feelings, but—"

"And I don't want you to hurt my feelings. If you do you'll go out of my house a good deal livelier than you came in. I have stood just as much from the Mormons as I intent to bear, and if you two offend me any way you will go out of that door which a carpenter put there for just such people."

"Oh, we don't want to hurt—"

"Well, then, don't ask me to return to the church; you can't insult me worse than by requesting that."

"Sister Dora, think of your father and mother, and—"

"Don't speak to me of my father, Mr. Morris," she interrupted; "you and the whole church know that my father, prophet though you called him, broke many a woman's heart. If it is required of me to break as many hearts and ruin as many women as my father did, I should go to perdition before I would go back into the church again, and—"

"Oh, Sister Dora!" exclaimed the teacher.

"It's a fact, and you know it is a fact, You know that many of his wives died of broken hearts, and how did he leave the rest? Look at my mother and look at all the rest of them! A religion which breaks women's hearts and ruins them is of the devil. That's what Mormonism does. Don't talk to me of my father; but I'll tell you one thing, if my father were living at present you wouldn't dare to do what you are doing now. You wouldn't have stolen our money from us either. You profess to regard my father as a prophet, and yet you have John Taylor standing in my father's shoes, when you know he is the worse enemy my father has on earth. And around him are gathered those brave apostles, all swearing against father, while in his lifetime they couldn't be servile enough. They are brave now."

The teachers were dumbfounded at the honest girl's estimate of her father, Brigham Young, and said nothing.

The Wild Duck.

This well-known species is one of the most widely distributed of this wide-ranging family, for it occurs not only all over the northern portion of the Old World, extending to China and Japan, but it is also met with in North America, as far south as Mexico. The wild duck breeds in many parts of the United Kingdom, and where not disturbed does not betray any great fear of man. The nest is placed on the ground, often at some distance from the water, and in one instance the writer remembers having come across a duck sitting on nine eggs at least half a mile from the lake where numbers of others were breeding. It is strange that the sitting bird should expose her young brood, even if they should be safely hatched, to the risk of capture by a fox or other wild animal on their way to the water. The nest in question was placed in a small wooden dell, and was overhung by a bush, which would have effectually concealed it had not the old bird betrayed its presence by flying off. The mallard is a much more handsome bird than the duck, and both sexes closely resemble the common duck of the farm-yard. In summer, however, the male bird loses its rich plumage and dons a dress like the female, only resuming its beautiful colors again in August. A good decoy, where many wild ducks are to be seen, is often a pretty sight, the birds swimming about in pairs, when the fine plumage of the male contrasts with the more sober color of his mate. At times they may be seen tail uppermost, searching below the surface for their food, which consists of worms, grass-seeds, and roots, molluscs, insects, small reptiles, and little fish. On being approached they fly off with a sonorous quack, that of the female being the louder. During the breeding season the males consort much together, and on taking flight mount high in the air and circle round some distance before again settling down. The female evinces great attachment to the young, and may often be seen attended by her little brood, who, on the approach of danger, manage to conceal themselves most adroitly, while the mother will feign lameness, or pretend to be wounded, in order to draw away the intruder from the whereabouts of her brood.—Cassell's Natural History.

Preservation of Hops.

The principal feature in this new system consists in sprinkling the hops with alcohol prior to packing, and then pressing them tightly into air-tight vessels. In course of time the alcohol combines with some of the constituents of the hop, and certain volatile ethers are thus formed; these possess a strong and peculiarly fruity smell, but, being very volatile, they are all dissipated during the boiling. Dr. Lintner has experimented on these preserved hops at Weihenstephan, and speaks well of them; he says the fine color is retained and there is a full development of aroma; the fermentation of worts made with these hops worked well, and the resulting beer possessed a fine bitter flavor. If this method of sprinkling with alcohol will stop the development of valerianic acid, which takes place in hops when stored in the usual manner, it ought to come into general use.—Scientific American.

Snag's Corners.

The officials of a Michigan railroad now being extended were waited upon the other day by a person from the pine woods and sand hills who announced himself as Mr. Snag, and who wanted to know if it could be possible that the proposed line was not to come any nearer than three miles to the hamlet named in his honor.

"Is Snag's Corners a place of much importance?" asked the president.

"Is it? Well, I should say it was. We made over a ton of maple sugar last spring."

"Does business flourish there?"

"Flourish! Why business is on the gallop there every minute in the whole twenty-four hours. We had three false alarms of fire there in one week. How's that for a town which is to be left three miles off your railroad?"

Being asked to give the names of the business houses, he scratched his head for a while, and then replied:

"Well, there's me to start on. I run a big store, own eight yokes of oxen, and shall soon have a dam and a saw mill. Then there's a blacksmith shop, a post-office, a doctor, and last week over half a dozen patent-right men passed through here. In one brief year we've increased from a squatter and two dogs to our present standing, and we'll have a lawyer there before long."

"I'm afraid we won't be able to come any nearer the Corners than the present survey," finally remarked the president.

"You won't! It can't be possible that you mean to skip a growing place like Snag's Corners!"

"I think we'll have to."

"Wouldn't come if I'd clear you out a place in the store for a ticket office?"

"I don't see how we could."

"May be I'd subscribe $25," continued the delegate.

"No, we couldn't change."

"Can't do it nohow?"

"No."

"Very well," said Mr. Snag, as he put on his hat. "If this 'ere railroad thinks it can stunt or cripple Snag's Corners by leaving it out in the cold, it has made a big mistake. Before I leave town today I'm going to buy a wind mill and a melodeon, and your old locomotives may toot and be hanged sir—toot and be hanged!"—Detroit Free Press

Prof. Palmieri on Earthquakes.

Prof. Palmieri has been lecturing on the possibility of foretelling earthquakes. After mentioning earthquakes as known and remarked in ancient days, he illustrated the three signs of the coming earthquake, which, from time immemorial, have been popularly believed in—namely, the sultry, oppressive state of the atmosphere, the drying up of wells, and the uneasiness shown by animals, observing that, though these signs do not always, yet they undoubtedly often, occur. Prof. Palmieri went on to say that earthquakes have no doubt shorter or longer periods of preparation. The earth is never perfectly quiet for some time before and after a great shock, but gradually sinks into repose or increases in agitation. The Professor believes that, by registering the slight preliminary tremblings, and noticing their increase or decrease, it would be possible to foretell an earthquake about three days in advance, just as tempests are now foretold. If a connected system of seismographic stations were to be organized—the different stations communicating with each other by telegraph—it would be quite possible in most cases to issue warnings to the threatened district in time. He scarcely expected to live to see it; but he hoped that, after he was gone, posterity might benefit by such a system, universally and permanently established. The seismographic stations should be erected by the different Governments in quiet places, where the ground was not liable to be shaken by heavy railway trains.—London Daily News.

Toads.

French industry and sagacity take the lead of the world in little things, if nothing more. Toad culture is a regular business there with the economic people, and the demand for toads is great and increasing. The useful little animals are employed as insect destroyers, not only in the gardens of that country, but thousands of them are packed down in baskets of damp moss and sent to other countries to be sold to gardeners. The more observing horticulturists and floriculturists have long been aware of their value as insect destroyers, and have utilized them to a greater or less extent. And it is not much to the credit of American gardeners and farmers that they have never recognized the service of this helpful and innocent reptile. Nature conducts her operations by reciprocal means, and if she gives us the hurtful insects to eat up our crops, she also gives us the birds, toads, etc., to eat up the insects. The farmer should keep a close eye on nature, and seek to make her manifold operations helpful, instead of casting hindrance in the way of destroying her agents. The successful farmer has great need to be a good economic naturalist. Many things, as loathesome looking as the toad, are the farmer's friend.

Patriotism at a Discount.

Soon after the firing on Sumter a gentleman of New York, who passes his summers by the waters of South Bay, had occasion to drive from New York to Islip, and to pass through the principal villages along the shore. Nearly everywhere the patriotism of the people was manifested by numerous flags that waved from poles, or were flung from windows, and each village contained groups of men who were discussing the important events of the day. One village only was without bunting, and there was a sullen crowd at the principal store, whose breathings were anything but loyal. The gentleman was well known to the inhabitants, and felt justified in reproving them for their political attitude. He told what he had seen on his way down, how the other villages were decked with flags, and asked why they did not do like their neighbors. The men looked one toward another for several moments, and finally the boldest ventured to speak.

"Flags, eh?" said he, in a tone of withering contempt. "Flags!—and clams a dollar a thousand!"—Harper's Magazine.

A man who fights a duel in the South is ever afterward dubbed a "majah."

The Man in the Gallery.

It will be remembered that, in his speech nominating Sherman at the Chicago convention, Gen. Garfield, after delivering an appropriate eulogy upon that candidate, said: "Who do you want?" Whereupon a voice in the gallery shouted "Garfield."

That unknown man called upon the General on Tuesday afternoon, just as he was washing his hands to to prepare for a general shake. He was a one-armed soldier, and rather seedy in his make-up.

Said he, "General Garfield, I come to offer my congratulations."

"Thanks, thanks," said the General; "let me see, weren't you in the Forty-second Ohio—?"

"No, General, that's not it. Didn't you hear that voice in the gallery when you said 'Who do you want?' I'm the fellow that said it. I was for you first, last and all the time."

"You are a prophetic soul," said the General, "and if I come to the White House depend upon it I shan't forget you".

And the one-armed man left his name on a card and went away happy.

In a few minutes Garfield was surrounded by his friends, and his right hand was going like a pump-handle, when a burly Teuton pressed forward and accosted him:

"Guten abend, General, I dinks I have some glaims on you anyhow."

"I am at your service, my good friend," said the General; "let me hear from you."

"Did you hear dot man shoud oud in in de gallery 'Garfield' when you say 'Was haben sie?'"

"Ah, yes, I remember it well. Do you mean to tell me—"

"Yah, General, I vas dot man, identical zame."

"My friend, I shall never forget you as long as I live. Let me hear from you any time."

And the man went away happy.

Passing through the rotunda on his way to the carriage, the General felt a thundering slap on the back, midway between his shoulders and hips, accompanied by, "Hillo, old Gar.'"

Turning round he saw a very little man, with a very tall hat, and a very thick stick in his fist.

"Don't remember me, eh? I'm called the boss interviewer of Chicago. I interviewed old Conk, and you too—"

"Ah, yes. Well, good-day, good-day."

"Hold on, old fellow," said the chap; "I want to have just a word with you on my own hook. Didn't you hear that fellow up in the gallery when you made your Sherman speech, shout 'Garfield?'"

"I did, I did. Do you mean to say—"

"Guess I fixed you that time, old man. I knew it was bound to go that way. Now, I consider I am the man who saved the Republican party."

"My dear, good little fellow," said Garfield, "you deserve the thanks of the Nation. I shall give you a new club. Come down and see me in Ohio, and I'll tell you all about the next Cabinet. Perhaps you'll be in it."

And the little man went away happy.

Just as the General was boarding the train, a bottle-nosed politician from the Seventh Ward plucked him on the coat-tail and shrieked, "General, General, one word—only one word."

"What is it, my man?"

"Do you remember when you made your speech in the convention nominating Sherman that a man in the gallery shouted "Garfield?"

The General is not a profane man. He was once a minister of the gospel, but he was also at one time of his life a canal-boatman. Early habits of thought and expression are never completely eradicated, and he startled some of his friends in the car as he threw himself into a seat and exclaimed:

"Cuss that man in the gallery."

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

President Chadbourne, of Williams College, has resigned, to attend to private business interests.

The wheat crop in this country for 1880 promises to be up to the average. The present prospects in England are against a good crop.

The marvel of the census of cities is the increase of 614 per cent. in the population of Denver, Col. In 1870, Denver was a frontier town of 4,759; now it numbers 34,000.

The number of immigrants landed in New York during the past six months was 177,000, exceeding by 19,000 that for the corresponding period of 1872, which was the year of the largest arrivals.

There are now three Hebrews in Congress—Messrs. Jonas, Morse, and Einstein. In the House there are six German Representatives, among whom are Heilman, of Indiana; Poehler, of Minnesota; Muller, of New York, and Deuster, of Wisconsin.

Amasa Stone, the millionaire of Cleveland, offers to give $400,000 as an endowment fund and $100,000 for the purchase of land, provided the Western Reserve College, of Hudson, Ohio, shall be removed to Cleveland. His proposition will be accepted.

Gen. Grant has a regular income of $9,000 per annum, but his reserve funds were increased the first two months of this year by his son Ulysses, Jr., who made for the General a lucky investment in Chrysolite mining stock that netted $16,000. The New York Hour is responsible for this statement.

The Marquis of Hartington stated recently in the British House of Commons that the cost of the war with Cabul was $45,000,000 over the estimates of the Tory Government. The deficit which the Government will be obliged to make up during the next fiscal year is $16,535,000.

Dr. J. D. Galloway, who died in Dallas, Texas, a few days ago, had twenty-two sons in the Confederate army during the late war. Ten out of the twenty-two were killed on the battlefield. Dr. Galloway was famous also for his wives, of whom he had seventeen, one at a time. Some of the wives died and from others he was divorced.

To dun a debtor on a postal card has been decided by the Supreme Court of Ohio to be unlawful. The court held that anything so written that is liable to injure the credit or reputation of any one is a crime. The decision was made in the case of a man who dunned a debtor for an old account on a postal card, and in that manner made the matter public, to the detriment of the latter's credit elsewhere.

Census returns have been received from a number of Texas cities. Galveston has a population of 22,350; population in 1870, 13,818; increase, 8,432; per cent., 61. Austin has 10,500; in 1870, 4,428; increase, 6,072; per cent., 137. Houston, 16,750; in 1870, 9,382; increase, 6,368; per cent., 67. San Antonio, 21,800; in 1870, 12,256; increase 9,544; per cent., 77.

A little while ago it was said that the day for soldier candidates for the Presidency had gone by. It hardly looks so when there are more of them in nomination now than ever before in the history of the country; in fact, there are no candidates who are not soldiers. The Democracy have nominated Gen. Hancock; the Republicans, Gen. Garfield; the Greenbackers, Gen. J. B. Weaver; the Prohibitionists, Gen. Neal Dow.

It has been demonstrated by statistics that not fewer than 60,000 Europeans, or one in every 5,000 of the population, commit suicide annually. A writer in Blackwood's Magazine asserts that the average rate of self-destruction is five times greater at present than it was a century ago. The increase of suicides, both in the New and Old Worlds, is evidently a marked feature in modern civilization. The questions arise, "What is the cause of this? and what the remedies therefor?"

Charles De Young's will has been admitted to probate in San Francisco. It recites that he owned twelve-eighteenths of the San Francisco Chronicle. He bequeaths the profits of three-eighteenths to his mother as long as she lives, and leaves the remainder to his sisters Amanda and Laura, and their children, and to the wife of his brother Gustave. The will makes several minor bequests to his nieces and nephews and to his favorites on the Chronicle's force.

Gov. Murray, the recently-appointed Executive of Utah, delivered a Fourth-of-July oration, in which he took occasion to outline his policy toward the Mormons. He said that the tree of liberty had grown broad enough to shelter all patriots, native and naturalized, still was rich enough in timber to furnish scaffolds and coffins for all who conspire against the constitution or violate the written laws. He then went on to say that until Utah had abjured Mormonism there was no possibility that it could become a State.

The public debt in April, 1866, was $2,827,000,000, exclusive of items not then ascertained, but afterward charged against the Government, which brought the total up to $3,000,000,000. This gave us a debt of $85.71 for every man, woman and child in the country. The debt is now, after deducting cash in the treasury, $1,942,172,000 or more than $1,000,000,000 less than at the close of the war. On the basis of a population of 48,000,000 (Gen. Walker's estimate), the per capita is $40.45. We have been reducing the burden of debt, practically, by increasing the population as well as by actual payment.

Among the historical characters of Utah and Mormonism is the notorious Bill Hickman. He was with John D. Lee and Rockwell as a participant in the Mountain Meadow massacre, and was known in the Mormon Church as a man of peculiar unction when it came to hunting down and destroying offensive Gentiles. At the trial of the participants in the Mountain Meadow massacre Hickman turned State's evidence to save his life, and since then has been able to continue in existence only by keeping under the protecting wing of the United States military authorities at Camp Douglas, near Salt Lake City, where he is now domiciled.

Vanderbilt draws the interest on one-eleventh of the registered bonded indebtedness of the United States. It's perfectly natural under the circumstances that his daughter should marry a Lord, and not a perfectly reputable Lord at that. The rumor is that the youngest Miss Vanderbilt is now betrothed to Viscount Dupplin, son and heir of the Earl of Kinnoull, and a nephew of the Duke of Beaufort. Lord Dupplin has been a good deal on the turf. He was married in 1871 to a daughter of the late Earl of Fife, and divorced from her in 1876.

Thomas Deford, who lives near Baltimore, relates a first-class snake story, wherein a water snake, fifteen inches long, which was found imbedded in a cake of ice gathered perhaps eighteen months ago, was restored to life when exposed to the sun. The ice was taken from the ice house on the place, and the snake was seen in the center of a large block. It was cut out with a pick and was stiff as a bone. When exposed to the sun for some minutes, however, it began to wiggle, and after a time started off for the grass. It was captured and placed alive in a large glass bottle, and will be shown to the incredulous.

The burial of a Chinaman at Virginia City, Nev., attracted much attention from the citizens. The deceased Celestial was a Mason, and was buried with the honors and customs of the order in Fatherland. A noisy, discordant (native) brass band led the procession, made up of Mongolians wearing badges and other insignia of the fraternity, followed by the hearse and a large covered wagon, in which were seated a number of feminine Chinese musicians. Their instruments consisted of fiddles, drums, guitars, cymbals, gongs, and each made as much racket as possible, without the least regard to harmony. The noise is represented as deafening, and would wake anything not dead. Behind the Chinese musicians came a van loaded with roast pig and other delicacies, edible and potable, to be left at the grave for the benefit of the deceased. Strips of paper, pierced in three places with crescent-shaped holes, in rows of five, were strewed by thousands along the route—the custom under such circumstances.

A Defaulter's Bold Method.

The method by which William Charles Brown stole $5,700 from the Rutland (Vt.) Bank, of which he is teller, is a serious one. Most of its customers live at a distance from the bank, and are infrequent visitors. If they wished to deposit $500 they would hand it to Brown, he would make out a deposit ticket for $300, put $200 in his pocket, enter $500 on the depositor's pass-book, and for a time both accounts would show correctly. When the book-keeper balanced both accounts, then, of course, the $200 discrepancy would appear. This "error" on the pass-book would be changed by the book-keeper, the 5 to a 3, then the book would balance. Before the pass-book was delivered to the owner Brown would take it and credit $200 "error," and when the owner came he would say, "I have discovered an error," etc.; "that $300 should have been $500. When you get home you see if it is not so." The owner would take it home, find it correct, and praise the teller as an honest young man. This has been going on for over a year, and was only discovered by an accident. As his bondsmen are relatives Brown will not be prosecuted.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Miss Fanny Davenport is characterized to a marked degree by the old Davenport dramatic instinct. Private letters from her reveal latent enthusiasm for her art, which promise vitality in her work next season. It is predicted that Miss Davenport will make a marked success of the new play, in which she is to appear in the role of an English Jewess. In writing the play, Miss Dickinson made a thorough study of Miss Davenport's peculiar abilities, and has adapted the dramatization to bring these out in the best light.

AGRICULTURAL.

Midsummer Work on the Farm.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

Late potatoes will need constant watching for the Beetle, which should not be allowed to do any damage; kill the insects at their first appearance by an application of poison.

Buckwheat as a late crop to fill out with, when another has been removed or failed to grow, can be sown up to the middle of the month. A bushel of seed per acre is an abundance to sow.

Cleanliness.—The utmost neatness should be exercised about the premises in the hot weather. Garbage of every kind should be disposed of before it becomes decayed and is giving off a bad odor.

Poultry.—Chickens hatched this month will, if well cared for, be large enough to get through the winter safely. It is not best to set any hens after July. Vermin breed very fast in hot weather, and great cleanliness is necessary.

Sheep can care for themselves if they have a shady pasture supplied with good water. The matter of a ram to be used later in the season should be considered now and secured in time, if not already on hand. A full-blood will often improve the flock.

Meadows.—As soon as may be, after the hay is gathered, give the meadows a good top dressing of fine manure. This will produce a thick bottom growth to shade the ground and prevent the soil from drying up and injuring the roots of the grasses.

Wheat.—When wheat follows oats in the rotation, the stubble may be stirred with a cultivator to give the scattering oats a chance to sprout before plowing for the wheat crop. If the oat crop is harvested before the grain is fully ripe, as it should be, there is less need of this precaution.

Water Supply.—An abundant supply of pure water is essential to keep animals in a healthy and thriving condition. The importance of pure water for animals is too often overlooked. Impure water is a fruitful source of disease to animals as well as man, and the quality of milk is impaired when cows are compelled to drink at stagnant pools.

Growing Seed Corn.—It has been conclusively shown that any grain can be improved by a careful and continued selection of the seed. This is especially true of corn—and it is a grain in which a selection can be most easily and thoroughly carried out. Any farmer can select a given portion of his corn field for seed, and can thin, remove suckers, poor stalks—those with imperfect ears, etc., and in that way increase the growth of the best ears, with sound and vitally strong gain.

Summer Fallow.—A summer fallow was formerly considered the proper preparation for a wheat crop. Where hoed crops are introduced into a regular rotation of crops, the desired cleaning of the land and pulverization of the soil may be effected without resorting to the more expensive method of fallowing. This being the case, the increase in the amount of roots grown will diminish the acreage devoted to summer fallow.

Pigs.—A run in a good clover stubble will be beneficial. The yards should be kept as clean as possible. A quantity of copperas sprinkled about the pens will deodorize and disinfect the place very satisfactorily and cheaply. Young pigs should be pushed now if they are for early market. A rapid growth secured now is of the greatest importance. If the stock is not what is desired begin to improve it at once by securing a pure-blood boar of some good breed to use in the herd.

Corn.—The cultivator should be kept going, to both kill the weeds and pulverize the soil and keep it damp and mellow. When the corn gets large the horse should be muzzled that he may not be nibbling at the corn and forget his work among the abundant green fodder. It should be kept in mind that the work of cultivating the corn crop has a great influence upon the growth of the crops that are to follow. The full returns for work done in the corn field are not all in when the corn is gathered, a point that should always be borne in mind.

Harvesting.—The work of harvesting the wheat, oats, barley, etc., should be begun before the grain is fully ripe, as it is less liable to shrink and is therefore heavier and of a better quality. The straw is worth more if the crop is cut before the grain is fully ripe, an important consideration on every farm where straw is used for fodder. There is also less waste from the shelling of the grain in the process of harvesting; while the work can be performed without that hurry and rush which must be experienced if the grain is left until later. A delay from unfavorable weather does not involve a serious loss when the work is begun early, and in season.

Horses need good care in these hot days of mid-summer. They should be kept clean by frequent currying and occasional washing of the legs and feet. The flies will cause the most inconvenience, and while working in the field some protection from them in the shape of nets or thin blankets (sheets) is a great comfort to the animals. Keep the stables clean that they may not harbor flies or develope any bad odors. Horses that are at regular farm work need good food—better than grass alone will give. Oats or ground feed of some kind must supplement the pasture at night.

Cows giving milk should not be allowed to fall off in quantity from insufficient feed. It is more difficult to increase the flow of milk after a shrinkage from lack of full feed than to keep up a high activity of the secretion by artificial feed. When the habit of diminished milk secretion at a particular time of year is established, as it will be by repetition, it is not always easy to prevent it entirely by liberal feeding. The habit will also be transmitted to the offspring as a family characteristic that will diminish the value of the animal as a producer of milk. Give the cows extra feed so soon as the pasture begins to get short.

An Old Newspaper.

The old Gazette de France is the oldest Parisian paper. It was founded by Theophraste Renaudot, and its first number appeared on May 30, 1631. Published at the beginning but once a week, the Gazette was more devoted to advertisements than to current affairs and politics. Although coldly looked upon by Princes and the state, the four-page quarto publication was eagerly patronized by the middle* classes. The Gazette was sold in the principal streets of the capital, and the venders and the editors were indiscriminately called gazettiers. After having been weekly for more than a century, and bi-weekly since 1762, the Gazette de France has been a daily since May 1, 1792.

HOUSEKEEPERS' HELPS.

Pineapple Water Ice.—Peel and pound a pineapple and pass through a fine sieve, add the juice of one or two lemons with a gill of water and sugar or sirup to taste; strain into the freezing pot.

An infallible remedy for a rusting tea-kettle, says an exchange, is to brown coffee in it. A thorough washing of soap and water will remove all the odor and smoke of the coffee, and leave the kettle smooth and free from rust.

Rice Chicken Pie.—Cover the bottom of a pudding dish with slices of broiled ham; cut up a broiled chicken and nearly fill the dish; pour in gravy or melted butter to fill the dish; add chopped onions, if you like, or a little curry powder, which is better; then add boiled rice to fill all interstices and to cover the top thick. Bake it for one-half to three-quarters of an hour.

New Carrots with Cream.—Trim a quantity of the smallest new carrots that can be obtained, and boil them in salted water. When done, drain off the water. Melt one ounce of butter in a saucepan, add to it a desert-spoonful of flour, pepper, salt, grated nutmeg, a pinch of powdered sugar, and a small quantity of cream. Put in the carrots, simmer gently a few minutes, and serve.

The following process is recommended for cleaning white Shetland shawls. Put the soiled article into a large bowl; throw over it half a teacupful of flour, "dry," rub thoroughly, as if washing, then thoroughly shake out the flour. If the article is not clean repeat the process in clean flour. Articles cleaned by this process will retain a new look as long as there is a thread left.

Rhubarb Tartlets.—Make a short paste with one white and three yelks of eggs, one ounce of sugar, one ounce of butter, a pinch of salt, and flour quantity sufficient; work it lightly, roll it out to the thickness of a quarter of an inch. Line some patty-pans with it, fill them with uncooked rice to keep their shape, and bake them in a moderate oven till done. Remove the rice, and fill the tartlets with rhubarb, stewed with plenty of sugar and a dish of lemon-juice, and at the top put a heaped spoonful of whipped cream.

Cherry Pudding.—One quart of scalded milk, not quite a pint of Indian meal, a scant half pint of sifted flour, four well-beaten eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a teaspoonful of salt and a pint of whole, ripe cherries. Let the milk stand after heating until tepid; stir in the meal and flour, removing a table-spoonful to mix the baking-powder with; add the eggs and salt, then the cherries and baking-powder. Turn into a pudding-mold or bag and steam two hours. Eat with sugar and cream or butter sauce.

Sponge Plantation.

For many years the sponge-fishers of the Mediterranean have carried on their avocations so recklessly that there is reason to fear the supplies from the great sea (which yields the best article) will practically cease unless means are adopted at once to prevent the men from destroying—as they do at present in countless numbers—the young animals while securing the full grown victims. Meantime Dr. Brehm, the illustrious naturalist, has suggested a plan for raising sponges artificially. Selecting a few hundred specimens, he divided them into several thousand small pieces, fastened seperately into perforated cases, which were then towed out to the bay of Socolizza. He then attached the pieces to a wooden framework, which was then lowered in a shady spot to a proper depth. In a few months the sponges had grown to the size of good natural ones, exhibiting their distinctive black color. The authorities regarded his scheme with favor, but the fishers, with that ignorent prejudice which has so often delayed sound reform in almost every industry, attacked the plantation by night, destroyed the frames and made off with two thousand sponges. By substituting copper wire for woodwork, Dr. Brehm immediately checkmated the teredo, whose ravages in woodwork are notorious; and by fastening the sponges to stones it was observed that they speedily attached themselves firmly Healthfulness of Fruit.

Fruit need not be considered a luxury while apples are in the market; and they possess nourishing and medicinal properties of no mean order. This is not a new statement, but it is one that will bear repeating. It has been said, with a good deal of force, that a truth has to be proclaimed seven hundred times in the English Parliament before the least attention is paid to it. It is known among editors, as it is among advertisers, that a similar rule prevails with respect to what is published in the newspapers. A raw, mellow apple is ordinarily digested in an hour and a half, while a boiled cabbage requires five hours; and again, on authority, "apples, if eaten with breakfast, omitting meals for the time, have an admirable effect on the system, removing indigestion, correcting the acidities of the stomach and cooling every febrile tendency."

The Oleander.

This beautiful plant, when under proper culture, is truly a gem among flowers. The best way to root cuttings is in a bottle of rain water set in the window. The cuttings should be no deeper in the water than half way up to the second joint, and when the rootlets get to be half an inch long, carefully put in rich, sandy loam. After the plant blooms, cut back to within a foot or fifteen inches of the ground, when three branches will come out; let them grow until it again blossoms; after which cut them all back about six inches from the main stalk, and every time it blooms repeat cutting back, and in a few years a very beautiful plant will be the result; with proper care it will grow more beautiful with age.

A man in New York was killed recently by a blow on the head from a nutcracker. Must have been a big nutcracker to have cracked a cocoanut.

THE EARTH'S CHANGES.

Geographical Convulsions in Progress All the Time, Even in Our Own Day.

[From Winchell's "Pre-Adamite."]

The mystery and the magnitude of geological changes seem to relegate them to the remote ages of convulsion and cataclysm. Let us not be frightened. We are in the midst of great changes, and are scarcely conscious of it. We have seen worlds in flames, and have felt a comet strike the earth. We have seen the whole coast of South America lifted up bodily ten or fifteen feet and let down again in an hour. We have seen the Andes sink 220 feet in seventy years. The Chinese possess authentic records of changes in the location of great rivers—especially the Hoang-ho. This river has changed its mouth two or three times. Sometimes it discharges its waters into the Gulf of Pechili and sometimes into the Yellow sea. * * Vast transpositions have also taken place in the coast line of China. The ancient capital, located, in all probability, in an accessible position near the center of the empire, has now become nearly surrounded by water, and its site is on the peninsula of Corea. We have seen the glaciers make progress in their retreat and disappearance. An ice-peak of the Tyrolese Alps has lowered eighteen and a half feet in a few years. The Mer de Glace is a hundred feet lower or thinner than it was thirty years ago. At Chamounix I conversed with the chief of the guides, an old man who had recorded the phases of the glaciers for more than fifty years. He pointed out the limits of the Mer de Glace and Glacier des Bossons in 1818, 1819 and 1820. He showed me huge bowlders which had formerly been deposited in the valleys near the termini of these glaciers. He pointed out the striations made on the bounding walls of the glacier valleys. From these records I perceived that these two great glaciers have receded in fifty years not less than half a mile, and the volume of ice is lowered at least two hundred feet. From the foot of the Mer de Glace I traced the footsteps of the receding glacier down the valley of the Arveiron—down the valley of the Arve—down the Arve all the way to Geneva. Then I felt that I also had gazed on the ancient glaciers. I had seen how their stupendous work had been done. I had come upon the earth in time to see the continental glaciers of Europe on their retreat up the gorges of the Alps. I felt the Stone Folk drawn down in time toward our own times. I could look over the abyss of years, and seize its span in my comprehension. We are the witnesses of the retreat of the glaciers. When the Stone Folk came to Europe the southern border of the continental ice field was, perhaps, on the Rhine; now it is in Russia and Siberia and Greenland. Nor have the veritable glaciers become extinct from the United States. In the deep gulches of the Sierra Nevada are sundry remnants of a glacier once continent-wide. On these repositories of ancient ice has accumulated the "dust of ages," to wich the cosmical dust which comes to us out of the depths of space has made contributions not inconsiderable. But they lay there in their senescence, to proclaim a chapter of past events in American history—fossil glaciers, as eloquent as a fossil world. The truth is, we are not so far out of the dust and smoke of antiquity as we had supposed. Antiquity is at our doors. The rubbish of geological revolutions is strewed about our feet. We are in the midst of geological history. The Indian saw Lake Michigan spread its waters over Illinois. We have seen cities grow up where our children knew only a swamp; and our children will see the swamp usurp the site of the lake which nourishes it.

American Nervousness.

It is a recognized fact that extreme nervousness is more common to America than elsewhere, owing to various causes, climatic and otherwise. Long neglected nervous exhaustion generally ends in sleeplessness. When this distressing phenomenon is referrable to neurasthenia it can and should be cured without recourse to any powerful anodynes or narcotics. Other familiar sequences of the same nervous malady are mental depression and the form of insanity known as melancholia. A still more frequent outcome of nervous exhaustion is a tendency to inebriety. The neurasthenic state, excited exposure to heat, or developed, as it so often is, by the shock of bereavement or the rack of financial anxieties, may engender an irresistible desire for indulgence in alcoholic liquors or opium. A curious sequel of nervous exhaustion is hay fever, which, philosophically analyzed, is simply, we are assured, a nervous idiosyncrasy, sensitive to some one or many external irritants, of which pollen, sunlight, heat, dust, foul air, and smoke are the most familiar. For exhaustion of the brain vigorous out-door exercise is indispensable; as regards food, abstinence from starch and sugars, and in their place the freest use permitted by the digestive organs of fats and oils, is pronounced a potent adjunct to the medical treatment of nervous disorders. Indeed, one of the great wants of the day is an increase of fat in our nourishment. Our fathers could eat pork and digest it, but since it has been, for the most part, banished from the table, we are suffering in all directions for want of fat. Arsenic, cannabis indica, and citrate of caffeine, ergot, are all useful medicines in the treatment of nervousness.

A Celestial Revelation.

Mr. Goober—as the story goes—lived in the Mormon country. He had but one wife, and never thought of taking any more till one day an elder told him it was his religious duty to seal unto himself a few others. Mr. Goober went home and sadly informed his wife of what the elder had said, and Mrs. Goober said she had no objection, provided the elder would come round and argue the case with her piously. Goober told the elder, and the elder dropped around. He smiled sweetly as Mrs. Goober advanced to meet him. The next thing he knew he was skipping around the room with his coat slit up the back and his hat knocked into pi, while Mrs. Goober wielded the broomstick. He finally jumped out of a window, and escaped with his life, a sadder and a wiser man. The next time he met Goober he told him he had had a celestial revelation by which Goober was relieved from the necessity of taking any more wives—Mrs. Goober would count for almost 1,000 in the New Jerusalem.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Seminal Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11th, 1879.—The remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for eight years past.

Chicago, Aug. 14, 1879.—I am thoroughly cured and feel tip top. The young man in the country is getting better.

Missouri, Sept. 18, 1879.—I received so much benefit from the use of your remedies that I want to try them in another case. This is of long standing, and will need something very strong.

Mich., Jan. 20, 1879.—I have used up your package of medicine; send me another as soon as possible. That package stopped all apparent trouble, but there is a weakness yet, and I wish you would prepare this lot for the cure of that.

Iowa, Oct. 18th, 1879.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes of a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine, and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Enclosed please find $ for which please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 28th, 1879.—Please forward me at once another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, 1879.—Last January we got from you a box of your remedy, for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way, and wish by return mail one No. 2 box.

Republican Conventions.

CONGRESSIONAL.

The republicans of the twelfth congressional district, met in convention at Auburn last Friday, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for congress. The convention was organized by the selection of Mr. Prickett, of Noble county, as chairman, Mr. J. U. Miller, of the Steuben Republican, as secretary and the republican editors of the district as assistant secretaries. Upon motion of Mr. R. M. Lockhart, of Waterloo, Hon. Robert S. Taylor, of Fort Wayne, was nominated by acclamation. The nominee was called for, and responded in an oily speech, full of misstatements unbecoming a gentleman of his knowledge and ability; for instance, he asserted with apparent sincerity that "If General Garfield shall surrender to General Hancock on the 9th of next November, it will be required of him, and of us, to let the southern men govern both south and north. The confederate administration which was dispersed at Richmond, will re-assemble at Washington, triumphant at last." Mr. Taylor's address was not received with much show of enthusiasm on the part of the audience. He was followed by Hon. L. M. Ninde, in one of his characteristic efforts, in which he alluded to Hancock as "the tail of the southern dog," and said he had no fault to find with the hanging of Mrs. Surratt, but was sorry that Hancock did not hang the fellows who are going to vote for him, which remark seemed to be seconded by the republicans present. Will democrats vote for republicans who applaud such an exhibition of hatred and bitterness? We think not. Mr. Ninde was followed by Judge Morris, Judge Best, R. S. Robertson, et al.,* all of whom endorsed what had been said by Messrs. Taylor and Ninde. Garfield's name was only mentioned once or twice during the convention. During the speaking there were frequent calls for Mr. Congdon, but that gentleman could not be induced to come forward until Bobbie Stratton, the chairman of the district committee, said he wanted the convention to hear from Mr. Congdon, the editor of a greenback paper, in order to satisfy all present that Mr. Congdon is still a reliable republican. This unmasking was not intended by Bobbie, but it slipped out nevertheless, that Mr. Congdon is a reliable republican, the same as most other republican greenbackers. There being no further business the convention adjourned to allow the JUDICIAL CONVENTION of the 35th district to occupy the room. See proceedings on first page of this paper.

SENATORIAL CONVENTION.

After the adjournment of the judicial convention, representatives from the counties of DeKalb and Steuben organized by the election of Jas. Rose, chairman, and ——, secretary. For joint-senator Frank Macartney and D. R. Best were named, both of Steuben county, Mr. Macartney was nominated on the first ballot, and the convention adjourned.

Sure Northern States.

Indiana is one of them. The contest for her vote will be one of the most lively. The odds are not so great as to prevent the struggle from being one of the most interesting, but the democracy will win. It is not wise to be so cock-sure as to beget that listlessness which might invite defeat. Let us glance at the horoscope, take courage from the outlook, and push on the column!

The majority of Tilden over Hayes in this state, in 1876, was 5,515. This was when Morton lived. What republican would not then tell you that Morton's voice and vim were worth to the republicans at least 5,000 men? Two years ago the plurality of the democracy over the republicans was 13,736. The greenbackers cast 39,448 votes. The total vote was some 17,000 short of that cast in 1876. Upon a full vote this year—with a more or less of an inclination by the nationals to retrace their steps to the ranks of one or the other of the two great parties, and with a mono-metalist, or single, gold-standard, republican candidate in the field—it cannot well be questioned that the prospect of the democracy having a majority over the republicans in this state of from 7,000 to 10,000, is excellent. With all the profligate expenditure and desperate shifts the republicans may resort to, the gallant Hoosier Democracy, by proper effort on their part may reasonably count on at least the former figure.

Tilden and Hendricks carried New York by 32,000. At the state election since then, the division of the democracy resulted in the election of a republican governor. But the joint vote of the democracy for their two candidates was 10,000 majority over all the other candidates and constituted a plurality of some 35,000 (giving round numbers in both cases) over the republican candidate. Although nothing like a full vote was polled, there was thus an increase of the democratic, as compared with the opposition vote, of about 3,000. Who can doubt that, with closed ranks and the prevalent spirit, not merely of harmony, but the most intense reciprocal enthusiasm, that the glorious Empire State will hand over her 35 votes to Hancock and English?

The tune that little Connecticut struck up in 1876 was 2,900 majority for Tilden. New Jersey chimed in with 12,000 and has since inceased it a thousand more on that other brave soldier-statesman, McClellan, for governor. With the issues and candidates now before them, why should it be apprehended that these states will falter now? Then there is California and Oregon, as well as Nevada, about ready to reach over and strike hands with them across the continent. And long-deluded, ring-robbed and suffering Pennsylvania!—what of her? The Cameron-Hartrauft gang, it is true, still held her in their venal grip in 1876, and counted out for Hayes 17,000, and odd, more votes than were given for Tilden. Her pride now is in the glory of her gallant son, who is the democratic candidate. The fact that thousands of her sons fought under him in many a hotly-contested battle, and can bear witness to his dauntless bravery, and glow with admiration, equally, for his skill in statesmanship as in arms—that masses of them are disgusted with the corruptions of the cormorants who have been fattening on her resources—all these conspire to fire her with the generous purpose to become once more the keystone of the democratic arch. That she may not aid to crown with triumph her own soldier-statesman is by no means certain. It only requires the numbers composing a good-sized division to tell the story. Nine thousand changed, in a total vote of 758,000, making less than three-fourths of one per cent, or less than that with a reasonable excess of the new vote in our favor, will serve to wheel old Pennsylvania into line in the democratic column.

But then, in addition to these sure and reasonably certain states, are Wisconsin, Illinois and Ohio. By no means should these be given over to the adversary. The former is fairly debatable; Illinois is good fighting ground on whose prairies the campfires are everywhere being started up most brightly. Scarcely a single ratification meeting is held there at which pronounced republicans do not come out and proclaim their adhesion. In Ohio a proportionate deduction from the republicans of a tithe of the vote by which Garfield ran behind Hayes, in his own district in 1876, will give the state, this year, overwhelmingly to the democracy. Garfield ran behind between 2,000 and 3,000, and the net majority of Hayes was 7,516.

So it is then! By its bayonet rule, its persistent efforts to put the white under the heel of the black race, and its shameless corruption and carpet-bag thievery, the republican party has Hancockized 138 electoral votes in favor of the democracy. With these, New York and Indiana make three more than are necessary; New York, New Jersey and Connecticut make three more than are necessary; or Pennsylvania, Indiana and Connecticut accomplish the same result.

Leaving out of the calculation, entirely, the broad margin of debatable states, of which we shall certainly have several, even at this early day, we can, therefore, safely bid the democracy, both young and old, "All hail!" Put on the complete armor, boys, of truth and justice, and go forth to duty. With proper effort you may feel cocksure; or, what is all the same, the result will be—Hancock sure!

R. S. T.,

Which the same stands for Republican Standing Target, alias R. S. Taylor. Robert was again put up by a small squad of stalwarts assembled at this place, on Friday last, to be again shot at by the democracy—this time of the new district. Robert, by the way, is emphatically a stalwart among the stalwarts. While he would fain have us believe that, like the excellent Mr. Turveydrop in Dickens' Bleak House, he is a perfect "master of deportment," reaching gently out his soft, velvety palms in such manner as to indicate that with the interior of his metacarpus he is about to anoint with heavenly blessings friend and foe alike, yet, the "old Adam" will perforce work out despite all his insidious craftiness, and the very gall of bitterness is as nothing compared to the illy sugar-coated malevolence of his stalwartism toward all those who have failed in the south, in time of peace, to bow down in worship of the rule of the bayonet, sing hosannahs to fraudulent returning boards, or join hands in carpet-bag thievery.

Robert will be reminded, bye-and-bye, that the war is in reality over—that the religion of hate is about to be brought to an end, and that the republican party is about to be brought to account for its misdeeds.

DEATH ON THE RAIL.

A TRAIN LOAD OF INDIANAPOLIS EXCURSIONISTS THROWN FROM THE TRACK NEAR FORT WAYNE.

One Man Killed and Quite a Number Seriously Injured—Full account of the Disaster.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

On last Saturday night a lively party, consisting of 236 persons, left the Union depot over the I., P. and C. road to spend a day at Put-in-Bay. The party arrived safely at Toledo, and spent a pleasant day on the island. The returning train, consisting of an engine, baggage-car, four coaches, a reclining-chair car and a sleeping-coach, left Toledo over the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific road at 9:30 on Sunday night. Everything went well with the train until about 12:35 o'clock Sunday night, when a broken rail was struck at a point about twenty-five miles from Fort Wayne and about three miles from Knox station. At this point there is an embankment between five and seven feet high, with a little sluggish stream running along on each side. The road-bed is stone ballast and the track in splendid condition, and the train was running at about thirty miles an hour. When the broken rail was struck the engine and baggage-car passed over in safety, and the smoking-car, three coaches and chair-car ran over the ties for about 150 feet, when they went over the embankment. The first, or smoking-car, was the worst wrecked, and in it was Mr. Stewart, of Noblesville, the only man killed. It rolled over twice, and it was so badly wrecked that it looked as if it had been struck by lightning. The next coach was also badly wrecked, and was thrown the farthest from the track. The next two were but little damaged, while the chair car, which belongs to the I., B. and W. road, was but little hurt on the outside, but the inside was badly damaged, and in this was Mr. Walter Rivers and several others, who were quite severely injured. The sleeping-car, which was the only one in the train not furnished with a Miller platform and coupler, remained on the track, the terrible weight of that part of the train which went over the embankment breaking the coupling-link, which snapped like a piece of cord, and those who were sleeping soundly on the inside were spared from a horrible death. When the train left the track every light throughout the train went out, and all was in total darkness. As soon as the accident happened, Conductor Gates, and those who were not injured, set about helping the unfortunate people in the coaches that had gone down the embankment. Ladies were taken from under the broken timbers of the mashed coaches, men were found in all kinds of uncomfortable positions, and the ready hands of the willing helpers soon had them all out of their perilous positions, and those who were most seriously wounded were put upon cots and taken to the top of the embankment, and made as comfortable as possible. Pieces of the tin roofs of the demolished cars were held over the badly wounded to shield them from the drenching rain that was falling, and many who were able to be moved were taken to the sleeping-coach and provided with easy quarters. The groans and cries of the wounded were heart-rending, and the glare of the bonfires which had been built of parts of the wreck made a sad and gloomy scene. The demolished train, as it laid at the foot of the slight incline, looked as if a hundred persons might have been killed, so completely was it smashed. After every one had been taken from the coaches that had left the track, the conductor boarded the engine and went to Antwerp and telegraphed to Fort Wayne for medical aid, which arrived at the scene of the disaster on a special train at about 3 o'clock. The corps of physicians quickly set to work, and with the aid of several kind-hearted lady passengers soon had the unfortunate in as comfortable positions as possible, and their wounded attended to as well as could be expected under the circumstances. It was then learned that the following persons were injured:

Walter H. Rivers, the rental agent of Hon. W. English, residing at No. 75 west Georgia street, sustained a serious injury of the spine and was badly cut about the head.

Walter C. Newcomb, son of 'Squire W. C. Newcomb, received several internal injuries and received several serious bruises about the head and face.

H. Minter, the well-known cooper, received internal injuries that will more than likely prove fatal.

Charles Hindis, an attache of the Daily German Telegraph, of this city, was also injured internally.

James Hurst, a machinist of Peru, was quite badly hurt, and was taken to his home.

A. M. Kimball, of Peru, had an arm broken and was cut about the head.

Sophia Siff, a young lady of this city, who accompanied Mr. Minter, received several painful injuries.

J. C. Gunn, of Westfield, received internal injuries that may prove fatal.

John Rauch, the well-known cigar manufacturer of west Washington street, was badly bruised, and will be laid up for a few days.

Frank McIntyre, son of John McIntyre, the coal merchant, received some painful bruises about the shoulders and back.

J. P. Wheeler, of Westfield, was quite badly hurt about the head.

Henry Elvin, of Peru, received painful hurts on different parts of the body.

J. P. Black, August Dorphers, Lewis Adams, William Wellman, R. B. Braden, Amos P. Ross and Fred. F. Johnston, of this city, were more or less injured.

G. V. Pontious and J. C. Jones, of Noblesville, were slightly bruised.

THE ONLY PERSON KILLED

was Edward Stewart, of Noblesville, who was in the smoking-car. His body was found in the ditch or stream, wedged under the roof of the coach, with his face in the water, and it is not positively known whether he was killed by the turning over of the coach, or whether he was strangled to death from having his head pressed under the water. He has for several years been employed as head clerk in Swain's grocery at Noblesville, and was regarded as a first-class young man. He leaves an aged mother to mourn his death.

Shortly after the arrival of the physicians, another special train with Superintendent Wade, of the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific road, on board, arrived, and the body of Mr. Stewart, those injured and the unhurt passengers were placed on board and taken to Fort Wayne, where breakfast was furnished by the officials of the road and everything done for the comfort of the wounded. It was here found that Messrs. Minter and Hindis were too severely injured to return home, and they were taken to the hospital. Those from Peru and other points were sent home, and the Indianapolis party arrived in this city a few minutes after 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The train was met at the Union depot by a crowd, among which were many relatives and friends of those known to be on the train, and many were the sobs of the mother over her child and the warm grasp of the hands of friends.

Messrs. Rivers and Newcomb were removed to their homes, and at a late hour last night they were both resting easily with every prospect of their speedy recovery.

Mr. J. N. Martin, of Switz City, Ind., and his two daughters, who were on board of the fatal train, and who were more or less bruised, took a rest at the Spencer house. Every one on board the train speaks in the highest terms of the conduct and treatment of the train men and officials of the Wabash and I., P. and C. roads. Among the officials of the latter road, who deserve credit for their kind treatment of the wounded, are E. C. Murphy, superintended, and C. H. Rockwell, general superintendent, general passenger and ticket agent.

Local and Miscellaneous

A Happy Throng.

There was a sound of revelry by night—Monday night—and DeKalb's county seat had gathered then her numerous beauties and her other fellows, besides a number from abroad. It was at the residence of John L. Davis, and was a young folks' party given to Fred, no married people being allowed within two blocks of the house. To say that it was "an enjoyable affair" would be a tame expression; it was more than that, because there were pretty girls, ice-cream, several homely but intelligent gentlemen, lemonade, more maidens, dancing, several kinds of kisses (candy and otherwise), music and other refreshments without limit.

The outsiders who joined in the festivities will doubtless find their names hereto tied on, but if not, they will consider it an intentional slight on our part. From Fort Wayne there were Misses Ada Orff, Flora Orff, Pauline Ward, Lida Lowry, Annie Ward and Mr. Frank Orff. From Waterloo there were Misses Della Johnson, Jennie McClellan, Fannie Clark, Emma Waterman and Frankie Lemon, offset on the male side by Messrs. W. B. Johnson, M. W. Johnson and Clark Long. Aside from these, there were Misses Annie Hampton, of Richmond, Metta Ferris, of Fostoria, Grace Fenneman, of Tiffin, Miss Carpenter, of Antwerp, Messrs. Will. Shryock, of Huntertown, and Tom Chamberlain, of Detroit.

To sum it all up, it was one of the chief society events of this season in Auburn, and will long be remembered as such.

Clear as Mud.

John C. Henry, the notion man, is quite a joker. He has recently put up a small job on some of our citizens—about two of them—which will readily be understood by a few of the wise ones; but to the rest it will be about as clear as mud, and they can gently pass it by. The following postal, addressed to John L. Davis, was received by that gentleman Tuesday; it speaks volumes to those who can "tumble to the racket," so to speak:

ORLAND, IND., July 20, '80

DEAR SIR: Will you please inquire of W. J. Austin, of your place, what he will charge me for the right of Steuben county for his celebrated New York Book? If you can aid me in effecting a trade with him, I will give you a good commission. Yours &c.,

W. W. BIRCH.

Both parties interested in this interesting document are satisfied that John Henry is the instigator of the plot, and they will make it pleasant for him when he gets around home again.

Now Listen.

Tom Scott, our worthy marshal, has a rooster up at his place which, according to Tom's little story, must have originally been intended for a hen. Nearly everybody has heard of "crowing hens," that "always come to some bad end," but a setting rooster gets the prize and must be set down as a genuine queeriosity. Tom will make affidavit that he has a chicken of the rooster sex, one year old, which has for an associate one good-natured hen, and when the hen isn't busy laying eggs the rooster puts in his leisure moments in trying to hatch them out; in other words, the hen drops an egg in the nest each day, and the gentleman chicken sits on them, taking full as much interest in the business as any well educate[illegible] hen possibly could. He now has eight eggs [illegible] is keeping, out of which he is doing his [illegible] best to manufacture some [illegible] to his little family.

A Dove [illegible]

It is generally conceded that the dove is a gentle bird that harms no living thing, most of its time being devoted to billing and cooing; but one of these creatures fluttered around in town, Saturday evening, to such an unusual extent that several persons' lives were endangered. To curtail a long tale, his name was James Dove, and he was playing pool in Joe Beuglot's saloon, he got into a dispute with some young man who works in Snyder's spoke-factory; the discussion waxed warm and wound up with a racket, in which the Dove got a crack over the right wing with a billiard cue and the spoke-factory was handed down a stunning request to close the right window, which it did. Here the game closed, time was called, and it was considered a draw. No funeral and no arrests.

A Baker's Dozen.

The above expression is beautifully illustrative of the "eternal fitness of things," in the case at hand, as it harmonizes exactly with the state of affairs at Auburn Junction, Chris. Baker and wife having recently become joint proprietors of a new little Baker—not by occupation, but by name. It is a 12-pound girl, and is the thirteenth addition to the Baker family, which is about as near a Baker's dozen as we can figure it out. Chris. has fought nobly for the junction, having added to its population as rapidly as is consistent with the laws of nature, and the residents of that railroad suburb ought to deed him all the corner lots in the place.

—By an oversight, we neglected to mention last week that W. H. Dills was mean enough to furnish us the material facts concerning the old people of the county, as taken from the enumerator's books in the clerk's office; but he has our thanks, all the same.

—The Presbyterian and Methodist churches of this place will join in an excursion to Rome City, over the B. & O. railroad, starting from Hicksville and including intermediate points, on Tuesday, August 10. Full particulars will be given next week.

—The unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice at this place, for the week ending July 17, are as follows:

Charlie Aufrecht,	Theo. B. Goosen,
Josie Burdue,	Annie M. Spore,
Sarah Dunst,	Patrick Welsh.

JOS. RAINIER, Postmaster.

—Al. Case, whose home is here in Auburn and who is well known to all the old-time citizens, is home from Ann Arbor spending his summer vacation. He is a student there, in the classical course, and will return in September, having been there two years of the six years' course.

—The young ladies of Auburn take justifiable exception to the young gentleman's manner of salutation on the street. Every gentleman, if not so taught by natural instincts, should learn from etiquette that it is expected of him to raise his hat to a lady, under all circumstances.

—Thursday morning of last week, at an early hour, Dr. Allyn managed to tumble his horse and buggy down an embankment, helter skelter, by reason of which the doctor now wears a cane in his meanderings. The cause of the accident is supposed to have been a misplaced switch.

—The new safe put in Jos. Abright's jewelry store, Thursday of last week, is a perfect beauty in every respect; it is from the manufactory of McNeale & Urban, Cincinnati, weighs 3,800 pounds and is fire and burglar proof, provided with combination lock and all the latest improvements.

—Last week we published a list of the old folks of DeKalb county, and it has since occurred to us that a list of the young ladies of Auburn, with their ages, as taken by the enumerators, might be of absorbing interest to our readers. It requires considerable time to search the records, but we will endeavor to have the whole thing ready to "give away" next week.

—Judge R. S. Taylor, of Fort Wayne, was nominated by the republican convention at this place, last Friday, for congress. The judge evidently anticipated the result, having had his little speech cut and dried for the occasion.

—An Auburn young lady, taking a walk last Friday morning, remarked: "It's dangerous to be down town this morning." Obtusely failing to comprehend, we asked her why, to which she replied. "So many republicans in town, you know."

—In its list of the old folks of Steuben county, the Republican gives the name of Willard DeWitt, of Scott township, who is 105 years old. While our list of old people was much larger, we guess Steuben county can "take the cake" for the oldest man. Mr. DeWitt was formerly a resident of this county.

—We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend a party which will be given this evening, July 22, at Pleasant Lake, by the "Bon Ami Social Club" of Angola. Music and dancing will be the cardinal features of the evening's entertainment, and an excellent time is expected. Several Auburn young people are going.

—There will be a basket meeting and re-union of Universalists of central and northern Indiana, Sunday, Aug. 1, at Pleasant Lake. Special train over the Jackson road will pass Auburn Junction at 10:10 a. m., Auburn at 10:15 a. m., going. In addition to services which will be held, there will be a concert at 2 o'clock p. m., given by the best vocal talent in Fort Wayne, assisted by Prof. Shultz's orchestra.

—The appended gushing epistle was found yesterday on Main street, near the Swineford house, and the fair authoress may have it on application at this office:

"Dear Billy, the reason why I didn't laff when you laft at me in the postofis yesterday was becaus I hev a bile on my face and kan't laff. If I laff she'll bust. But I luv you, Billy, bile or no bile—laff or no laff. Yure luvin Kate till deth."

—Tickets can now be bought of Frank Copper, at the Jackson depot, via Detroit and the lakes, to Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Erie, Philadelphia, Dunkirk, Baltimore, Washington and all points in the east. If you wish to avoid the heat, dust and noise of railroad travel, secure passage for any of those points by the Detroit and Cleveland daily line of magnificent, side-wheel passenger steamers. The rates are remarkably low.

First Blood for Richland.

This has particular reference to a handsome pole which was raised at Goetschius' Corners last Saturday, it being the first demonstration of the kind in DeKalb county, since the opening of the campaign. An enthusiastic meeting was then and there held, which was entertained for a few moments in a handsome little speech by our coming representative and fellow-townsman, D. D. Moody. Another and similar meeting, with the exception of the pole-raising, will take place at the same place next Saturday evening, to which a large attendence is desired and expected, as one or two prominent speakers will be there to make it lively and interesting. Democrats of this region, turn out in full and make the speakers believe that their efforts are appreciated.

Another Pioneer Gone.

Levi J. Walsworth was born in Caledonia, Livingston county, New York, May 5, 1803.

He married Mary A. Latson in 1829, and lived in Caledonia until 1834, when he moved to Sandusky county, Ohio, where he resided four years, and then migrated with his wife and four children in the fall of 1838 to DeKalb county, Indiana, where he remained up to his death. He was one of the early settlers of this county, and endured without a murmur many of the hardships consequent to pioneer life. All who knew him acknowledged him to be a man of great industry, unimpeachable honesty and stern integrity; besides these good qualities, he was an affectionate husband, a kind father, an obliging neighbor and a good citizen. By industry he amassed sufficient wealth to afford himself and family a comfortable living, and by his honesty, together with his kind heart and willing hands, he made for himself many warm friends all over this county, the majority of whom have gone to the other world.

Deceased was converted and joined the M. E. church in 1829, and together with his wife he entered the first Methodist class in Auburn. Their house was the home for preachers and the place of worship, where many that mourned were comforted, and many hearts were made to realize the "power of God unto salvation." In the balmy days of June, 1849, God laid His hand heavily upon him by removing his companion to the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." He then married Mrs. Elizabeth McEntarfer, but again found himself alone by the death of this companion in 1872. He was the father of seven children, five of whom mourn his departure.

For several years his system was preyed upon by consumption, which caused his death July 16, 1880. His age was 77 years, 2 months and 11 days.

After having lived a devoted follower of the Lord Jesus for 52 years, the Master said "It is enough," and he has gone to his reward.

A very large concourse of people attended the funeral services, which were held at the house, Rev. H. J. Norris officiating.

Returns Her Thanks.

CONCORD, July 12, 1880.

EDITORS COURIER: Permit me to say, through your columns, that I was the recipient of a large and beautiful oil-painting, presented to me by the pupils of district No. 6, Union township, at the close of school, July 3, for which, together with numerous tokens of respect shown me during the term, by both pupils and parents, I return my heartfelt and sincere thanks; and I trust that the children I had under my care may all grow up to be useful men and women in society.

NANNIE HORNBERGER, Teacher.

Still They Come.

From all parts of the country reports like the appended are flowing in. Whatever political changes are taking place, are for the most part in favor of Hancock and democracy, daily making assurance doubly sure. The Galveston News has this:

"Hon. George Williamson, of Shreveport, La., the republican nominee for congress for that district, has withdrawn from the canvass, and has unmistakably announced himself as a supporter of General Hancock. He was a delegate to the Chicago convention, where he fought in the last ditch for Grant. He accepted the nomination for congress when tendered to him, but, preferring to support General Hancock to the chance of being sent to congress by a party on which he has soured, he has shaped his course accordingly."

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealousy is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 21-tf

UNDYING FIRE.

BY CARRIE V. SHAW.

(Respectfully dedicated to Oliver Wendell Holmes.)

"Time claims its tribute; silence now is golden;
Let me not vex the too long suffering lyre;
Though to your love untiring yet beholden,
The curfew tells me, Cover up the fire."
—O. W. Holmes' "Iron Gate."

Friend, I have known thee from my early childhood
Here is a picture thou wilt understand:
A barefoot urchin roaming through the wildwood,
A book of poems in one soiled brown hand.

The pictured child is me, and thine the poem,
On which the hungry soul is feeding there;
And when the years were past she said, "I know him—
Have known him from my childhood." Was it fair?

Now for the sake of the old wildwood sweetness,
And for the wondrous dreams that children dream,
I wish to write thee, in thy life's completeness,
Expressing my regard and my esteem.

I wish to say to thee that though the number
Of thy fair years be now three score and ten,
The fire thy genius kindled shall not slumber;
Once lighted, it can not go out again.

This fire, undying as the soul that, breathing
Upon cold ashes, turns them into flame,
Shall burn for many pleasant years, still wreathing
New garlands of immortelles round thy name.

And may the warmth and fragrance of the morning
Be round about thee as the sunset fades,
When twilight dews fall gently, as in warning
Of dangers in the night's intrusive shades.

And when, at last, Peace visits thy calm pillow,
A smiling angel—not Death, chill and drear—
Oh, may the south wind whisper to the willow
To sing the songs thou most hath loved to hear!

Then, as with falling tears we bend above thee,
And know the fire of life is all gone out,
We will not call thee dead, but we who love thee
Will gather up the treasures strewn about;

We'll build a temple o'er the glowing embers,
The fragrant blossoms of thy genius rare,
And guard the fire to prove that love remembers
The hand that lit the incense burning there.

Oh! brightly shall it burn through all the summer,
And brightly burn when winter's snows are white,
And when the day is dead and earth grows dumber
We'll keep it shining through the fogs of night.

And if anon by chance the fire should smolder,
Love, kneeling low, will fan it with her breath,
Then shall each ember that was growing colder
Flash its red light up in the face of death.

And Death, abashed, with pallid brow grown whiter,
Shall shrink into the shadows whence he came,
While the old flames shall leap up higher, brighter,
And write in words of scarlet fire thy name.

Immortal light, that never can grow dimmer;
Immortal fire, that never can grow cold;
Immortal genius, with the sunrise glimmer;
Immortal name, traced in the sunset's gold!
SCHELL CITY, MO.

A TARDY REMINDER.

I.

The back-log in our great Texas fireplace had just been punched after an approved method, and the flames were leaping up as flames will on windy nights, roaring steadily and starting shadow dances in the corners of the room. Suddenly some quick change subdued the flame till it merely hung in the smoke above the hearth, and at this moment a most unearthly sound, apparently at our very door, startled me into an unbecoming posture, that was taken advantage of by my friend, who thereupon indulged in a succession of chuckles of a kind I could never locate in him. He soon recrossed his legs, however—he could never chuckle except with feet wide apart—saying as he did so:

"You never heard a screech-owl before, I reckon. We hear them often in Indiany—often," and he added, after a moment, more intensely, and as if a little startled by some thought—"often."

"Was that an owl? Heavens! it sounded more like the scream of a locomotive whistle."

"I've a notion of writin' home tonight, Jim."

"You have?" It startled me almost as much—quite in a different way—as the screech-owl's terrible song. The words carried me back to our place of meeting a year before. Taking a Mississippi river boat at Cairo, I found I must share my state-room with another—or rather he with me, since I was the later comer. He did not strike me favorably at first. I was a New England boy and suspicious of everything south of St. Louis, and this man looked not unlike the men I had been cautioned against. He could not very well help that, indeed, since I had been warned in very general terms that included every one I did not know. However, we shook hands, exchanged some remarks meant to be facetious, and in a few days I knew his name—William Jackson.

"At home they call me Bill—short, like myself, you see," he said, and grinned in a bashful sort of a way that came very near to capturing me on the spot. In fact, he was not short, but, instead, the tallest man I ever saw of his length of leg and body; for what he lost elsewhere he made up in a neck that never ceased to be a wonder to me. It ran up like the watch-tower of a fire-engine house, slim and so long that, while his shoulders barely reached mine, his head overhung all others, and was two inches more than six feet above the ground. His head was large, too, and that made his general appearance more striking, while the general slimness of his body ended below in a pair of enormously large feet. His face was much tanned and smooth-shaven, except the upper lip, which was covered by a coarse stubble of fierce-standing, sandy hair. But no description of him would be complete that did not touch on that feature of his countenance which was often concealed entirely and which would have made him trusted anywhere. As a fellow-traveler said, "His general looks is agin him, but his mouth captures me."

He said his mouth, but he meant his laugh—not that there was much noise about it, but it was so far-reaching in its effect on his own person. First, around his mouth would break two deep wrinkles; then outside of these two more; and so on, on till his eyes were brought into the whirlpool of wrinkles and the long-standing ones on his neck and forehead shaped themselves to the general effect of one supreme expression of delight. It was then you believed him from your very heart. I did, and he never, as he himself would express it, "threw dirt" on me.

After all, he had, so far as I learned, little to often bring forth so great a revelation on his face. But few of the amenities of life had been his at any time. He said little of home—"somewhere in Indiany"—except when at one time he spoke bitterly of his dead father's grand mistake in life, which it appeared was simply this, that he kept his children (boys and girls, a large family) on the farm till he died, then they came of necessity out into the world to find themselves great, grown-up babies—nothing more—without any other feeling than that they must, as Jim said, "hitch on to some one." All the girls, but one who died, were too old to "hitch on." The boys did the best they could in that line, and after a time Jim "hitched on" to me—it was in New Orleans, after coming down from Cairo—and we soon became what at the West they call "pards." We were friends, at any rate, and, having joined forces to the amount of about $350, were farming in Texas on poor lands on what our landlord called "sheers;" that is, he furnished the tools, mules and land and we the brains and human muscle, keeping our own house and dividing the spoils—that is, the crops—equally.

So, knowing how little he looked to any other home than the one around him, I could but question his "notion," and add:

"Who to, Jim?" a rather thoughtless question.

His voice went down almost the whole length of that wonderful neck, I thought, as he threw his face forward into his hands, and, staring into a dark corner of the fire, said:

"A woman."

"A woman, Jim? why, wha—! Oh, a sister, perhaps?" I said, seeking the only refuge that seemed at hand.

"No. * * * no sister." A long pause. "It's like this," and he said nothing more for some minutes, but absently reached over for his violin and picked the strings for an almost-forgotten chord. It seemed to me that his brain and fingers were working together, although he did not know it. At last he evidently reached what he was after, for he twanged the strings more confidently and said, laying aside the violin:

"It's like this: We never said nothing to nobody, nor to ourselves neither, for that matter. But she knowed I thought a whole farm of her and always shall—oh, how good she's been to me!" and he fiercely clutched his knees, his features distorted and his eyes in tears.

Good to him! Well, thought I, if ever any woman loved Jim she was good to him; she couldn't have wanted him for anything else. How homely and angular he looked, his long neck shot out toward the fire, which in February is needed, even in Texas, to take off the chill.

Presently he straightened up.

"No, there wasn't nothing said, but she knowed me, and when I left she asked me to write her, and I'm going to do it. She's bin waitin' now too long." Then he stopped abruptly and began to look back over the months, while I held my breath.

"My God, man, it's 'ni' on two year," he said, and, it seemed to me, he saw in a moment what his long neglect might mean; that it had been the very refinement of cruelty. He at once began with an almost feverish haste to make ready his writing tools—only to hesitate, pen in hand, over the white paper I handed him, writing little at a time, and not concluding till his lamp had outburned the back-log, and its coals smoldered sullenly on the hearth. Then, muttering something about a screech-owl near her house, he crept into bed.

II.

What excuses he put forth in his letter I never knew. They would not, I am quite certain, have answered for any love letter I might have sent about that time after two years' silence; though, to be sure, "we" (taking the reader into confidence for a moment) were both younger at that time, while Jackson was 30, if a day. He may have urged that he was a poor letter-writer. That was true. I have yet to see his equal in power to wreak a really appalling vengeance on words which, many are now agreed, have a greediness for letters only equaled by their inexcusably bewildering arrangement of the same. And his way of making up sentences was something wonderful. He may have urged, too, that he had worked early and late with scarce a moment of relaxation. That was true of both of us, and I had written many times.

Whatever he may have said in that letter, to which he brought so many pains, I fear he did not hit on the true reason for his long silence; indeed, it is possible, even probable, that he did not know of it himself. For my part, it seemed then, as it seems now, that he had not written, simply because he had not at any time, or for any purpose, found in letters so ready a means of communication that he turned to them without effort. And, more than all, he had lived by her side in daily thought since the hour in which they parted. His memory of her many graces was as fresh on the hundredth day as on the second; and, had it been four years of silence instead of two, her face and form would have been as distinct in his mind at the end of that long time as though daily letters had passed between them. A contemplation almost constant had brought her to him to comfort and console him at any moment. Then, too, he had "hitched on," and, though a man grown, had conceded to me every right that was his in the management of our small business. Honest himself—almost pitiably honest, for it came from an innocence that had been kept fresh by ignorance of more than a quarter of a century—he placed the fullest faith in the man he had chosen to work with. So he felt much at ease, with little thought of the future, except when long droughts, under a sky like brass, made us despair of profit from farming in Texas. He rested in the love he was sure of, and did not once think that the flame he had somehow fanned into sight—miracle though it must have seemed to him, for he knew that he was homely—would need any further care to be kept alive and at a fervent glow.

All this passed in my mind while riding five miles the following evening to post the precious letter, which I dreaded to let out of my hand. So much depended on it that it seemed impossible that it should go aright in the usual prosaic way, in common mail bags.

Once away from town, however, and on the upland prairie, the matter looked differently.

"Heaven be praised for that screech-owl," I said aloud. "Bill will have to take one for his coat of arms—adding a steel pen and holder, perhaps. * * * It's a pity, though, that the owl waited so long. It was a tardy reminder."

I mentioned the coat of arms to him when he dropped his violin for a moment as I came in, and he took it good-naturedly. So far as I could see—and Jackson concealed nothing, he was like a child in that—every thought of the wrong he had done had gone away with the letter, and he evidently had no fear of the result.

"I told her," he said, bounding his bow about on the tense strings, "that I was dogoned sorry I had forgot my promise to write—'twasn't 'cause I didn't think of her with ev'ry seed of cotton and ev'ry kernel of corn we planted, and with ev'ry step I made; I seen her face in everything I did, and when I see a pretty sight she seen it, too, and there's lots of strange things here."

What a sight for hot-house lovers this, the glow that came to Jackson's face as he dropped his violin across his knees and lingered in thought on the happy moments they had each day spent together, only in imagination! That they were imagined scenes never occurred to him, for he saw in her face from time to time all the pleasure she would have enjoyed in noting with him the strange features of a country strange to both.

"Yes," he said, striving for a few moments to bring a refractory string into harmony with its fellows, and then drawing round, sweet notes the length of his bow—"Yes, I'm dogoned sorry, but she knows me!"

III.

There should have been an answer to the letter in about two weeks if she was like other women. But two, yes, three weeks and more passed by without a word. The fire died out on our hearth, as the hot summer came on swiftly, and was not renewed. March surrounded us and revealed wonders to the limited New England experience which barely becomes acquainted with the sun of the extreme Southern States. April came and, going out into the past, left thirty perfect days behind. Lower Texas bedecked in a suit of green, not laid on as a remnant, but with a lavishness almost wasteful, smiled in your face at first and then laughed aloud, her notes of joy bubbling from a thousand throats. Animal life, concealed before, crept out and basked on the glaring stones. The air was in a constant hum, unnoticed by some, but intense to those whose ears were attuned to it. The very earth at our feet seemed to throb with life.

It was just opening May when I came from the postoffice one evening and laid down before Jackson the letter he had mailed weeks before. It came from the Dead Letter Office—that morgue of so many hopes—and in the same mail was a paper from what had been his home town, together with letters for myself. He was playing on his violin when I came in, but stopped at once.

I do not think that at first he felt so deeply sorry that it had miscarried as I did, but he was perplexed all the evening long, and could not understand why the letter had not reached her. He sat several hours turning the letter over and over, noting the different post marks, but not offering to re-read what he had written, and evidently trying hard to grasp the situation fully. He gave a deep sigh at last, and, without getting up from his chair, laid the letter by, though still in sight. He then took the home paper and scanned its meager columns carelessly, looking first, as one away from his former home does, at the list of deaths and marriages. They were few and of no special interest to him; but as he glanced over another column, devoted for the most part to small town-talk, he must have seen this paragraph, for he fell forward on his face like one about to die if not already dead, crushing his violin beneath him, its deep moan joining discordantly with the mocking hoot of the screech-owl far out in the darkness.

We regret to learn just as we go to press today that Mrs. Henry T. Goodwell, wife of our esteemed townsman of that name, died last night after a brief illness of three days. The circumstances of her death were peculiarly painful and most distressing. Mrs. Goodwell has been married less than a year, and will be remembered by many of our readers as Miss Esther Barton, who lived until she was married at the home of Thomas Jackson, brother of the late William Jackson, Sr. She was a lovely woman, and the grim destroyer has indeed smote heavily. Our heartfelt sympathies are with the husband in this his dire extremity, his hour of trial.

IV.

Several months later I talked with the writer of the above lines, in his "sanctum," as he frequently called it. I found him a shrewd Yankee who made his paper simply a lever to move other matters to his benefit, and the "best-fixed" man (so he phrased it) in the county. I questioned him some, as to Miss Esther's marriage.

"She'd been goin' with the Jackson you speak of, as you say," he answered. "But I'd know's there was anythin' between them. S'posin' there was; a woman can't wait forever for a man to spit it out, and he wan't much to wait for anyway. I guess he was honest ennuff 'sfar as that goes, but 'no great shakes,' as they say here; he was always 'hitchin' on' to some one. Besides, Tom—that is, Thomas Jackson—got poor and hadn't a place for her, and in short it was marry or go among strangers. Times was hard, and it had to come to what it did, though she hesitated—hesitated more'n you could ask, perhaps."

Oriental Physicians.

The Oriental physicians are the greatest quacks in the world. Take the following specimen of their profundity:

An emir, supposed to have the hereditary gift of healing, prescribed for a patient, an upholsterer, lying at death's door with the typhus fever. The next day he called to see his patient and found, to his astonishment, for he had given him up, that he was much better. On inquiring into the particulars, the convalescent told the emir that, being consumed with thirst, he had drank a pailful of the juice of pickled cabbage!

"Allah is great!" cried the emir, and down went the fact on his tablets.

The doctor was soon after called upon to attend another patient, a dealer in embroidered handkerchiefs, who was ill of the same disease—typhus fever. Of course he prescribed a pailful of pickled cabbage juice. The next day he heard that the sufferer was dead, whereupon he made the following entry upon his books:

"Although, in cases of typhus fever, pickled cabbage juice is an efficient remedy, it must in no case be used unless the patient is an upholsterer."

It was evident to the Eastern sage that his patient died because it was his misfortune to deal in handkerchiefs instead of sofa coverings.

How Americans Spend Their Summer Holiday.

Here is the summer holiday again. What shall we do with it?

It is more than a dozen years since the hard-worked New Yorker or Philadelphian with small income made up his mind that the summer holiday, which was an indulgence to his well-to-do neighbor, was a necessity for himself—as much of a necessity in the work of the year as the hours for sleep are in the work of the day. So far so good. Now that he is convinced of that, he takes his holiday, but he is not yet used to it. He carries the luxury uneasily; it discomforts him; he does not know how to use it. Having but the one chance to be idle in the year, he is captious about the idleness, and scared lest he may not enjoy every moment of it.

He knows what he wants very well. He and his wife and his children are talking about that at this very moment in a hundred thousand places. He will tell you that he is not hard to please. There are certain essentials, to be sure, which he must have when he leaves home for enjoyment: sublime scenery, pure air, no mosquitoes, plenty of game, milk, fruit, and eggs, congenial society, spring mattresses, well-cooked meals, and little to pay at the end of the week—give him these, and he is satisfied. Where he shall go to find them, and, after he has gone, how he was cheated while he was there, afford him matter for grumbling from May until December.

Now his French or German cousin over the sea has a hundred holidays in the year. He knows how to bring the flavor out of every drop in the orange. He drifts into idleness easily, without thought. When his fete comes, he goes, for a few francs, with his sweetheart or wife, a mile or two out of town. They joke and laugh. The sun shines, the wind blows—it is all good. It rains, it is dusty—but they joke and laugh all the same. They criticise nothing. How good it all is!

But as for our American, a corn-husk bed, or a mosquito in the woods, will overturn a whole summer's airy fabric of happiness. In his anxiety lest he should not seize the best chance of enjoyment, he is apt to follow the largest crowd. He goes to Niagara, to Cape May, the Adirondacks, or to some one of the countless pasteboard mansions, or hot farmhouses in the suburbs of the cities. He tells you that his object is rest and freedom, but the chances are that he leaves both behind in his house in town. There he could wear his old slippers; he chose his own companions; he held such habits and opinions as suited him; he was the MacDonald, and where he sat was the head of the table. But in every one of these summer homes society tramples him down. It is often a little clique of which he never heard before, "without father, mother, or descent." He may laugh at it as vulgar and ignorant, but it is master of the position; he is not. In the hottest months of the year, when even the beasts in the field lie down to rest, it forces upon him a hurly-burly of fashion gossip, dress, outlay, and weariness, which at home he can manage to shut outside of his own door. He goes back, as a rule, to his shop or office, his gas-pipes and family table, unrefreshed, and glad that the holiday is over. But, after all, he goes with the crowd the next year. The average American is afraid not to move with the crowd.—Harper's Magazine.

The Slave Trade in Egypt.

Notwithstanding the laws, treaties and decrees for the suppression of the slave trade in Egypt, and even the activity displayed by the Egyptian Government for its extinction, dispatches recently received at the Department of State from our Consul General at Cairo would seem to prove that the inhuman traffic, although not carried on as openly, is plied as energetically as formerly. The slave trade is carried on by the Arab caravans which, while nominally trading in legitimate merchandise between Egypt and Darfour, in Central Africa, run the slaves into upper Egypt to the city of Assiout generally, on the Nile, about 230 miles above Cairo, where the Lybian range of mountains run nearly down to the river. The slavers secrete the slaves in the ancient grottoes and tombs in these mountains until they are disposed of and distributed throughout the country. The activity of a young Swiss attached to the American Mission at Assiout recently resulted in the seizure and manumission of 68 slaves and the incarceration of 35 Arabs, charged with being slave dealers. Through the representation of the British Consul General at Cairo—there being a treaty for the suppression of the slave trade between Egypt and England—three hundred soldiers were dispatch to Assiout, the caravan surrounded and the seizure above noted effected. Although it was well understood that this caravan had brought more than 1,000 slaves into the country, the most rigid search failed to discover more than 68, the remainder having been disposed of and safely distributed before the arrival of the soldiers. Of the 68 persons manumitted some were seized in their native country while sleeping in their tents, others were borne off while tending their sheep and cattle in the fields; some of the girls were forced away from their husbands and still others were originally slaves and sold to the caravan.—Philadelphia Times.

An Unfortunate Manner.

A lady may be well educated, well trained, and possessed of good manners, and still have an unfortunate manner which repels friendship. In city stores we often meet with saleswomen whose air of supercilious indifference, and icy remoteness from the least interest in us or our purchases, sends us away half frozen. There is an atmosphere of forbiddingness about such stores; and we are glad to get out of them into the sunshine. On the other hand, we know certain saleswomen who are so sunny, so genial and so delightful in their way of serving us, that, to buy from them is a perfect pleasure, and they often persuade us into taking what we do not really want, solely by the charm of their sweet, unaffected grace. A cordial, womanly manner is well worth cultivating.

LIME has never been found in a native state; it is always united to an acid, as to the carbonic in chalk. By subjecting chalk or limestone to a red heat it is freed from the acid, and the lime is left in a state of purity.

the middle, and their tails in the stream to serve as rudders. They carry potatoes or eggs on land by one lying down and holding the egg between his fore paws while his companions draw him along by the ears. Mr. George J. Romanes tells the story of a dog in Scotland, who, in going to church with his master, had to swim a channel a mile wide. If the tide was flowing he ran north a mile; if ebbing, south an equal distance, always landing at a point near the church. Shall we not be very kind to animals whom God has made with so much intelligence?

A Family of Counterfeiters.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, writing under recent date from Toronto, Ont., concerning the notorious Johnston family of counterfeiters, says: Your correspondent had an interview with George B. Perkins, United States Government detective, concerning R. E. Johnston and family, forgers and counterfeiters, the female members of which live in style here, the father being in jail, charged with counterfeiting. The Johnstons are Kentuckians, the family numbering nine persons, the father, Robert Johnston, five sons, Charles, Thomas, Ira David, John and Robert, the mother and two daughters.

On the 16th of last June, Ira, who is lame, and two others visited Black Rock and Fort Erie, where they uttered counterfeit United States Treasury notes. The next day it became known that new five-dollar Treasury notes were in circulation. They were all arrested, and gave false names; but they were identified as the Johnston brothers, well known in Indiana and Ohio as forgers and counterfeiters. Ira and Charles were found guilty of uttering counterfeit notes, and the former was sent to Albany Prison for ten years, and the latter for eight years and six months. John Johnston is now in Buffalo Jail awaiting trial for the same offense. David, a printer, is at large, as is also another brother living at Montreal. Ira is an expert engraver, and made plates from which United States notes and Canadian notes were printed. The signatures were being forged by the girls, who are all handsome and ladylike.

According to Perkins' story the whole family have been engaged in counterfeiting, the mother and two daughters once being taken to Washington on a charge of that description. The father, who is old, sick and in jail, divulged the whole thing. He is one of the oldest and most successful counterfeiters on the continent, and his carefully executed bills at one time would come to light in New York, Chicago and other American cities, and then Canadian bills would go the round of the cities and towns of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The detectives found in a swamp, five miles from this city, buried in a box at the foot of a tree, seven plates, viz.: Ten dollars on the Ontario Bank, five dollars on the Canadian Bank of Commerce, four dollars on the Dominion Bank, one dollar and two dollars Dominion of Canada notes, and two five-dollar plates on the United States legal-tender. There is a standing reward of $5,000 by the United States Government for the capture of these last two mentioned plates. The whole of them are valued at $15,000.

Johnston has been counterfeiting for the past thirty years. He is an engraver, and his work was so well executed that the American notes passed through the Treasury Department at Washington unnoticed, and the Canadian bills were as good. They are all well known in Cincinnati, where they plied their business until they came under the notice of the police, when they removed to Canada, where they have been watched for a year. With the arrest of the old man the operations of the gang have no doubt come to an end, and the detectives claim that it is the most important arrest of counterfeiters ever made on the continent.

More Case Than Cure.

A Hartford doctor, now deceased, was wont to boast of his skill in curing cancers, and he invariably alluded to a most difficult case he treated in another town. "Most remarkable case," and the doctor would close his eyes in a seemingly deep reverie as he uttered the words, and then he would repeat them two or three times in gradually receding tones of voice, like the falling cadence of a dying echo—"most remarkable case; most remarkable case." The old doctor's manner was such as to leave the impression that the cure was quite as remarkable as the case.

On one occasion a gentleman who had a cancer on his face, had pretty much made up his mind to visit New York for treatment, when he happened in to this Hartford physician's office, and was so impressed with the "remarkable case" that he concluded to be doctored at home, and went to the doctor's office to make arrangements for the operation. The doctor was out on professional business, but his wife answered the bell, and the cancer patient got into conversation with the lady, and among other things, innocently asked how that gentleman out in the country was getting along.

"What gentleman do you refer to?" queried the doctor's wife.

"Why, that desperate case—that 'remarkable case' which your husband alludes to so frequently."

"Oh," said the wife, a little solemnly, "he's dead. He died during the operation."

The man left word that he would call again, and then took the next train to New York. Here is a parallel case: A doctor had discovered an infallible remedy against the cancer. He lately undertook a splendid case, treated it splendidly, and buried it ditto. While lecturing to his anatomical class, he said: "Gentlemen, I am going to demonstrate to you, by the examination of the proper organs, that my patient died cured."—Hartford Times.

A MAN was sawing wood in a back yard. He severed two sticks as thick as your wrist and then went into the house. "Mary," said he to his wife, "my country needs me; there's no use of talking; we've just got to slaughter all these Injuns; no true patriot can be expected to hang around a woodpile these days."

"John," said his wife, "if you fight Injuns as well as you saw wood and support your family, it would take one hundred and eighteen like you to capture one squaw, and you'd have to catch her when she had the ague and throw pepper in her eyes." John went back to the woodpile wondering who told his wife all about him.

A GENTLEMAN informed by a bill on the window of a house, that "apartments were to be let," knocked at the door, and, attended by a pretty female, took a survey of the premises. "Pray, my dear," said he smiling, "are you to be let with these lodgings?" "No," replied the fille de chambre with vivacity, "but I am to be let alone."

A GENTLEMAN ordered his servant (a regular Pat) to awake him at 6 o'clock that he might get ready to start at 7 by an early coach, in which he had taken his place, for the country. The gentleman awoke and called his man: "What o'clock is it?" "Just 7, your honor." "Seven,—did I not tell you to wake me at 6?" "Yes, sir." "And why did you not?" "Because your honor was asleep."

A YOUNG man with an extremely powerful voice was in doubt what branch of musical art to adopt. He went to the composer Cherubini for advice. "Suppose you sing me a few bars," said the master. The young fellow sang so loud that the walls fairly shook. "Now," said he; "what do you think I am best fitted for?" "Auctioneer," dryly replied Cherubini.

A GOOD minister out West preached a sermon on peace-making, aimed at two of the deacons of his church who had long been at swords' points; and such was his eloquence and earnestness that directly after the benediction was pronounced one of the deacons went over to the other and remarked, with tears in his eyes, "Brother Stiggins, after such a sermon there must be peace between us. Now I can't give in, so you must."

A Hen's Curious Hatch.

A gentleman in Raleigh, of unquestioned veracity, relates a story whose truth he asserts to be above par. For some time past a hen of his had been conspicuous by her absence from the premises, and there were fears that she was lost. Those fears were very agreeably dispelled, however, on Friday, when she made her appearance, singing in her gayest manner, and stepping along in her sprightest style. Just behind her were some diminutive objects to which she ever and anon gave her undivided attention. The slowness of their progress caused the hen's owner to rush out to see what the brood was this time. He was astonished to see the hen cover with her wings twelve little terrapins. Soon she was reassured, and allowed him to get a look at her treasures. The family were called out to see the wonder. The owner of the hen then went back the way she had come, and found out how the eggs were hatched. A terrapin which had laid the eggs had deserted them, and the motherly fowl concluded to sit on them. This she had done, and the result was the twelve young terrapins.

The Right Kind of Pride.

A young man "that works for his board," no matter what honest work he does, has no reason for shame. A young man who eats the bread of idleness, no matter how much he has, is disgraced. All men, starting in life, ought to aim, first of all, to find a place where they can earn their bread and butter with a hoe, ax, spade, wheel-barrow, curry-comb, blacking-brush—no matter how. Independence first. The bread-and-butter question settled, let the young man perform his duty so faithfully as to attract attention, and let him constantly keep his eye open for a chance to do better. About half the poor, proud young men, and two-thirds of the poor, discouraged young men, are always out of work. The young man who pockets his pride and keeps a stiff upper lip, need not starve, and he stands a chance to become rich, if he cares to.

The Indestructibility of Matter.

This is capable of ready demonstration by preparing a couple of glass tubes of equal weight, each being filled with pure oxygen, and containing a few particles of carbon, free from appreciable amount of ash, that prepared from the fine loaf sugar giving very good results. The tubes are of precisely equal weight, and are hermetically sealed. By heating one of them the charcoal is caused to burn, and ultimately to disappear; the tube and contents, however, is of course found still to balance the other tube (which has not been heated), being of precisely the same weight as it was at first.—Scientific American.

OUR CANDIDATES.

The Coming President and Vice President.

They Are Formally and Officially Notified of Their Nominations.

NEW YORK, July 13.

The committee appointed by the Cincinnati Convention to inform its candidates of their nomination, held a meeting in the New York Hotel at 9 o'clock this morning, ex-Senator John Stockton, of New Jersey, in the chair. A sub-committee, composed of Stockton, John W. Daniels, Virginia; Gen. D. M. Debose, Georgia; ex-Gov. Saulsbury, Delaware; R. M. Spear, Pennsylvania; George Hoadley, Ohio, and Augustus Schoonmacker, New York, reported the drafts of the letters to Gen. Hancock and Mr. English, which were adopted and signed by all the members of the Committee of Notification. The committee left the New York Hotel in a body for Governor's island. They were met be Gen. Hancock in the parlor of his house. Gen. Stockton spoke as follows:

GEN. HANCOCK: I have the honor to introduce to you Gov. Stevenson, Chairman of the Democratic National Convention recently assembled at Cincinnati. I have also the honor of presenting to you the committee appointed by that body to wait upon and notify you of your unanimous nomination for the highest office in the Government of the people. It is a source of great satisfaction to the committee, in making this announcement to you, to say that your nomination was not secured by the solicitations of personal or political friends, but was the spontaneous action of that convention, actuated by patriotic duty. One of the ablest and wisest bodies of your countrymen ever assembled have given you this nomination with perfect unanimity; and, General, since that convention has adjourned, we of that committee have been to our homes, we have seen our constituents, we have seen the Democratic masses and the conservative people of this country, and, with one accord, they ratify the action of that convention. So we are bound to believe, as we do, that your election will be an accomplished fact. We cannot doubt it, and we believe that when the election is over the great principles of American liberty will still be the inheritance of this people, and shall be forever.

And now, in the name of the National Democratic party, by virtue of the power intrusted to this committee by the convention, as its Chairman, I have the honor to hand to its Secretary a communication in writing informing you officially of your nomination.

Gen. Stockton handed the Secretary of the committee, Mr. Bell, the address signed by the committee, after which it was handed to Gen. Hancock. In reply, Gen. Hancock said:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: I appreciate the honor conferred upon me by the Democratic National Convention lately assembled in Cincinnati, and I thank you for your courtesy in making that honor known to me. As soon as the importance of the matter permits, I will prepare and send to you a formal acceptance of my nomination for the office of President of the United States.

Those present were then introduced to Gen. Hancock, who had a few words of welcome for each person. After about ten minutes spent in handshaking, order was restored, and Gen. Stockton, turning to William H. English, who occupied the same position in the room where Gen. Hancock had lately stood, said:

The Cincinnati Convention, with unanimity unparalleled, appointed us a committee to wait upon you at such time and place as would be most agreeable to you, and inform you in person and in writing of your nomination. I have the honor to congratulate ourselves on the event, and to present to you on the part of the committee and in the name of the convention of the National Democratic party the official announcement of your nomination, which will be read to you by the Secretary.

Secretary Bell then read the address, and Mr. English spoke as follows:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE: As a practical business man, not much accustomed to indirection of action or circumlocution of speech, I will say plainly and in a few words that I accept the high trust which you have tendered me with feelings of profound gratitude, and that I will at an early date formally and in writing make the acceptance which I am informed is usual on such occasions. In doing this I fully realize the great responsibility of the situation, care, turmoil, anxiety, misrepresentations and abuse which are certain to follow. And I understand thoroughly that all the resources and power of our political foes from all parts of the land will be concentrated against us in Indiana, my native State, where the first grand battle is to be fought, and probably the most important of all. But these are great occasions, when the discharge of high patriotic duties are to be considered above all personal considerations, and I shall not disregard the unanimous voice of the representatives of the majority of the American people which you speak for here to-day. I am profoundly grateful for the high honor which has been conferred, and I have an abiding faith that, with the favor of God and of the people, we shall succeed in this contest.

The speaker was applauded at the close of his remarks, and then followed more handshaking.

Shortly afterward, the committee, and their friends accompanying them, left the island.

Following is the letter to Gen. Hancock:

JULY 13, 1880.

To Gen. Hancock:

SIR: The National Convention of the Democratic party, which assembled in Cincinnati on the 22d of last month, unanimously nominated you as their candidate for President of the United States.

We have been directed to inform you of your nomination for this exalted trust, and request your acceptance, in accordance with the uniform custom of the Democratic party. The convention have announced their views upon the important issues which are before the country in a series of resolutions, to which we invite your attention.

The resolutions embody the general principles upon which the Democratic party demand that the Government shall be conducted, and they also emphatically condemn mal-administration by the party in power, its crimes against the constitution, and especially against the right of the people to choose and install their President, which have wrought so much injury and dishonor to our country.

That which chiefly inspired your nomination was the fact that you had conspicuously recognized and exemplified the yearning of the American people for reconciliation and brotherhood under the shield of the constitution, with all its jealous care and guarantees for the rights of persons and of States.

Your nomination was not made only because in the midst of arms you illustrate the highest qualities of the soldier, but because when war had ended, and when, in recognition of your courage and fidelity, you were placed in command of a part of the Union undergoing the process of restoration, and while you were thus clothed with absolute power, you used it, not to subvert, but to sustain, the civil laws and the rights they were established to protect.

Your fidelity to those principles, manifested in important trusts heretofore confided to your care, gives proof that they will control your administration of the National Government, and assures the country that one indissoluble Union of indestructible States and a constitution with its wise distribution of power, and a regard for the boundaries of State and Federal authority, will not suffer in your hands; that you will maintain subordination of the military to the civil power, and will accomplish purification of the public service, and especially that the Government which we love will be free from reproach and the stain of sectional agitation or malice in any shape or form.

Rejoicing in common with the masses of the American people upon the bright promise for the future of our country, we wish also to express to you personally the assurance of general esteem and confidence which have summoned you to this high duty, and will aid you in its performance. Your fellow citizens,

JOHN W. STEVENSON,
President of the Convention.

NICHOLAS M. BELL, Secretary.

The letter to Mr. English is as follows:

JULY 13, 1880.

To Hon. William H. English:

DEAR SIR: By direction of the Democratic National Convention, assembled at Cincinnati, June 22 last, it becomes our pleasant duty to notify you that you were unanimously nominated by that body for the office of Vice President of the United States. Your large experience in the affairs of the Government, your able discharge of the many trusts committed to your hands, your steadfast devotion to Democratic principles and the uprightness of your private character give assurance to the Democracy that you are worthy and well qualified to perform the duties of that high position, and commend you to them for the nomination which they conferred. While your personal qualities and your public services well merited this honor, the action of the convention was no doubt designed not only to vindicate their appreciation of yourself, but as well to testify their profound respect for the Democracy of Indiana, your native State, with whose manly struggles you have been so long identified, and in whose glorious achievements you have shared. The convention set forth its views upon the leading political issues which are now before the people in a series of resolutions, a copy of which we have the honor to present to you, and to which your attention is respectfully requested. It is our earnest hope that those views may be met with your approbation, and that you will accept the nomination which is now tendered you.

With sentiments of high esteem, we are respectfully,

JOHN W. STEVENSON,
President.

NICHOLAS M. BELL, Secretary of the Convention.

A DEBT OF GRATITUDE.

In Remembrance of a Day When Gettysburg Saved Philadelphia.

Hon. John W. Forney, a stalwart Republican of the most stalwart stamp, pays this grand tribute to the gallant Hancock, in the columns of his paper, Progress:

There are many deathless days in the American memory, among them the attack upon the American flag in Charleston harbor on the 12th of April, 1861, the battle of Gettysburg on the 1st, 2d and 3d days of July, 1863, the fall of Richmond, on the 9th day of April, 1865, and the assassination of Abraham Lincoln, on the 14th day of April, 1865. No days in human history ever aroused a more agonizing solicitude, or closed upon more gigantic transactions, or opened a wider vista of human possibilities. Each of these events had a strange and almost providential meaning. Each possessed the peculiar quality of conquering in an instant millions of prejudices. The ball fired at the old flag from Charleston consolidated the North and struck down human slavery. The victory of Gettysburg saved the second great city of the Union from flames. The fall of Richmond was the certain rise of the republic, and the death of Lincoln consecrated his great mission of forgiveness to all. When we come to notice the annals of our civil war, those four events, with the emancipation of the slaves on the 1st of January, 1863, will be to the historian like so many planets, shedding light on all other objects, and marshaling the way to the final duty and lesson of the patriot. Each was a revolution in itself, affecting the remotest interests, and leaving all men in a new condition of thought and self-examination.

But none of these tragedies wrought a deeper sensation or gave birth to a more lasting gratitude than the battle of Gettysburg, 1863. Here, at least, is one of those occurrences that can not easily be forgotten. The human race is prone to forget. One philosopher says that ingratitude is the badge of all our tribe; but, like all maxims, it is best proved by the exceptions. In this instance we can not if we would, and, thank God, we would not if we could, blot out what that defeat of the Confederates did for the city of Philadelphia. Happily, it is not so long ago as to have faded out of our minds. It is only seventeen years since, and it was a day of such sharp agony and such universal terror, and the victory was such an unspeakable relief, that even the children now grown to men and women think of it as gratefully as the middle-aged and the grandmothers and grandfathers. It was the single instance in which the fiery blast of war came close to a great Northern metropolis. The Confederates advanced in tremendous force. Led by their beloved Gen. Lee and by his chosen lieutenants, they seemed to make a last stand in the rich valleys of Franklin and Adams, choosing, as if by instinct, the regions called after two of the most precious names in American history. Grant was engaged at the same moment winding his fatal coils around the Southern city of Vicksburg; but the point most vital to all at that supreme moment was the field of Gettysburg.

What Philadelphian can ever forget the suspense of those July days? There was not a household that did not throb and thrill between hope and fear. There were over 100,000 men, thousands of them from Philadelphia and neighboring towns; and there was not a family that did not shudder at the advance of the foe who seemed so near, or that did not fancy in that advance the loss of the holy cause of the Union.

On the morning of the Fourth of July, 1863, I was at the Union League, then on Chestnut street, near Eleventh, Philadelphia, in the massive building now occupied by the family of the beloved Matthew Baldwin. The rooms and gardens of the lovely mansion were filled to overflowing with pale, anxious men; the streets were full of a silent, waiting crowd; the sidewalks and windows were crowded with women; even the children were awed into silence, as their elders discussed in whispers the possibilities of the dreadful fight in the green valleys of the Cumberland. Reynolds had been killed on the 2d of July, along with thousands of others, and his brother, James L., came from Lancaster, in this State, bowed down with terror at the sacrifice, and humble women were sobbing over the dispatches already recording their losses. It was a day of fears and despair. I had been present at other scenes of sorrow, but nothing like this 4th of July, 1863. The commandant of this department was Gen. J. A. J. Dana, and his office was in Girard street, near Twelfth, and I held a position as a consulting member of his staff. About noon of that Saturday I saw his tall form crossing Chestnut street to the League, and when his eye caught mine I saw he was in tears. He handed me a dispatch from Gen. Meade, just received. I opened and tried to read it, but could not. I saw enough to feel that we were saved. And soon the good news became universal. Then all hearts exploded with joy over the deliverance. It was a wonderful sight, that sudden change from grief to gratitude. Some shed tears, some shouted in joy, old foes became friends, and even infidels joined in the spontaneous prayers of the preachers. Robert Browning's thrilling poem describing the man who carried the "good news to Ghent," which broke the siege and filled the souls of the Flemish with a deep thanksgiving to God, might have been paraphrased in honor of the messenger who brought such happiness to oppressed, and terrified, and despairing Philadelphia.

Who won that great fight? Who saved Philadelphia from fire and spoil? Who drove back the enemy, and saved us from a fate of which the burning of Chambersburg and Carlisle and the forced contributions upon York were intended to be grim preparations? A brave army of patriotic citizens, led by three Pennsylvania Generals, George Gordon Meade, of Philadelphia; John Fulton Reynolds, of Lancaster; and Winfield Scott Hancock, of Montgomery. Meade and Reynolds are both gone. Meade died on the 6th of November, 1872, in the house presented to his wife by the people o Philadelphia, afterward supplemented by a contribution of $100,000 from the same source. Reynolds was killed in battle on the 2d of July, and is buried at Lancaster. Hancock is to-day the Democratic candidate for President of the United States.

To show how I felt at the critical moment, seventeen years ago, I reprint what I wrote in the Press on Tuesday, the 7th of July, 1863, not only to prove my plain duty to Gen. Hancock, as the survivor of this glorious triumvirate, but also the duty of all the people of Philadelphia to that incomparable soldier. I recall it once more as a personal pledge and promise, and the solemn covenant of a great community to a great soldier.

"Meanwhile the army of the Potomac, suddenly placed under command of Gen. Meade, whom we are proud to claim as a fellow-citizen, hastened northward, and fell upon the rash and audacious enemy. We know the result. Neither our children, nor our children's children, to the remotest generation, shall ever forget it, or fail to remember it with a thrill of gratitude and honest pride. The rebels were assailed with unexampled fury, and the gallant Gen. Reynolds, a Pennsylvania soldier, laid down his life. The struggle raged for several days, the losses on both sides were fearful, and still the result seemed doubtful. If we should fall, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, perhaps New York, would be doomed. In this crisis of the nation's fate it was Pennsylvania that came to the rescue. IT WAS GEN. HANCOCK, A PENNSYLVANIAN, WHO SO NOBLY BORE THE BRUNT OF THE BATTLE ON CEMETERY HILL."

I do not stop to debate the other considerations that enter into this vital issue; the grave considerations that demand the release of my dear native State from the desperate men who, in the last ten years, have coolly crushed out the pride of our people, and placed under the heel of brutal inferiority the hopes of our youthful manhood, making of this fair commonwealth a vast political Golgotha, and of our proud city of Philadelphia an offensive roost for the most desperate and vulgar mercenaries since the black days of Tweed and Tammany in New York. I do not stop to debate these considerations now. It is not the time. But this is the time to open to the common mind our pledged word to the last of the great soldiers who placed us under an obligation that we hastened to avow, and repeated over and over again. My own pledge binds me as my own note of hand. In law if it had been signed to the promise to pay a money debt I could be held by it, and my estate if I failed to pay it. In morals it is as solemn as if I had gone before a magistrate and sworn to abide by it. And what is true of myself is equally binding upon others.

WHY HANCOCK!

Senator Bayard Answers the Question—Not Only a Gallant Soldier With a Stainless Sword, but a Statesman as Well, Who Holds the Civil Above the Military Power.

A large and enthusiastic meeting to ratify the nomination of Hancock and English was recently held at Wilmington, Del. Mayor Allmond introduced Hon. Thomas F. Bayard as the orator of the evening. He was received with great applause. Mr. Bayard said:

When the American people meet to take counsel together in respect of choosing their rulers, it is a matter of great gravity. The Democratic party—that great party that never had a sinister object—actuated by a great patriotic impulse, sent the best men of their party to Cincinnati to choose a standard-bearer true in the faith of that party; and it is as fellow-Democrats that we are to-night met to indorse their choice. They did not choose obscure men or dark horses, but men who have been known for the lifetime of a generation. There is no one who did not know and honor the name of Winfield Scott Hancock long before he was mentioned at Cincinnati; and in the counsels of the nation, where Indiana sent him, William H. English has proved his worth. Hancock is no untried man. He has been tested, and vindicated his claim to public confidence in a way that seldom falls to the lot of public men. He has been long before the people, and, though subjected to the fierce light of partisan examination, his reputation is still spotless. His military record is as glorious as that of any man in the country.

If you ask why we put in nomination a soldier, I will tell you: Because that man has proved that the good God gave to him the same characteristics of self-control and conscience that he gave to the great Washington. Since the world was, nothing has been so dangerous to society and man as the love of power in the heart of men. When military power of the most absolute kind was in the hands of Hancock, what was his course, in comparison with that of the other military Governors whom you can recollect? When in Louisiana and Texas he was asked to arrest men, he asked where is your judicial process? When asked to restrain liberty or property, he asked for law to guarantee it. When he was asked to try men by military tribunals, he pointed out the Court Houses with their Judges and jury boxes. Who else, placed with such power in his hands, has refused to exercise it? He said he was a citizen, and held his rights as such higher than his power as a soldier. Compare this with the course of that General who asked permission to outlaw the people of Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas and Georgia, and the reply of Belknap, then Secretary of War, who said he approved of such course.

The speaker reviewed the history of the Republican party and that of Mr. Garfield, and accused the former of being the exponent of a principle to retain by force a power gained by force, and the latter as fully indorsing these sentiments of his party. He sketched graphically the scenes in Washington during the excitement over the electoral troubles of 1876, and recounted Garfield's opposition to the bill for the Electoral Commission, and his subsequent acceptance of a position in a body which he declared had no warrant under the constitution. The logic of the election of Hancock, judging by his own past, would be to place the civil power above the military. If as Major General, is it likely he would do so as President? If you say Hancock is a soldier, I say aye, and a true one. But he is more; he is a citizen who values his rights as such above his power as a soldier. With Hancock as President, the liberties of this country are safe. We do not take him because he is a military man, but because he is a good citizen.

Mr. Bayard closed by saying: "The South by their votes at Cincinnati have proved, and by their vote in November will prove, their love for the man who has been true to the Union and the constitution of the country. If a man who can turn foe to friend, and bring a conquered enemy to allegiance, be not a statesman, then pray tell me what is statesmanship?"

HANCOCK AND THE REPUBLICANS.

Mr. Leonard W. Jerome Points Out Why All Conservative Republicans Must Support the Hero of Gettysburg.

The following letter has been handed to the New York World by Mr. Jerome with a request for its publication:

25 WEST TWENTY-SIXTH STREET,
June 28, 1880.

Maj. Gen. Hancock:

MY DEAR GENERAL: I take the earliest opportunity to congratulate you upon your nomination, and to assure you, life-long Whig and Republican that I am, of my most hearty support. I belong to a very numerous and very stanch old silver-gray Republican family. With one solitary exception, there never was one of them known to vote the Democratic ticket, but I venture to say they will to a man vote for you. They cannot consistently do otherwise.

You, sir, embody the views and sentiments in regard to the great questions of the day that we have entertained since the war closed. They are the same that actuated Gen. Grant when he laid down those liberal terms of surrender to Gen. Lee. They are the same that actuated my poor friend Raymond when he battled so manfully in the committee of Congress against the savage policy of Thad Stevens. I believe Gen. Grant would support you to-day, did not the exigencies of his situation forbid it. And Henry J. Raymond, were he alive, would support you, too, unless the exigencies of the New York Times restrained him. He was compelled at an early day to smother the sentiments he had expressed in the address of the Philadelphia Convention, to abandon his career in legislative halls, and to change the tone of the Times or, as Mr. Jones, our business manager and partner, insisted, the paper would be ruined. (I believe I offered to pay the damages at the time, but that was considered impracticable.) It was a bitter pill, but it had to be swallowed. Thad Stevens had succeeded, through a Congress which misrepresented the country, in engrafting his policy upon the Republican party. And, though a majority of the party, as I firmly believe, were disgusted, it was fastened upon them, and there was no way of getting rid of it. Thus for years a vast number of us, good Republicans, have been compelled to be helpless supporters of a policy we believe to be the very worst that could be devised. An opportunity is presented us now for the first time, with any show of success, to vote in accordance with our convictions, and I am sure we shall do it most joyfully.

With great respect and esteem, believe me, yours faithfully,

LEONARD W. JEROME.

Gen. Garfield's Credit Mobilier Record.

[From his own sworn testimony before the Poland Committee, Jan. 14, 1873.]

"I never owned, received, or agreed to receive any stock of the Credit Mobilier or of the Union Pacific railroad, nor any dividends or profits arising from either of them."

[From Judge Poland's Report, Feb. 18, 1873.]

The facts in regard to Mr. Garfield, as found by the committee, are that he agreed with Mr. Ames to take ten shares of Credit Mobilier stock, but did not pay for the same. Mr. Ames received the 80-per-cent. dividend in bonds and sold them for 97 per cent., and also received the 60-per-cent. cash dividend, which, together with the price of the stock and interest, left a balance of $329. This sum was paid over to Mr. Garfield by a check on the Sergeant-at-Arms, and Mr. Garfield then understood this sum was the balance of dividends after paying for the stock.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 19, 1873.]

Messrs. Kelley and Garfield present a most distressing figure. Their participation in the Credit Mobilier affair is complicated by the most unfortunate contradictions of testimony.

[From the New York Times, Feb. 20, 1873.]

The character of the Credit Mobilier was no secret. The source of its profits was very well known at the time Congressmen bought it. Though Oakes Ames may have succeeded in concealing his own motive, which was to bribe Congressmen, their acceptance of the stock was not on that account innocent. The dishonor of the act, as a participation in an obvious fraud, still remains.

Some of them have indulged in testimony with reference to the matter which has been contradicted. The committee distinctly rejects the testimony of several of the members. This can only be done on the ground that it is untrue. But untrue testimony given under oath is morally, if not legally, perjury.

It is the clear duty of Congress to visit with punishment all who took Credit Mobilier stock from Oakes Ames.

[From the New York Tribune, Feb. 19, 1873.]

James A. Garfield, of Ohio, had ten shares; never paid a dollar; received $329, which, after the investigation began, he was anxious to have considered as a loan from Mr. Oakes Ames to himself.

Well, the wickedness of all of it is that these men betrayed the trust of the people, deceived their constituents, and by evasions and falsehoods confessed the transaction to be disgraceful.

[From the New York Tribune, Feb. 20, 1873.]

Mr. Ames establishes very clearly the point that he was not alone in this offense. If he is expelled for bribery, the men who were bribed should go with him.

AN OPEN HAND.

Gen. Hancock Invites His Political Opponents to Fully Investigate the Conspiracy Charge—An Avowal by the Democratic Nominee that He Is Opposed to the Wiping-Out Policy.

[Washington Telegram to Chicago Times.]

Referring to the statement made in some Republican organs that, after the decision of the Electoral Commission, he still considered Mr. Tilden legally elected President, and would obey any orders emanating from him after March 3, and that he wrote Gen. Sherman to that effect, a reporter asked Gen. Hancock if had anything to say concerning this. "It is hardly worth while," said the General, "to reply to these stories; there are so many of them floating around now. Suppose I did write such a letter as is spoken of to Gen. Sherman. I have not read the accusation, but I understand its purport. If ever such a letter was written, it must be in the hands of Gen. Sherman. It would not be proper for me to give its contents to the public without consent of Gen. Sherman, even if such a letter was written. If these gentlemen who are clamoring for the letter want it so badly, why don't they go to Gen. Sherman for it? If there is such a letter in existence, I shall be very happy to have it given to the public. I have never written anything I am ashamed of."

The reporter next directed his attention to the story published in a New York paper that Gen. Hancock, at the time McClellan was relieved of the command of the Army of the Potomac, advocated resistance to the orders of the War Department, and urged deposition of Lincoln and Stanton from the offices of President and Secretary of War. Gen. Hancock laughed heartily at this new accusation. "It is too much like Munchausen," he replied. "Such a story is unworthy of notice. If I began submitting to interviews about these statements it would occupy my whole time, and I would have to continue answering them for all time to come. Sensible persons can see the absurdity of these accusations."

A large party of Brooklyn Democratic leaders, headed by Judge Calvin E. Pratt, visited Gen. Hancock this morning, to pay their compliments. Conversation, after a while, took a political turn, when it was asked if Gen. Hancock was receiving encouraging reports from the canvass in various parts of the country. "Reports received," said the General, "are very encouraging. Nevertheless, although the outlook is bright, it behooves us to work in order to achieve success." One person related a conversation with a well-known Philadelphia politician, in which the gentleman said that Pennsylvania was sure for Hancock. "There ought," remarked Gen. Hancock, "to be no trouble about Pennsylvania. I had a conversation this morning with an artist who had been down in the country where I was born, making a sketch of the house of my mother. He says that almost every one he met would vote for me, Republicans as well as Democrats. If this is true it shows a desire on the part of the people for a change. I am of the opinion that the people of this country are desirous of a change in the administration, but they want a man on the watch-tower who will see to it that there shall be no interference with what has been accomplished in the past. "With you General," was remarked, "the past is secure."

"Yes," replied the General, "the past is secure. If it were not so, of what avail would our war have been?"

Straws.

Gen. A. L. Pearson, a lawyer and life-long Republican of Pittsburgh, Pa., announces that he will support Hancock for President. He was at the Chicago Convention and labored zealously for Grant. At Greensburg, Pa., the other day, he made a speech at a Democratic ratification meeting, urging veterans to support the Cincinnati ticket.

Sixty-five Republicans in St. Louis, who have been laboring for Grant for eight years, cut loose from their moorings and declared for Hancock and English. Let the eagle scream while the wanderers come marching home. There is still room.

The wealthy Leonard W. Jerome, of New York—a life-time Republican, and hitherto a liberal contributor to Republican campaign funds—has declared for Hancock and English.

IT IS estimated that there are three millions of unmarried men and four millions of unmarried women in the country. It will be seen that if all the men should marry there would be a surplus of a million of old maids from which to draw for second wives. This is a great country for man.

AFTER FIFTEEN YEARS.

The Rebel Who Gave a Yankee a Blanket.

[David Kerr, in Good Company.]

"Yes, they have had a hard time of it there," says a short, sallow, keen-eyed man, glancing over the illustrated newspaper which contains an engraving of Mr. Augustus Van Cleef's fine monument to the "unknown dead" at Salisbury, N. C. "I guess I ought to know something of what the southern prisons were during the late war, for I had five months of it at Andersonville myself."

In a Pennsylvania train, among men of whom not a few have taken part in the great struggle themselves, and who have each and all had, at least, one relative engaged in it, such an announcement is quite sufficient to command general attention.

"No! did you though ?"

"S'pose you tell us the story, mister; there's time enough 'fore New York, I reckon."

"All right, if you care to hear it. You see, when I first came over from England, the war was just about beginning; and as there didn't seem to be any thing for me to do I thought I'd better soldier than starve, so I went and 'listed right away. I wasn't long in finding out that soldiering and starving might sometimes mean pretty much the same thing, for rations were pretty scarce with us once or twice, when we got down on the Mississippi. I tell ye, after laying all night in a rice swamp, stiff and wet and miserable, with nothing to eat and only marsh water to drink, it was just like the breath of life to me to hear the alarm sounded, and know that we'd be at the enemy in a few minutes more."

At this moment a pale-faced man, who was going from seat to seat with a basket of newspapers and magazines, paused for a moment to listen, with a look of such evident appreciation that it hardly required the testimony of his empty sleeve to show that he, too, had been a soldier in his time.

"We had plenty of fighting down there," pursued the narator, as the newspaper man passed on, "but most of it was just the sort I didn't like—skirmishing among thick woods, where all you could see of your enemy was the smoke of his piece as he let fly at you, where lots of our fellows were shot down without ever knowing who hurt 'em. I'd a pretty narrow escape myself that way one night. I was standing sentry at the outposts when a rebel let slap at me from the thicket, and just caught me across the cheek here; you see the mark. I got behind a tree as quick as winking, and there I stuffed my jacket with grass and put it up against a tree, with a stick through it and my hat on top to look as if I was peering around for a shot; and then I dropped down and crawled into the bushes. Presently I heard the crack of the reb's piece again, and looking out I just caught sight of his arm and shoulder, and brought him down with one shot."

"Well, not long after that, I and some more got picked up by the southern cavalry, and it wasn't a great while before we found ourselves hard and fast in Andersonville; and there we did have a time, sure enough."

"The place has been described so often that I dare say you have a pretty good idea what it was like. It was a great, wide, swampy field, with a stockade around it, inside of which thousands of us were cooped up like cattle in a pen. If a man happened to have a blanket and two or three bits of sticks, so he could rig up a shelter against the sun and rain, all the better for him; if he hadn't, he just took his chance; and I can tell you there was mighty few blankets among us, and many of us had little enough clothing either."

"All day long the sun kept roasting us alive, and at night the damp and chill ate into our very bones, and set us shivering till our teeth rattled again. As to food, many's the time I've gone all day upon a couple of biscuits, and small ones at that; and as to water, all we had was from a stream that ran through a cypress swamp, and you may think what kind of stuff that was."

"You must have been powerful hungry, I reckon," remarked a sympathetic listener.

"Hungry? Well, I'll tell you something about that. One day a young fellow, the son of the general who had us in charge, came into the pen to look around, with his little poodle-dog following him. He had hardly turned his back when that dog was chopped up and eaten bodily; and when his master came back to look for him there was nothing left but a bit of skin about so big. They stopped our food for a whole day because we wouldn't say who did it; but we told no tales—not we!"

"Now, I should tell you that to make sure of our not 'scaping they'd run a wire all around inside, about eighteen feet from the stockade; and that eighteen feet was called the 'dead line,' because if a prisoner only put his head over that line he got a bullet in him next minute from one of the sentries."

"Well, one night late in the fall I'd got as close as I could to the dead line, so as the stockade might shelter me a bit from the cold wind. (Ugh! how it did bite through me that night!) I was just wondering if I could live through till morning, and hardly caring whether I did or not, when a sentry just outside gave a 'P'st!' that made me look up."

"'Say, Yank,' he whispered, 'I guess you'll want a blanket to-night. Catch hold of this.' And he rolled up his own and chucked it to me. 'I can get along without it.'"

"'God bless you!' says I—and that was all. I chucked it back to him first thing next morning, so as he shouldn't get found out; but I guess it saved my life, all the same."

"Not long after that a lot of us were exchanged, and I among the rest. I tell you I hardly felt the ground under my feet when I went out of that filthy hole a free man—though just at first I was as weak as a baby, and could hardly stand without being held."

"And did you never hear no more of that feller as giv' yer the blanket?" asked one of the audience with undisguised interest.

"Never, worse luck; and I don't suppose I ever shall now, for it's fifteen years since it happened, and I've never been south since."

At that moment a sharp voice said close to his ear:

"Say, Yank, I guess you'll want a blanket to-night."

The soldier started as if he had been shot, and turning hastily found himself comforted by the thin face of the one-armed newspaper man, lit up with a knowing smile.

"Why, if there ain't the very man himself!" shouted the narrator, seizing him with both hands. "Well, who'd ever have thought it? You're just going along to New York with me, old chap, and you don't ever go back to peddling papers while I'm about."

And the ex-prisoner was as good as his word.

What They Get Away With.

As will be seen by the following statistics, given by a writer in the Philadelphia Ledger, the maidens at Vassar don't fool away all of their time in hard study; on the contrary, if these things can be, they must kill about four-thirds of their time in ministering to the inner damsel. The Ledger says:

"In the last collegiate year 303 Vassar girls have consumed 45 tons of fresh meats, two tons and a half of smoked meats, two tons of poultry, three tons of fish, a ton and a half of salt fish, and five barrels of mackerel. Also 25,800 clams, 442 gallons of oysters, five barrels of pork, 525 barrels of flour, over two tons of buckwheat 36 bushels of beans, 8,409 dozen of eggs 14,940 pounds of butter, 93,602 quarts of milk, 252 barrels of apples, 3,823 pounds of grapes, 8,005 bananas, 13,346 lemons, 22,611 oranges, 307 cans potted meats, 154 jars of raspberry jam, 511 gallons of apple sauce, 356 boxes of sardines, 1,141 pounds of hickory nuts, 1,919 bushels of potatoes, six barrels of onions, 468 of molasses, syrups, etc. Clearly, these young women have appetites for more than knowledge, and a fair digestion—it is to be supposed—waits on Euclid."

Arkansas and Texas Law.

Several days ago, says the Little Rock Gazette, a white man was arraigned before a colored justice, down the country, on charge of killing a man and stealing a mule.

"Wall," said the justice, "de facts in dis case shell be weighed with kerefulness, an' if I hangs yer taint no fault of mine."

"Judge, you have no jurisdiction, only to examine me."

"Dat sorter work 'longs ter de raigular justice, but yer see I'se been put on as a special. A special has de right ter make a mouf at de supreme court et he chuses to."

"Do the best you can for me, judge."

"Dat's what I'se goin' ter do. I'se got two kinds ob laws in dis court—de Arkansaw an' de Texas law. I generally gins a man de right to choose for hisself. Now, what law does yer want—de Texas or de Arkansaw?"

"I believe I'll take the Arkansaw."

"Well, den, I'll dismiss yer for stealin' de mule——"

"Thank you, judge."

"And hangs yer fur killin' de man——"

"I believe, judge, that I'll take the Texas."

"Well, den, I'll dismiss yer for killin' de man——"

"You have a good heart, judge."

"And hangs yer fur stealin' de mule. I'll jis' take de 'casion heah ter remark dat de only difference 'tween ter two laws is der way yer state de case."

The Book-keeper's Mistake.

There is a tramp who haunts the east end of Galveston, says a Texas exchange, who has got it down fine. He has reduced it to a perfect system. He has his regular customers, so to speak. He knocked at the door of a house. The owner came out. As soon as he saw the tramp he said: "Now, look here, last week I gave you a nickel to stay away for ten days, and here you are back again." The tramp put his hand to his forehead and was lost in thought for several minutes. Then he said: "You are right, colonel. Your regular assessment is not due yet for a week. When I get back to my counting-room I'll pay off my head bookkeeper and discharge him. He has neglected to give you the proper credit on the ledger." "Well, go on, now." "All right, colonel. This is not a professional call; it is only complimentary. No extra charge." It was a Galveston tramp, too, who grumbled when he was asked to take a dime out of a quarter. He said the year previous he had been out $50 by losses in making change.

Once upon a time, not so long ago either, a well-meaning, but rather illiterate, Hibernian coal dealer of Philadelphia, named Quinlan, by some mysterious dispensation of Providence became interested in the management of the Walnut street theater in that city. He has about as much knowledge of histrionic affairs as a hog has of a holiday, and the knowing ones, taking advantage of the fact, often made him the but of their practical jokes, and the recipient of a vast deal of misinformation regarding the dramatic business. Once, while so misinformed, he entered the lobby of of the theater and calling to old John Gilbert, who was a member of his company, said: "Mr. Gilbert, I'm told there's a man named Shakspeare somewhere down the street here that's writing plays for the Arch that's just fillin' the house every night. Go down and hire him to write some for us, but, moind ye, don't pay him more than $18 a week. I'll sthand no extravagance." What Quinlan said when he was told that the man named Shakspeare was dead for two hundred years, tradition does not report.

On another occasion Edwin Adams, then a youthful actor, applied to him for an engagement.

"What can ye do?" said Quinlan.

Ed. explained, and supplemented with a clever recitation.

"How much money do ye want?" was the manager's next query.

"Twenty-five dollars," was the actor's reply.

"Twenty-five dollars!" howled Quinlan in dismay, "why, I've a man back there (Bill Whalley) that is twice your lnth, and has a voice like a thunderstorm, and he only gets $12 a week." But for all that, Ed. got the engagement, and it was the stepping-stone to his afterward prosperity.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO FARMERS!

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Be it known that I, Jefferson Grube, have invented certain new and useful improvements in

Grain Separators,

and have letters patent therefor. This invention has relation to machines for separating Grain, Seed and Chaff, each from the other, and adapted to employ the same High Blast for each separation, and to conduct the grain and seed to opposite ends of the machine, whence they are conducted by proper chutes into sacks, held in position by the machine itself. I expect to have ready by June 1 the

Best Grain Separator and Chaffer

IN THE MARKET.

Warranted to separate plantain seed from clover seed. For simplicity and convenience it surpasses all others. It delivers grain direct into sacks, which saves much handling.

For further particulars, address the undersigned, at Auburn, Indiana.

JEFFERSON GRUBE, Patentee.

ALECK STEPHENS SATISFIED.

He Claims to Have Been the Original Hancock Man.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens spoke on the political situation for an hour and a half in Augusta, Georgia, Thursday night last. The Augusta Chronicle gives an imperfect report, hardly more than a synopsis, of his remarks, from which we quote as follows:

"This meeting," he said, "was exceedingly gratifying to him. Before, differences had prevailed in the democratic party; now, all was harmony. He supposed that this was because the nomination at Cincinnati had given such general satisfaction. He had been asked if he was satisfied with that nomination. How could he be anything else? He had been working for it for ten years—for eight years earnestly. It had been urged that Hancock was too poor and had no money. It looked as if they were determined to take no man that hadn't a "barrel." (Laughter and applause.) Hancock was overlooked. He knew of but two men in congress who were urging his claims. One was Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania, and the other was himself. Ever since that celebrated order, No. 40 (applause), he had been for Hancock, first, last and all the time. The politicians at Washington had nothing to do with it. He didn't wish to say anything disrespectful of his colleagues, but it was so. A cyclone of popular favor struck the convention, and the people's representatives nominated Hancock. He was afraid that it would nominate somebody that he couldn't support, in which case he thought his counsels would no longer be of any use to the country. If the democratic party made no blunders, Hancock and English would go into the presidential chair, and there would be no dispute about the count. They must stay in the ship; don't go off into little skiffs. The ship was the good old Jeffersonian creed of democracy. Jefferson said all men were born equal. Yes, they were all created equal in the right to the same protection, the right to justice. All men were not created equal in strength or color or intellect. No man has any right to hurt another. The Jefferson democracy was equal rights, equal justice in sight of the law. The democracy everywhere had professed a desire to accord equal justice to all. Judge Snead had carried this out in this circuit, and he believed the same was correct of all the circuits of the state. Stand fast to the Jeffersonian principles, make no blunder, and the democracy will win a great victory. He knew Hancock, and would vouch for him as a great soldier and a great civilian. English was as true to democratic principles as the needle to the pole. General Weaver, the candidate of the greenback party, was a very clever man, but he had taken the wrong road. He advised him to come down and jine the democratic band.

STRANGE IMPULSES.

How Some Persons Act in a Great Crisis When Life is at Stake.

[Hartford Courant.]

The conduct of people in a great crisis is a wonderful puzzle. Take the Seawanhaka disaster, and we read of a man who stood on the deck and burned to death in spite of all urgings to jump into the water. He was so perplexed that he utterly forgot himself. On the other hand, some of the rescued people in the small boats were clamorous to get ashore, and did all they could to prevent rescues until they themselves were on land. Such utter selfishness is hard to believe. Among the rescued, one old woman whose handbag, containing $372, had been saved for her, was so indignant at the loss of six pairs of window fasteners that she compelled the people of the hospital who had taken care of her to send for six new window fasteners. She also wanted a diger who was going down to be ordered to look for her spectacles. A very indignant man called at Randall's island for his bag, and learning that it was lost, threatened a law-suit at once. This led to a new search, and it was finally found. It contained a pair of stockings, a chemise and a comb and brush. A singular fact connected with steamboat disasters is that the dead always have their pockets turned inside out. They are regularly found so. The truth seems to be that, some utterly lose their head, and on the other hand the trying hour develops a cunning deviltry in others that is something for human nature to blush at. Robbery is a rare element of every great accident that renders it possible.

There is some difference between cheek and brass. Cheek asks for any thing any time without the sign of a blush. Brass comes up and takes it without asking.

CAN'T RESIST HIM.

The Illustrious Nominee of the Democratic Party Causes Still Another Defection from the Republican Ranks.

[Portland Argus]

The following open letter to the democratic nominee for vice-president is from the pen of Hon. N. C. Towle, for several years recorder of the District of Columbia, by appointment of President Lincoln, and for nearly a dozen years officially connected with the United States senate, but, like Mr. English, for the last decade retired from public life.

BROOKLYN, MASS., July 10, 1880.

Hon. William H. English:

MY DEAR SIR—I congratulate you and the country upon the result of the meeting of the democratic national convention at Cincinnati. It has submitted to the American people a presidential ticket characterized by great ability and sound constitutional principles. But this is not all—it is a clean ticket. The names borne upon that ticket are not only illustrious by their deeds of heroism and statesmanship, but they are unstained and undimmed by even the suspicion of acts of a questionable character. The supporters of this ticket have no use for lawyers or politicians; they have no indictments to defend and no mysticisms to clear up. Here is no taint of the Credit Mobilier to be doctorized, and no spoils of the Tweed or Shepherd rings to be accounted for. The people want a clean, pure, constitutional government, firmly maintaining its dignity and authority, and respecting the rights "reserved to the states and people," and the people see in this ticket a reasonable guarantee for such an administration, and, if I am not mistaken, will elect it by such a majority as will render the counting of the vote no difficult task. I trust to what I hope is still remembered as a friendly acquaintance of thirty years ago, and my personal interest in observing your long and brilliant congressional career, as my apology for the mode I have adopted in offering you my sincere congratulations. I have the honor to be, very truly yours,

N. C. TOWLE.

An Eagle that Rides Dogs.

[San Jose (Cal.) Mercury.]

Some three months ago, while hunting on the mountains east of the Twenty-mile House, Mr. Buffington captured a young American eagle. At the time the bird was quite small, and from appearances but a few weeks old. Mr. Buffington has his pet confined in the yard back of his shop, and the many and curious monkey-shines indulged in by the mountain bird are really amusing. Measuring some eight feet from tip to tip and weighing forty pounds, with talons three inches in length, there is but a small chance for any dogs residing in that neighborhood. For as sure as a canine makes his appearance the eagle spreads his heavy wings and with a loud scream he lights upon the back of the terror-stricken dog. The scene which follows is one of great interest. The dog, without further notice, darts through the side gate and out into the street, with the eagle attached to his back, and that, too, in a manner to stay. Down the street he goes at break-neck speed. At a distance of about two blocks the eagle bids the dog an affectionate adieu and quietly returns, as though nothing had happened. The same experiment is gone through with whenever the dog can be procured. It does not seem necessary to remark that dogs of any description are seldom seen in that part of the town and the same dog never more than once. It would be a blessing to our city if we had one such bird in each block. It would save our pound master much unnecessary trouble.

Weddings in London.

The wedding of a widow differs in some respects from that of a girl. She cannot wear orange flowers, or a simple veil, or be married in white; but must select gray, violet, lavender, or some other color, and wear a bonnet with a veil. She can have no bridesmaids, nor are favors given, and, as a general rule, the wedding is a quiet one, and there is no breakfast. The wedding of a widower is in no respect different from that of a bachelor, but if he have a daughter it is not in good taste that she should be a bridesmaid. After the departure of the bride and bridegroom the party at once breaks up, and in London it is not customary to have any festivity in the evening.

It is no longer usual to send cake or cards to friends at a distance, and people discover for themselves when the young people return from their wedding tour, and call at their own convenience. When the bride reappears in society, the first time she appears in any house, she takes precedence of every one, no matter how high their rank. This continues for three months, after which she is no longer considered a bride. The custom is, however, beginning to fall into disuse, excepting in rural districts; the bridegroom does not obtain any precedence. The bride generally wears her wedding-dress for her first dinners and parties; the orange blossoms must be removed, as they are only permissible on the wedding day. Many brides, however, prefer to keep their wedding dress for their presentation at court, adding to it a boddice and train, and there is not the slightest necessity that they should wear white at their first parties unless they wish it. Many prefer not to do so.

It is a curious fact brought out in the statistics of insurance experts that in all of the great cities of the civilized world the death rate is decreasing. The science of right living causes an increased longevity. From 1873 to 1878 the decrease in the London death rate, as compared with the preceding six years, was four per cent.

CHARACTERS ON SHIPBOARD.

The Sort of People Who Are Seen on the Voyage to Europe.

[Queenstown Cor. N. Y. Evening Post.]

There are two hundred of us, and as many more were turned away for lack of space. The tourist's cry is the French cry of 1870, "a Berlin!" Of course, in this large ship's company an observer can find many types. I notice:

The young people, whom I take to be bride and groom from several signs, chiefly the fact that they eat sugarplums out of a fancy box with a chromo on the lid.

A party of bycyclists, from Boston, I judge; at least one of them passes his time very profitably reading Emerson's essays.

The passenger who walks. He has estimated the length of a clear space on the deck, and does his "laps" at stated times.

An Italian, who reads a copy of La Liberta assiduously, looking up with a pleased expression, however, when a lady plays Verdian melodies on the piano in the saloon.

An invalid with a hacking cough that suggests a coffin hack.

A beauty, one who has been a beauty for, I fear, these many years. Ah, time, intrepid time, that ever advances and never retreats! The poor lady seeks to preserve her charms, as we do timber, by judicious coats of paint, but she must now find a better ruse than ceruse if she is to deceive us longer.

Another beauty, an honest one. Alas! she exemplifies the Japanese proverb: "The beautiful woman is unhappy." She ate a salad at lunch, and now she is pouring oil on the troubled waters.

By her side, another passenger by rail. I asked him as I passed, what was up? "My dinner," was the laconic response.

Ah, this sea sickness! It is like love sickness in many particulars. Both maladies are common to man; both are very violent, uncomfortable, transient and ludicrous, first to the victim's friends, and soon to the sufferer himself. But to resume:

The card-players playing whist, the game that five play at, four holding the cards and the fifth looking over your shoulder and asking, "Why in the world did you play this and didn't you play that?" But cards are a good game, of great antiquity and biblical associations. Yes, and their sinful tricks date back to the prophet, for we read in Isaiah xxiv., 16, that "The treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously." Still what would whist be without its tricks?

A party of actors, most of them boisterous well, but one so sick that I hear he has thrown up all of his engagements.

The man with an appetite like the sarracenia. The purser regards him ruefully and his table-neighbors with admiration, not unmixed with awe.

A cry-baby. Stanly tells of a snake in Africa so deadly that when it appears in a village the village moves off. So when that child appears the adjacent passengers gather up chair, wraps and books and leave.

A young man starting out to see the world; meaning more particularly thereby the flesh and the devil. He wants to see "life," and will pay for his entertainment in the wages of sin, which is death.

A few pretty children tumbling about the decks in a very tipsy manner, and evidently happy. The little dears, much they know about going to sea or the nature of things! Once, when in mid-Pacific, the dismal news came that our steamship had broken her crank-pin. There was grumbling and grieving, in the midst of which a little maid felt in her pinafore and said: "No matter, mother, I've got a pin I'll give the captain."

"A Rose by Any Other Name."

[Buffalo News.]

A city directory canvasser said to our reporter:

Clerks do not wish to be styled clerks, pure and simple, but to be set forth "with" Messrs. So and So. Bar-keepers demand to be considered "in the wine business," and drivers of lager beer wagons to be styled "in the brewery business." No doubt by the same token venders of matches ask to be enumerated as "lumber merchants," and brick-layers, we are assured, constantly request to be written down as "mason and builder." Circus-riders and negro minstrels pretty universally ask to be catalogued as in the "dramatic profession." Commercial travelers are fond to be variously entreated as "importers" and "jobbers." The dashing, if somewhat diaphanous, disguise whereby dealers in faro banks and blacklegs generally, are prone to describe themselves as "sporting men" is not, we believe, to be allowed in the census, although between it and the foregoing the difference is, perhaps, only one of degree.

Why Hancock Will Carry Pennsylvania.

[Indianapolis People, (rep.)]

There are good reasons for believing that Gen. Hancock will carry Pennsylvania, the old Keystone state:

Hancock was born in Pennsylvania.

The democracy of the state is united.

The last democratic president was a Pennsylvanian, nominated at Cincinnati.

There are 80,000 soldiers in the state who served under Hancock, or with him.

He is the acknowledged hero of Gettysburg. The people cannot forget that he saved their homes and firesides.

Don Cameron and his henchmen are very sick.

There is no enthusiasm among republicans for Garfield.

Hancock will poll the full vote of his party and receive the votes of thousands of independent men who are not party-bound.

The Gentleman Who Wins.

If you speak the right word at the right time; if you are careful to leave people with a good impression; if you do not trespass on the rights of others; if you do not put yourself unduly forward; if you do not forget the courtesies which belong to your position, you are quite sure to accomplish much in life which others fail to. This is where the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong. It is where you make people feel that you are unselfish and honorable and truthful and sincere. This is what society is looking for in men, and it is astonishing how much men are able to win self-respect and success and usefulness who possess these qualities of good breeding. It is almost the turning point of success in practical life.

Sentiment versus Justice.

The trial of Marie Bieres has been one of the recent sensations of Paris. This woman, described as a somewhat handsome person, about 30 years old, was trained as a singer, appeared before the public with considerable success, lost her reputation, and resolved upon revenge. She waited for hours in a cab outside her faithless lover's house, and shot at him as he stepped into the street, seriously wounding though not killing him. After three months imprisonment she is brought before a French jury, with Maitre Lachaud as her advocate. He tried to prove that her mind had been unhinged by the treacherous treatment to which she had been subjected. The public prosecutor did not press for the extreme penalty awarded by the law; he merely asked for a verdict of guilty, "with extenuating circumstances." Upon this, naturally, counsel for the prisoner joined issue, declaring that the finding must be one of "not guilty" altogether. It must have been a "bad quarter of an hour" for M. Gentien while Maitre Lachaud was speaking, and a perplexing moment for the court when he concluded by referring to the unhappy woman as one "whom the law might consider guilty, but in whom human conscience would only see the martyr to her own heart." The president summed up, and the jury retired. In five minutes they came back with a verdict of complete acquittal. Marie Bieres, on her part, kissed the triumphant advocate, and was set free. Such a spectacle might appear an exaggeration if set forth upon the stage.

A Highly Colored Joke.

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

Last evening, a representative of the Hawkeye was passing along Valley street, he heard a lady of color call to her companion across the street:

"Hello, ober dar; did you know dat one ob de proprietories ob de water company am dead?"

"La, no; am dat so?"

"Spects it am;" and colored lady No. 1 laughed as though a rich uncle had dropped out of existence, leaving her an immense fortune; but stopped long enough to add: "Don't you see de property am in mournin'?"

Looking around, the Hawkeye man observed for the first time that the witty descendant of Ham was sitting on a water hydrant.

The exact truth about the murder of Brown, near Indianapolis, will probably never be known. The only certainty is that Mrs. Brown and Joe Wade, her lover, were concerned in it. If both had maintained silence, neither could have been convicted; but Mrs. Brown testified that Wade was the murderer, and he was sentenced to be hanged. Now he has testified as explicitly that she committed the deed, and she, too, is under the sentence of death.

Dr. Tanner entered upon the twenty-fifth day of his long fast looking, and apparently feeling, as well as at the end of the first week. A measurement disclosed the curious fact that the faster had decreased in height two inches since the beginning of his self-imposed task. His pulse was recorded at 72; temperature, 96; weight, 131½. Our neighboring republic of Mexico recently held an election to choose a President. There were three or four candidates in the field, and, as neither received a majority of all the votes cast, there was no choice by the people. Under the Mexican constitution the choice of a ruler to succeed Diaz will, therefore, devolve upon Congress.

Two brothers and a sister named Bryson, well known and highly respected in Montreal, were drowned in the river at that place by the upsetting of a boat....The steamer Desouk, with the Egyptian obelisk on board, has arrived at New York. Census notes: There are 112,000 Mormons and 32,000 Gentiles in Utah. The census returns give New Jersey a population of 1,100,000, being an increase of 193,000. Pennsylvania has about 4,226,000 people, an increase of about 700,000. St. Louis statisticians claim for Missouri a population of about 2,400,000. Estimates based upon returns from about one-third of the counties of Illinois place the population of the State at 3,160,000. Ohio's population is estimated at about the same figure. It is also announced from the capital of our neighboring republic that revolutions, growing out of the election, have broken out in several provinces, and that the President-elect has been shot at by an assassin.... Gen. Grant, it is said, will soon take up his residence at New York, having been offered a lucrative position which will necessitate his residence in that city.

The operations of the railways of the United States for the past year have been on a gigantic scale. From statistics furnished by Poor's Manual, it appears that the principal lines moved over 67,000,000 tons of freight during the year, the toll on which amounted to over $116,000,000, while the gross earnings of all the roads reached the aggregate of nearly $530,000,000. ANOTHER HORROR.

Caving In of the Hudson River Tunnel at Jersey City—Twenty-two Workmen Buried Alive.

The tunnel in process of construction under the Hudson river, connecting New York and Jersey cities, has been the scene of a most heartrending calamity, resulting in the death of twenty-one poor laborers, who perished miserably like rats drowned in a barrel. From the dispatches to the daily press we glean the following particulars of the distressing catastrophe: At the midnight change of "shifts" at the tunnel twenty-nine men descended the shaft and worked there until 4:30 in the morning, when the accident occurred. The work in which they were engaged was in making connection between the iron plates of the roof of the grand arch and the brick work of the working shaft. For support this iron roof depended upon strong wooden braces, and upon the compressed air which was forced down from above by means of air compressers, and which exerted an uplifting power of twenty pounds to the square inch. The safety of the men and of the work depended principally upon the control of this compressed air. A small leak, through which it might pass upward through the thirty feet of mud and cinders which cover the tunnel, was liable to occur at any time, and, unless discovered and stopped in season, to cause the entire mass of material to come tumbling down into the archway. This fact was perfectly well understood by the men as well as their foreman, and a steady watch was kept for air leaks, which, when found, were at once stopped up by the silt in the tunnel which has the consistency, and much of the virtue, of putty. It was probably owing to a relaxation of this constant watch that the terrible calamity was due.

Half of the shift of twenty-eight men left the tunnel at 4 o'clock in the morning, and passed to the surface through the shaft to eat their lunch. They returned at about 4:30 to relieve their comrades, and it was at this time that the disaster occurred. While the change was being made a hissing sound was heard, which all recognized instantly as the noise of escaping air. It grew louder as the vent increased in size, and almost immediately the timber supporting the roof began to sway, then there was a sharp crack, the heavy joists snapped like bamboos, and the thirty feet of silt and cinders which covered the chamber to the level of the working-shaft was precipitated upon the heads of the doomed men. Eight of them had time to leap into the air-lock. A ninth, Foreman Frank Olson, passed his right arm through the open door, but before he could enter the heavy iron of the roof fell against the door, swaying it partly to, and crushing him before the eyes of his companions. The other twenty men were now completely cut off from all escape, and were literally buried in the falling timber, iron, and mud.

The men in the lock seemed doomed to certain death, for the compressed air pushing against the door giving egress to the shaft prevented them from opening it, and the water of the river, oozing through the mud and loose soil, was rapidly pouring in and threatening to drown them.

This air-lock is an iron chamber resembling a locomotive boiler, which furnishes the only means of ingress to the tunnel and egress from it. It is round, has a length of fifteen feet and a diameter of six feet.

Half of it projects through the east wall of and into the shaft. The other half is in the opening of the excavation leading into the tunnel. It is provided with a massive door at each end, which opens outwardly toward the tunnel. Two bull's-eyes of plate glass look from one end into the shaft, and two more from the opposite end into the tunnel, in which an electric light was kept burning night and day. The pipes which convey the compressed air into the tunnel run through the air-lock. A pipe opens into the lock from the tunnel and another pipe from the shaft, so that air from either direction may be let into the lock according as ingress or egress may be desired. The principle of operating the lock is much the same as that of the lock of a canal. In going in the pressed air is let into the lock gradually until the density becomes equal to that of the tunnel. In coming out the operation is reversed—the highly-compressed air in the lock is allowed to escape, and its density thus gradually becomes the same as that of the outside atmosphere. The greatest care is of course necessary in operating the lock, for upon it depends the lives of the workmen and the success of the enterprise.

It was in this confined space that the eight men found themselves apparently cut off from all retreat. They hammered on the iron sides of their prison, and screamed loudly for aid; but, for what seemed an eternity, no aid came. Their cries were heard, however, and as soon as possible relief was at hand. On the surface Moses Pierson, the engineer, saw a stream of condensed air coming up on the outside of the shaft, and, divining what had happened, rushed quickly to the mouth of the shaft. "Open the door," came to him in stifled tones from the imprisoned men below.

He sent a messenger for Michael Hurley, the day foreman, who lived but a short distance away, and also for J. H. Anderson, the General superintendent. Hurley reached the scene in a very short time, and clambered quickly down the shaft to the rescue. He was followed by Patrick Meehan, Michael Burchell and Thomas Anderson, and the four tried to force open the door of the lock, but without success, the pressure of the air against it from the inside being too great. Then Hurley seized a crowbar and burst one of the bull's-eyes. At the same time Thomas Van Nostrand, one of the imprisoned men, broke the other.

The compressed air rushed through the lock with a whirr, followed by a stream of water, and, the pressure being thus removed, the door was forced open. The eight men rushed out and hurried across the shaft to the stairs leading to the surface, followed by a flood of water which threatened to ingulf them. They escaped without injury, and at once went to work on the surface digging for the purpose of rescuing their buried companions. Meanwhile Supt. Anderson had reached the scene. A glance at the river showed them at once that all hope of saving the life of any of the twenty workmen in the tunnel was in vain. The water had risen in the shaft until it was twenty feet deep, and on a level with the river, and this was sufficient evidence that the tunnel was flooded. Even had the men been saved from suffocation, drowning must have put an end to their lives in a very few minutes after the fatal crash.

The news of the disaster had spread rapidly through Jersey City, and by 8 o'clock a crowd numbering nearly 1,000 people had congregated around the shaft and were gazing at the pool which marked the tomb of the unfortunate laborers. Policemen were soon on hand to keep the throng back, and ropes were stretched around to protect the workmen from interference.

The scene all through the day was a sorrowful one. In the great crowd that surged around the shaft were wives seeking their husbands, mothers their sons, and children their fathers. The wife of Assistant-Superintendent Woodland did not hear of the disaster until 7 o'clock, two hours after her husband was dead. She rushed frantically to the shaft, pushed her way through the throng, and gazed down into the deep water, weeping and wailing. She was led away by kindly hands and taken back to her desolate home, heart-broken and sobbing piteously.

NEAL DOW'S LETTER.

Accepting the Nomination of the Prohibition Party for President.

Hon. James Black and Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D.

Gentlemen: Your note of the 18th June, notifying me officially of my nomination by the National Prohibition Convention at Cleveland as a candidate for the Presidency, is received. I am very sensible of the honor implied in a spontaneous and unanimous selection by such an assembly to represent their opinions and purposes as to the relation of the liquor traffic to the interests of the nation and people.

There is and can be no difference of opinion among intelligent men as to the tremendous evils flowing necessarily from that traffic to every public and private interest. Such men may and do differ as to the best methods of providing a remedy for these evils, but each must judge for himself upon that point according to his light.

In our country there can be no change in any public policy which depends upon law, unless the people desiring the change shall indicate their pleasure through the ballot box. Parties and their policies come into power among us and go out of power only through the ballot box. There is no other way by which the people can express their will effectively. All important questions of public policy are decided in that manner only.

The question of deliverance to the country and emancipation of the people from the infinite evils of the liquor traffic may well challenge the closest attention of patriots, philanthropists, and statesmen. This question touches the interests of nation, State, and people as no other does or can; the solution of it can never come in any other way than through the ballot box.

It is said by men whose opinions are entitled to the highest respect that the present is not a suitable time for pressing this issue.

No man can be more sensible than I am of the magnitude and importance of other questions of public policy which are to be tried by the people at the next Presidential election, but I am confident that none of these, nor all of them, are so important as this to every national and social interest. Whatever mischiefs may arise from an unwise popular verdict upon other issues, they cannot be so great as those coming from the liquor traffic. The former can continue but for two years, the Congressional term, or, at most, for four years, the Presidential term, unless the people shall so determine by their votes; while the far-greater evils of the liquor traffic must continue indefinitely, unless the people shall express their will against it emphatically by the ballot.

Men who hold this question to be of minor importance can never find a suitable moment for making it a political issue. There will always be some other question in which they feel more interest that may be crowded out by bringing this question to the front. There is never a suitable time for a summer rain in the vision of everybody, however dry and parched the earth may be. There will always be somebody to whom the storm will be injurious or inconvenient.

In the old anti-slavery time the authors and promoters of the anti-slavery agitation were always a thorn in the side of political parties. They were always a nuisance and an exasperation to those who were out of office and trying to get in and to those who were in office and striving to retain their places; the two classes comprising almost the entire body of politicians. But the anti-slavery men, bent on overthrowing the dreadful system of human bondage, having no personal interests to promote, except such as might be involved in the general good, were true to their convictions and steadfast in the line of policy which they believed to be right and wise. They encountered and overcame all possible modes of opposition, bitter denunciation, great personal violence, humiliating and offensive ostracism; but, against all and over all, in the love and fear of God, and in persistent devotion to the right, they won.

There was never a time before the final victory when the anti-slavery movement had so large a following as Prohibition now has; nor was it so influential, except in the great ability and singular devotedness of those who were engaged in it. Very few in numbers at first, and uninfluential, in many parts of the country they put their resolve in the form of votes into the ballot box, only to be laughed at by the politicians, and to be stigmatized as fanatics; but they won at last. The Prohibition movement in this country is now so respectable for its magnitude, and so influential from the numbers and character of those engaged in it, that it cannot be laughed down. There is and must continue to be an "irrepressible conflict" between the liquor traffic and the prosperity of the nation and welfare of the people. As that traffic flourishes, every legitimate industry languishes and dies.

The result of the recent general election in England marks very distinctly what I consider to be the best mode of carrying on the agitation against the liquor traffic. Since 1853, the Prohibitionists of that country have been striving, with great ability and persistence, to procure such a change in the law as would enable the people of any locality to forbid the liquor traffic if they should choose so to do. But very little good came of the agitation, practically, until they adopted the policy of ignoring party ties and voting only for this one object. At the late election their adversaries were thoroughly defeated.

I consider the object of the Prohibitionists of the country to be of supreme importance to the interests of the nation and people. Aside from its bearing upon the moral and religious welfare of the people, I consider the suppression of the liquor traffic to be an object of far greater political importance than any other now claiming the attention of the country. My life has been largely devoted to the accomplishment of that purpose. Perhaps I may live to see my dearest hopes in relation to it realized, at least within my own State; but, however that may be, in the future, as in the past, I shall keep that object steadily in view.

While I sincerely wish that the choice of a candidate by the Cleveland Convention had fallen on some other than myself, I accept the nomination willingly, being sure that it will prove to be the humble beginning of a triumphant end. I am most respectfully yours,

Neal Dow.

"Jocking wi' Deeficulty."

A story is told of a Scotch newspaper editor which is almost pathetic in its wide application to professional merrymen. This editor was also the proprietor of a very well-known Scotch journal, and he was doubly interested in the success of his venture. But he knew that there was one defect in the print, a fatal defect in a Scottish newspaper. The Bawbee was too solemn, too earnest, not sufficiently skittish to suit a gay, unthinking people. The worthy editor looked around him, and at last discovered that he wanted in the person of a funny sub-editor. He then boasted himself in the society of his friends, saying:

"I have found in my new sub-editor a young man just overflowing in natural wit and humor. Now this is a grand thing for the paper, because, for my part, I confess that I jock wi' deeficulty."—Saturday Review.

The Duration of Christ's Life.

This is now generally confined to thirty-two or thirty-three years. The difference of one or two years arises from the different views on the length of his public ministry. Christ died and rose again in the full vigor of early manhood, and so continues to live in the memory of the church. The decline and weakness of old age is inconsistent with his position as the renovator and Savior of mankind. Irenæus, otherwise (as a disciple of Polycarp, who was a disciple of St. John) the most trustworthy witness of apostolic traditions among the fathers, held the untenable opinion that Christ attained to the ripe age of 40 or 50 years, and taught over ten years (beginning with the thirtieth), and that He thus passed through all the stages of human life to save and sanctify "old men," as well as infants and children and boys and youths." He appeals for this view to tradition dating from St. John, and supports it by an unwarranted inference from the loose conjecture of the Jews when, surprised at the claim of Jesus to have existed before Abraham was born, they asked Him: "Thou art not yet 50 years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?" A similar inference from another passage where the Jews speak of the "forty-six years" since the temple of Herod began to be reconstructed, while Christ spoke of the temple, his body (John ii. 20), is of course still less conclusive.—Presbyterian Review.

A Rough Translation.

A young lady moving in the most exalted social circles of Galveston, after much toil and practice at the piano, learned to play with considerable dexterity a piece entitled "Picnic Polka." It is something after the style of the celebrated "Battle of Prague." The listener can readily distinguish the roar of the artillery, the rattle of the musketry, the shouts of soldiers and the groans of the dying. In the "Picnic Polka" the noise of the wind among the trees and the joyous carols of the birds are reproduced, the finale being a thunder-shower which disturbs the sylvan revellers. It happens that a country cousin is in town just now, and the young lady thought she would play the piece to him and hear his comment. He is a plain, simple-minded youth, and although not very bright, is very appreciative. She told him what the piece was and then proceeded to give him the "Picnic Polka." The first notes are rather slow and hesitating, the idea sought to be conveyed being the solemn solitude of forest, through which the gentle zephyr (not heifer) sighs. After she got through with this preface, she asked him if he did not almost imagine himself in a lodge in some vast wilderness. He replied that he thought all that slowness meant the delay in getting off. Said he: "There is always some darned cuss who oversleeps himself and keeps everybody else waiting."

She did not care to discuss the point with the ignorant fellow, so, to conceal her emotions, she once more let herself out on the piano. The woods were filled with music. The mocking bird whistled as if his throat would split, the cuckoo filled the sylvan bowers with his repeated cry, while ever and anon the mournful cooing of the dove interrupted the matin song of the lark.

"There, now, I guess you know what that sounds like?" she said, as she paused.

"You mean that 'tootle, tootle, tootle, chug, chug, chug?' You just bet I understand that. Many is the time at a picnic I've heard it from the mouth of a demijohn or the bunghole of a beer-keg."

Her first impulse was to hurl the piano stool at him, but it passed off, and once more she went at the piano as if it was the young man's head and was insured for double its value. The thunder growled, the lightning flashed (from her eyes) and the first heavy drops are heard upon the leaves. She banged and mauled the keys at a fearful rate; peal after peal of deafening thunder perturbed the atmosphere and re-echoed in still louder reverberations until it wound up in one appalling clap as a grand finale. Then, turning to the awe-struck youth, she said: "I suppose you have heard something like that before?"

"Yes, that's what the fellow with linen pants said when he sat down on the custard pie."

The audience found himself alone, but he picked up his hat and sauntered out into the street, densely unconscious that he had said anything out of the way.

National Peculiarities.

A writer on French and English contrasts says: "To call an Englishman a melon, or to say to a country woman that she was a good, cow-like creature, would be no very grave offense, but applied to French people these terms would be deadly insults. You must not call a Frenchman a canary, either, nor a turkey-cock, the latter term meaning much more than it does in English; nor must you say of a lady that she is a wren (lionette), this being synonymous in French to saying that she is a simpleton. The similarity in the sound of English and French words often causes foreigners who visit France to make mistakes. Thus they will ask for an appartement when they do not want a suit of rooms, but one single room; and they say that their style of living is luxurieur when they seek to convey that it is luxurious, the French for which is luxeux. Again, they mistake bonnet for bonnet, which must be rendered chapeau; vicaire for vicar, which is cure, while curate is vicaire; and discussion for discussion, whereas this word in French means an angry wrangle. Frenchmen are great kissers and shakers of hands, but the latter courtesy is not practiced between sexes. A Frenchman bows to a lady without extending his palm, and he would be thought to be very forward indeed if he tried to shake hands with an unmarried lady. He might kiss a married lady, however, on New Year's Day, or in an outburst of great emotion on any other occasion, without anybody—even the husband—demurring; and he may embrace members of his own sex at all times. A French grown-up son kisses his father, and alludes to him as 'papa;' and, as everybody knows, a son must ask his 'papa's' consent to his marriage, no matter how old he may be."

Recent Points in Etiquette.

Say "good morning" or "good evening" to the hostess, on leaving the room. "So long, old girl" has gone out, in the best society.

If there are seventy-five or 100 persons in the company, it is not necessary for you to shake hands all round.

Do not be in haste to get down to dinner without waiting for a tardy guest. Give him at least thirty minutes. You may have to get down on your hands and knees and crawl around and feel for a lost collar button yourself sometime.

Upon introduction to a young lady, immediately ask her age and the size of her shoes. This will put you on an easy conversational plane.

In society, a note requires as prompt an answer as a spoken question. And in the bank it requires a great deal prompter one.

Do not thank any one who waits on you at table. Look wan and hungry as though you wanted more.

To tilt back in your chair and drum idly on your head with your fork is condemned in good society.—Burdette.

Lincoln When Ten.

The following graphic sketch of the late President Lincoln when he was ten years of age is from an article in the Springfield Republican. It shows that, with unfavoring circumstances, he was an upright boy:

Sixty years ago, a boy of ten and a girl of twelve were living alone with their father in a rough log-cabin in Indiana.

The cabin had no floor, and only holes in the side for a door and a window.

Instead of chairs, there were three-legged stools, and for a bedstead there was a row of poles with one end stuck in a crack of the logs, and the other end laid in a forked stick, driven into the ground, with some boards laid across the poles, and upon these a heap of leaves covered with skins and old petticoats.

The boy and girl were dirty, half-dressed and neglected.

Their mother was dead, and their father was a rough hard man.

Once he left them for some time, and when he came back, he brought with him a splendid bureau, a table, a set of chairs, a clothes-chest, bedding, and other furniture—and a new mother for the children!

She, poor woman, had supposed she was marrying a well-to-do man; and had come with him all the way from Kentucky, expecting to find a good home awaiting herself and her three children, and instead of it she found this forlorn place.

But, like a brave woman, she made the best of it. With her furniture and her care, she soon made the cabin homelike. The two children, Abe and Nancy, were soon cleaner and better dressed than they had ever been before. Both of them were good children, and she loved them both.

To the boy, her coming was the beginning of a new life. She sent him to school whenever there was a chance, which was not often; she encouraged him and sympathized with him, and was a true mother to him, the only mother he ever knew.

Many years afterward, he said to a friend, with tears in his eyes, "All that I am or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother." And she said of him after he was dead:

"Abe never gave me a cross word or look, and never refused, in fact or appearance, to do anything I requested him.

"I never gave him a cross word in my life. His mind and mine—what little I had—seemed to run together. He was dutiful to me always.

"I think he loved me truly. I had a son, John, who was raised with Abe.

"Both were good boys, but I must say, both now being dead, that Abe was the best boy I ever saw or expect to see."

A Hint for Women.

Herbert Spencer, in his new book, gives the following interesting data in regard to two popular customs: "Though absence of ears seems more generally to have marked a criminal than a vanquished enemy who had survived the taking off of his ears as trophies, we may suspect that originally it was the trait of an enslaved captive; and that by mitigation it gave rise to the method of marking a slave that was used by the Hebrews, and still continues in the East with a modified meaning. In Exodus xxi., 5, 6, we read that if, after six years' service, a purchased slave does not wish to be free, his master shall 'bring him to the door, or unto the door-post, and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him forever.' Commenting on this ceremony, Knobel says: 'In the modern East the system of piercing the ears is mentioned as the mark of those who are dedicated. * * * It expresses the belonging to somebody.' And since, where there grows up qualified despotism, private slavery is joined with public slavery, and the accepted theory is that all subjects are the property of the ruler, we may suspect that there hence results in some cases the universality of this mutilation. * * * A related usage must be noted—the insertion of a ring in the nose."

Another great singer has risen. Her admirers predict for her a position of rivalry to Patti. Her name is Sembrich. She is a sort of universal genius. She is a proficient in several branches of the arts, but, above all, she is an opera singer. The other day at rehearsal the orchestra at Covent Garden literally stopped to applaud and cheer her.

An Englishman who participated in the battles of Balaklava and Inkermann suicided at Toledo a few days ago.

Cynthia and Elizabeth Taggart went to bed about forty years ago, at Middleton, Mass., and never got up again. Their disease, if they had any, was merely a lack of vitality. Cynthia died recently, and Elizabeth is very low.

The locust plague is becoming a very serious matter in portions of Russia. The farmers find themselves powerless to resist their ravages. Other insects are devastating the grain fields, and all together the outlook is exceedingly unfavorable to Russian wheatgrowers.

Prof. Earle, of the Fish Commission, has discovered that Spanish mackerel can be artificially hatched, and that its capacity of reproduction greatly excels that of either cod or shad. The Professor is making further experiments with the batching apparatus in Chesapeake bay.

Mrs. Van Cott, the woman evangelist, has retired from the field, probably forever. Her nervous system is broken down. And no wonder. During the fourteen years of her ministry she has traveled 143,417 miles, has preached 4,294 sermons, besides conducting 9,833 other religious meetings, and writing 9,853 letters.

William Gossard, a convict, made a novel attempt to escape from the penitentiary at Jefferson City, which came near being successful. He was employed as a packer in the shoe-shop, and, with the assistance of a fellow-convict, got himself packed into a shoe-case, which, with the other cases, was to be shipped immediately. Unfortunately for him, there was a delay in the arrival of the wagon which was to take the boxes to the depot, and, his absence being marked, a search was instituted, resulting in his discovery.

Texas Jack got his nickname by a feat in cattle speculation. During the war Texas was shut off from the other Southern States, and consequently there was no supply of beef from that source. Jack, who was then known by his real name, John Omohundro, invested all his money in a drove of cattle, organized a strong guard of herders, and fought his way to Tennessee, where the people eagerly bought his beef and set him up for a hero. At an enthusiastic public meeting he was introduced as Texas Jack, and the title adhered to him.

One of the new uses to which cotton oil is put is said to be the making of oleomargarine. From it also are made imitations of olive oil, castor-bean oil, and many others. The sugar-cane growers are finding that the leaves and bagasse of the sugar-cane can be used by the paper-makers. A low grade of wrapping-paper is already made from this fiber, and experiments indicate that the finer grades, even of writing-paper, may be made from it. These are two new industries that promise well for the Southern planters.

A writer on Zulu peculiarities, in the South African Folk-Lore Journal, says that when a child is about 10 days old it is partially buried "at a spot or beneath some tree that has been struck by lightning," in order that it may render it courageous. When diseases are prevalent, "all the girls and unmarried women of a kraal rise early in the morning, dress themselves entirely in their brothers' skins, and, taking their 'knobkerries' and sticks, open the cattle-pen or kraal, and drive the cattle away from the vicinity of the homestead, not returning till sunset. No one of the opposite sex dares to go near the girls on this day."

The competition between the rival routes for the interoceanic canal has cut down in a rather amusing manner the estimates of cost made by their projectors. Every time that M. De Lesseps goes over the figures he saves a million or two. A new speech by him on this subject is equivalent to an announcement that he has discovered a new economy. At the latest date he had got the estimated cost down even to $102,000,000, which is vastly less than the original calculation. Civil Engineer Menocal, nowise behind in this pleasing rivalry, announces jubilantly that his latest visit to the Nicaragua route cut off seven miles and $7,000,000.

Vanderbilt is still adding to his purchases of paintings in Europe, and rumor continually exalts his name by claiming that he has paid an astounding price for some choice work. The probabilities are that Vanderbilt will put all these pictures away in a private gallery, where they will be seen only by the guests and family of the owner. If he would do something for art beside using it as a background to parade before the public the huge line of figures which designates his wealth, he would endow a museum of art and fill its gallery with these choice pictures.

The projected tunneling of Mont Blanc is engaging the serious attention of French engineers, and, contrary to common opinion, they characterize it as an easier undertaking than that of the Simplon route. The estimates of cost for executing such a work are, in the case of the Simplon, about $27,000,000, and in that of Mont Blanc only $15,000,000. Furthermore, it is claimed that the Mont Blanc tunnel will make the journey from Paris to Genoa some ninety-seven kilometers shorter, and from Paris to Milan forty-four kilometers shorter than by the Simplon route. The location of the tunnel is a point which has given rise to various opinions, but that which meets with special favor from the advocates of the enterprise is from Chamounix to Courmayeur.

Dr. Cooper, in Fraser's Magazine, argues that only those eye-glasses that are made of the purest glass can be considered safe—specks, rays, globules or other imperfections are detrimental. Though more costly, pebbles possess important advantages, namely: Extreme hardness, rendering it difficult to stratch or break them, and clearness, never becoming dull from moisture; and they are also thought to be cooler than other glass. To be good and true the glasses should likewise be, in all their parts, of an equal thickness in proportion to their convexity, as well as of an equal form. Another and easily-applied test of true glasses is that of holding them obliquely over print, all the letters of which will be found to preserve their true character if the glasses are correct.

The four great coffee countries of the world are Brazil, Java, Sumatra, and Ceylon. Hitherto 250,000 tons have been considered as a good yearly figure for Brazil, but last year the exportations amounted to 273,000 tons. But the consumption of coffee in the country itself now amounts to 60,000 tons, raising the total yearly product of Brazil to 333,600 tons. Fortunately for the planters in other parts of the world, coffee has grown into a necessity in the United States, and its price has risen. Although the soil of Brazil, especially for coffee culture, is very extensive, yet the difficulty of obtaining labor daily becomes greater, and this renders it doubtful whether the above figure can be much exceeded. The crop of Java and Sumatra was estimated at 94,000 tons for export; the consumption of the inhabitants, although the population is double that of Brazil, is not half of that of the latter country. The production in Ceylon, though greater than that of 1878, shows a falling off when compared with former years; there were in all 41,200 tons exported from the island, the native consumption being very small.

Long or Short Vacations.

Long, of course, say all the children. Two months, at least, say the tired teachers. For once, teachers and pupils are in perfect accord. The vote is unanimous, and there are no dissenters.

But there is actually a movement to return to the old-fashioned vacation of two weeks in August. In some parts of Canada, we see the teachers have much trouble to get the whole month for a rest. Among ourselves there is a strong pressure brought to bear upon school committees in some counties to shorten the vacation.

A father says: "My boy bathes in the river seven times a day when he is out of school, and plays himself to death; he is never sick except when school is closed." A poor laboring mother cries: "What! are my four children to be thrown on my hands the whole summer?" A man of business declares: "In thirty years, I have not had a vacation of ten days, and yet six weeks are not enough for the teachers!"

We see there are two sides to this question. It is certainly desirable to keep children from running wild, and yet both they and their teachers need change and rest. It may be found best, in the course of time, or even now in some places, to hold a sort of picnic every morning during the heat of summer at and around the school-house. The girls could bring their sewing, the boys their pencils, and all of them their singing-books. Avoiding hard lessons and all the usual routine, the school could spend the morning in singing, sewing, drawing, reading, and listening to reading. Such a plan would be more agreeable to the parents and children than to the teacher. For teachers need and must have rest.—Youth's Companion.

A furrier recently sent the store-boy to the back part of the establishment to bring forward a certain fur cape. After some time the youngster returned with the article neatly folded up, and was greeted with: "Well, you've got back at last, have you? You've been gone long enough to sail from South America." "Well, sir," said the lad, as he modestly raised his parcel, "I did double the cape."

Laying on Fat.

We have complaints from England that the beef which we send there is not sufficiently "mottled" to suit the tastes of the English consumers, that the fat is laid on too much in compact masses, which has to be cut away for tallow and thus causing too much waste. We had supposed that the opposite of this was the rule, that the English-fed beef was much fatter than the American, but now the tables seemed to be turned against us, and American beef is charged with carrying too much tallow; not, they say, that it really contains more fat, but that it is not distributed as evenly as the fat in the English beef, and hence the result named. The Americans run their stock along for a few years, then commence feeding heavily with corn, converting a lean animal, in a few months, into a very fat one. Such an animal has a light muscle, and the corn lays on the fat heavily, while the English beef is fatted, in a great measure, on their rich pastures, and till the time it is slaughtered it is kept in a fattening condition the whole time, one object only being in view—to place it upon the market ready for slaughter. Linseed meal is fed heavily, but this contains a large amount of flesh-forming matter as well as being a fat producer. It seems that a mistake has been made in this matter. The demand was for fat beef, and without considering where the fat was wanted, we went to work and put it in the wrong place.

Do not let us run into error in this respect and say that it is the fastidious taste of the Englishman, for if we intend to supply him with beef, we must consult his taste. We must not say it is his prejudice. This avails us nothing, for if he is prejudiced we must conquer his prejudice by meeting his wants. But this complaint of piling the fat upon the animal in lumps does not come from England alone. Our own marketmen in the city of Boston, and other cities, make similar complaints, not only with regard to beef, but also of mutton and pork. The breeds of sheep which in England are noted for mottling their meat do not do so in this country, and the breed of hogs which are there so highly prized for hams and shoulders lose that peculiarity here. They want the mottled hams and shoulders and deep cuts of lean meat, with a small amount of outside fat. Their middles are cured for bacon, which requires a strip of fat and another of lean. Here the demand for middlings for the pork barrel is that they should be all fat, and in order to procure solid, fatted middlings, we, in a great measure, injure both shoulders and hams. This is a difficulty with pigs slaughtered for fresh pork, too much attention being given to fat, and to little to lean. The pigs should be fed with more flesh-producing matter and less corn—more clover, shorts, and malt dust, mixed with a fair share of corn. Commence fattening the steer as soon as he ceases to be a calf, and be sure and keep the calf well; do the same with the wethers, and we shall have meat which will not only suit the English market, but our own.—American Cultivator.

A Sad Change.

A manufacturing population tends steadily downward, at least to a fearfully low level.

It was long supposed that the United States were going to prove the exception in this respect. Thirty years ago our factory girls were above the average of females in intelligence, refinement, benevolence and general character.

Indeed, many of them were simply accumulating means for the completion of their education at the higher seminaries. Dickens and other English travelers looked on them with amazement. The Lowell Offering, a magazine conducted wholly by the operatives, commanded universal esteem.

But already this happy condition is passing away. The greed of corporations asks only for profits. No matter how low the grade of workers, provided only the work is done. The life may be early crushed out of the employed, but are not their places kept always full?

The poorer and more dependent they are, the more ready they will be to let their children work in the mill, when they should be at school, or out in the sunshine at play. If things go on as they are now, it is only a question of time when the manufacturing population of New England shall be as hopelessly degraded as that of Old England.

It is evident that it behooves the State to stand between the corporations and their operatives. It owes this to its own welfare. It can not do everything, but what it can it should do with a strong hand and a persistent will.

It can secure to children their right to a proper education, and their exemption from labor that shall dwarf them in body and brain. It can limit the hours of labor for all to what is physically safe. It can, by means of honest and qualified inspectors, keep a sharp eye on all the inherent abuses of the system.—Youths' Companion.

No Baby.

There lives in the country, not far from Sacramento, a worthy couple, well known and much esteemed, whose only alloy to their cup of happiness resides in the fact that thus far they have not, after some years of wedded life, been blessed by that crowning glory of matrimony—a child. Unto them no heir has been born. To the aged widowed mother of one of the parties this is equally a source of regret, and she does not hesitate to voice her disappointment. The other day, while the two ladies were visiting at a neighboring farm, one of the company indiscreetly ventured upon the subject of inquiring how many little prattlers were making home merry in the household of the visitors. "None," replied the elderly lady, "not one, and—" "Now, mother, please don't. I'm sure there's time enough," interposed the other. "Oh, I know what you'll say—" "But, mother—" "Don't but me! I know I've got no grandchild, and I guess I aint likely to have one either unless I have it myself." That closed the argument for that day.

A certain member of Parliament who owned extensive estates was spending a few days at the residence of a noble family. There were several interesting and accomplished young ladies in the family, to whom the honorable member showed every attention. Just as he was about to take leave, the nobleman's wife proceeded to consult him upon a matter which she alleged, was causing her no little distress. "It is reported," said the Countess, "that you are to marry my daughter Lucy, and what shall we do? What shall we say about it?" "Oh," responded the considerate M. P., "just say she refused me!"

How a Famous Cheese is Made.

Perhaps the most justly celebrated cheese made on the Continent of Europe is the Swiss Gruyere. This is made mostly in huts, called chalets, high up among the Alps, at the time during which the pastures on the mountain-sides are accessible, and the huts habitable, say from the melting of the snow in May to the end of September, when men and animals descend for the winter into the sheltered valleys thousands of feet below.

The chalets are located in the midst of the mountain pastures on a spot safe from avalanches, and generally near to a small pond or spring of water, when such are available. Provisions from the valleys are carried up weekly to the chalets, and it is under such difficult circumstances that a cheese is made which for hundreds of years has been considered almost, if not quite the best on the Continent.

The milk, partly skimmed, or not, according to the quality of the cheese desired to be made, is put into a great kettle and swung on a crane over a gentle fire, where it is allowed to attain a temperature of seventy-seven degrees Fahrenheit, when the kettle is swung off the fire and rennet is added to the milk. When coagulation has advanced far enough the curd is cut into as fine pieces as is practible with the large wooden knife which is used for the purpose. The kettle is then swung over the fire again, and the curd is taken up in small quantities in a porringer and poured back through the fingers, where it is still more finely divided.

Great importance is attached to this division of the curd, in order that each particle may be fully exposed to the action of the heat in the "cooking" process, which ensues up to a point when a temperature of 90° has been attained. The kettle is then immediately swung off the fire, and the waste of curd and whey stirred for some fifteen minutes longer, and if the cooking has been properly performed the particles of curd have the appearance of bursted grains of rice swimming in the whey. The curd is then collected in a cloth, and great care is taken to expel all whey. The salting of the cheese is also considered a delicate and important process. The salt is rubbed from time to time on the outside of the cheese, care being taken to discern when enough shall have been absorbed. The Gruyere cheeses are commonly three feet in diameter, and weigh over one hundred pounds. A successful cheese of this kind is like a soft yellow paste, which melts in the mouth, and it is filled with cavities about the size of a pea, one or two, say, in each square inch of cheese.—Dairyman's Journal.

Curious Epitaphs.

In wandering through the various resting places of the dead one might well exclaim: "Where are the sinners buried?" Surely their graves are not here; the inscriptions on marble, shaft or slab indicate the resting places of the good alone. But in going here and there through old cemeteries, especially in England, one often comes across inscriptions strangely unlike those of the present day. Let us pass by the ordinary ones and read some of the extraordinary. The two wives of Thomas Sexton are buried in a churchyard near Newmarket. Upon the stone over the grave of the first one is the following:

Here lies the body of Sarah Sexton—
She was a wife that never vexed one.
I can't say so much for the one at the next stone.

In the cemetery of the Old Grey Friars, Edinburgh, we find:

Here snug in the grave my wife doth lie,
Now she is at rest, and so am I.

Here is another:

Here lies my dear wife, a sad slattern and shrew,
If I said I regretted her, I should lie, too.

On a tombstone in Cyford:

Here, deep in the dust,
The old moldy crust
Of Nell Batchelor lately shoven;
Who was skilled in the arts
Of pies, puddings and tarts
And knew every use of the oven,
When she had lived long enough
She made her last puff—
A puff by her husband much praised—
Now here she doth lie
And makes a dirt pie
In hope that her crust may be raised.

But these are rather unjust toward the fair sex. Let us look for something more truthful. We find it in St. Michael's Churchyard, Coventry:

She was—
But words are wanting
To say what.
Look what a wife should be,
And she was that.

In memory of Katherine Gray, who kept a pottery shop at Chester:

Beneath this stone lies old Katherine Gray,
Changed from a busy life to lifeless clay;
By earth and clay she got her pelf,
But now is turned to earth herself.
Ye weeping friends let me advise,
Abate your grief and dry your eyes,
For what avails a flood of tears?
Who knows but in a run of years,
In some tall pitcher or broad pan
She in her shop may be again?

Be Honest.

I tell you, brethren, be honest in your dealings; take no advantage, even of a child. Be conscientious in your bargains. Have a single eye and a single heart. Seek not to be shrewd. Be not ashamed to be called simple. And let me tell you a secret, which ought not to be a secret, seeing it is written in the scriptures, that your whole body will then be full of light, and this in every kind. You will actually see further and see clearer than shrewd and cunning men; and you will be less liable to be duped than they, provided you add to this another part of character which is proper to an honest man—namely, a resolution to protect honesty, and to discountenance every kind of fraud.

A cunning man is never a firm man, but an honest man is; a double-minded man is always unstable; a man of faith is firm as a rock. I tell you there is a sacred connection between honesty and faith; honesty is faith applied to worldly things, and faith is honesty quickened by the spirit to the use of heavenly things.—Edward Irving.

This is a Dramatic News correspondent's view of the Hub: "To promote suicidal inclinations easily, rapidly and by an entirely natural method, I know of nothing more infallible than being a stranger in Boston. The hotels are wretched, the citizens look upon you with an air of cool suspicion that would exasperate a graven image, the sidewalks are so narrow that walking upon them reminds you of a tight rope performance, and the streets are so crooked that by walking straight ahead for twenty-four hours you pass the starting point exactly eighteen times."

BANKING IN THE UNITED STATES.

Statistics Covering a Period of Fifty Years.

An authentic table of the number of banks throughout the United States, with details of their liabilities and resources from 1830 to 1880, has just been issued from official sources at Washington. The table is in effect a resume of the history of American banking for half a century past. It divides itself into two epochs. The first begins with the rise in financial power and political influence of the old United States Bank at Philadelphia, goes through with the downfall of that institution and ends with the advent of the civil war. The second begins with the substantial destruction of the State-bank system and the foundation of the Chase national-banking system. Considering this table in decades we find that in 1830 there were 394 banks, with a capital stated in round numbers of $148,000,000, with a circulation of $51,000,000, with deposits of $58,000,000, with $25,000,000 of specie and $9,000,000 of real-estate resources. In 1840 there were 907 banks, with $363,000,000 of capital, $88,000,000 of circulation, $120,000,000 of deposits, $35,000,000 of specie, and $26,000,000 of real estate. In 1850 we find a decrease in the number of banks to 824, in capital to $217,000,000, and in deposits to $109,000,000, accompanied by an increase of circulation to $118,000,000, and of specie to $45,000,000, but with a reduction in real estate to $21,000,000. In 1860, after only ten years, the number of banks had nearly doubled, so that they stood at 1,597, with $427,000,000 of capital, $156,000,000 of circulation, $271,000,000 of deposits, $90,000,000 of specie, and $28,000,000 of real estate. Within the ensuing ten years, ending in 1870, the number of banks fluctuated seriously, falling at one time to 1,466, and rising at another to 1,645, with corresponding changes in all of the other particulars which we have collated. Since 1870 the number of banks has steadily increased until it stands this year at 2,049, representing a capital of $454,000,000, and with $6,000,000 less of circulation and $16,000,000 less of specie than the 1,595 banks of 1870. This year, however, shows an enormous growth of real-estate resources to $48,000,000, and of deposits to $767,000,000, being $110,000,000 more than in 1870, nearly $500,000,000 more than in 1860, $658,000,000 more than in 1850, and $709,000,000 more than when the half century began. During this whole period the total of our banking liabilities and resources has risen from $270,000,000 to $1,500,000,000. This development of American banking marks a corresponding development of American trade and industry, a development much more than proportionate to the approximated estimate which Gen. Walker, the Superintendent of the Census, has given us within a few days past, of our increase in population from 23,000,000 in 1850 to 48,000,000 in 1880. The telegraph and the steam-engine explain the disproportion.

How to Manage a Kitchen.

"A clean kitchen makes a clean house," is a saying which has a great deal of truth in it. As all the food of the family has to be prepared in the kitchen, and as most working people have to take their meals and sit in the kitchen—indeed, as the one day-room has to be parlor, kitchen, and all to many honest families—it ought to be clean and neat, or it will not be comfortable and healthy. First of all, the window and the fireplace must be clean and bright. No room is cheerful with a dirty fire-place. Every morning the room must be carefully swept, and any hearth-rug, mat, or piece of carpet must be taken out of doors and beat daily. The hearth must be cleaned every day, and the stove brushed, the fire-irons rubbed with a leather once a week at least, the grate must be black-leaded, and the fender and irons thoroughly polished, and all well scoured down twice a week. Cupboards want great care to keep them free from dust, cool and neat. Suppesing there are two cupboards, one on each side of the fire-place, it is well to keep one for stores, as groceries, etc., and one for crockery. Everything should be clean that is put in the cupboards, and there should be a place for every different thing, so that if you wanted anything, even in the dark, you could lay your hand upon it. Be sure, whether you keep the lids bright or not, to keep the inside of every pan or pot used in cooking so clean that it is perfectly dry and sweet. If you neglect his you may be the cause of poisoning yourself and your household. Many families have been poisoned by food being cooked in dirty pans. Besides, even if food is not made poisonous, it is spoiled by not being cleanly cooked. Be very particular about this. It is a good plan to have a jar of soda in some handy place, where you can, whenever you wash up, take a bit and put in the water. It is very cleansing, and both crockery and tins washed in hot water, with a bit of soda in, will be sure to shine and be sweet. All tins should be polished once a week. Kitchen towels require good management. It is a very nasty habit to be careless about towels. Tea things and glass should be wiped with a thin, coarse towel kept for that purpose. If you have a plate-rack over the sink, plates should be washed in hot water, rinsed in cold, and put to drain in the rack; but if you have no rack you must wipe the plates; keep a good dish-cloth to wash them with, and a good coarse towel to dry them with, and use your dish-cloth and your dish-towel for nothing else.

A Buddhist Fable.

Bodhisat was a tradesman who went from village to village to dispose of his wares. One day when at the house of a carpenter, whose head was bald like a copper porringer, a musquito alighted thereon; and the carpenter called to his son, who was near, to drive it away. The son taking a sharp ax for this purpose, aimed a blow at the insect, but split his father's head in two and killed him. On seeing what he had done, Bodhisat said that an enemy was better than a foolish relative or friend.

DeKalb county	26
Noble "	29
Elkhart "	31
Total	86

THE Fort Wayne Sentinel, having finished its Spicey editorials, is now engaged in a war with the medical colleges, and they are having about the same kind of a time as the monkey and the parrot had—a "hell of a time."

DOCTOR TANNER, the rascal, instead of practicing self-denial is only preparing for a big feast. Once before, it seems, he fasted for over forty days, and when he came to his appetite, he craved everything that came in sight—food of all kinds disappearing before him by the peck and half bushel. This is what he is fixing for now. Oh, the glutton!

* * *

THE fable of the frog and the ox is having, just now, a new exponent. A lively Ft. Wayne editor attached enough importance to a rumor that Billy Williams, of Warsaw, was trying to recuperate his political fortunes by coming out for Hancock, to put it in print. This was likely to be the death of Billy for awhile. He at once commenced, toad-fashion, swelling up, so that the little man's cuticle, tough as it is, came well-nigh bursting. Before it had quite reached the dimensions of the ox, however, a friendly typo seems to have given Billy vent, and, after declaring the rumor to be untrue, and blowing off what may be called a sort of post mortem collection of additional bile against the naughty democracy, who spoiled Billy's little scheme of selling stale eggs and rancid butter to the soldiers, once upon a time, Billy probably feels better. And so, indeed, does the democracy.

A Change.

It is with deep regret that I have to announce to my many friends—both personal and political—that I have severed my connection with the COURIER. I have no desire to recount the many vexations and the steady, hard labor connected with the publication of a newspaper and the management of a job printing-office; it is sufficient to say that my labors in that direction, during my connection with the COURIER, have been recompensed to some extent by the kindness and good-will manifested toward me by the citizens generally, for which I return my sincere and heartfelt thanks. I expect to remain a citizen of DeKalb county, and shall always feel a deep interest in the prosperity of the people, the success of the democratic party and democratic principles. I ask for the COURIER a continuation of patronage, and for my successor and former partner the confidence and assistance of all who desire the success of the COURIER. Lend him your aid in the upbuilding of a first-class weekly newspaper, that the COURIER may always be, as it is now, the best paper in the county.

THEO. REED.

Salutatory.

The change announced to-day in the business and management of the COURIER involves the necessity of our parting with our late associate, Mr. Reed. This we do with the utmost regret. Having ever found him a most genial, estimable and reliable associate and friend, the separation is more than unpleasant to us—it is painful. As is greatly to be desired, the change of business will not necessarily involve a change of residence on Mr. Reed's part, and we hope still to share, in common with others, the satisfaction of his presence amongst us.

After having tried his hand at it for the brief period of two weeks, the undersigned assumes sole control of the COURIER, permanently, with some reluctance. Asking the considerate indulgence, however, of its patrons and the community for any shortcomings on his part—whether attributable to inexperience, want of that thorough acquaintance so desirable in such cases, or other cause—he pledges himself to try his utmost to fulfill all the requirements of the situation as fully as it may be in his power to do. The business is that which he has chosen as the vocation of his life, the practical part of which he has endeavored to learn sufficiently to understand the workings of that department. With the rules of business appertaining to the management of the affairs of such an establishment, he has endeavored to familiarize himself as fully as possible; and from the experience he has had during the last fifteen months' connection with the editorial department, he is led to believe that, by that diligence and application without which nothing of importance in any sphere can be accomplished, he will be enabled to render at least reasonable satisfaction to the great party whose cause it will be his mission to advocate, and to the intelligent and enterprising people with whose interests he expects to be identified.

ROB. J. LOWRY.

Wetting Their Powder.

This is the way the present candidate of the republicans wets down, in anticipation, the powder of the prurient orators and spit-fire newspapers, who are endeavoring to get up a campaign at this time by blowing up the fagots of sectional animosity and rekindling the dead embers of civil strife. Hear him;

"I want to say another thing. So far as I have studied the current of public thought and of political feeling in this country, no feeling has shown itself more strongly than the tendency of the public mind in the past few months. The man who attempts to get up a political excitement in this country, upon all sectional issues, will find himself without a party and without support. The man who wants to serve his country must put himself in the line of its leading thought, and that is, the restoration of business, trade, commerce, industry and sound political economy."

The above was uttered by Mr. Garfield but two short years ago, viz: in 1878, from his place in the house of representatives. Suppose Messrs. Potter, Taylor, Ninde, and others put these little sentiments in their pipes and smoke them awhile! But then, they may say that Garfield is nothing but a Credit-Mobilier, De Golyer rapscallion, after all!

A TELEGRAM from Columbia City to the Fort Wayne Sentinel, dated July 26, says: "A Hancock and English club was organized here Saturday night with a large number of members. Thos. Marshal was elected president, and Will. Adams, of the Post, secretary. The meeting was addressed by Judge Lowry and Hon. Eli W. Brown. Great enthusiasm prevailed."

* * *

MAJOR J. M. BUNDY, editor of the New York "Evening Mail," is busy writing the life of Garfield. Wonder if it can be relied upon as embracing all the transactions of his life? If so, 'twill be a wondrously interesting little story for some of our republican friends.

All Hands Around—Organize!

You who are yet young know what that first member in the sentence composing this heading means. You who are older will have a vivid recollection of what it used to mean. All hands around!—join in a circle. As applied to the giddy mazes of the dance, that is all well enough. We are now, as the play-actors phrase it, at more serious business; and the word now is, Organize!—all hands around!—Organize!

Organization is one of the great secrets of success in every sphere in life. In the putting forth of religious efforts, we organize into church societies; we establish Sabbath-schools. In furtherance of the great cause of education, we organize and put into operation successfully the grand scheme of our common school system. All great mercantile operations require concert of effort amongst many, or, at least, are seldom the result of individual effort. Lake and ocean steam and sail transportation are alike effected through the instrumentality of the great lines organized for that purpose, and which constitute the great arteries of commerce running transversely over two-thirds of the surface of our globe. The vast railroad enterprises through which our business life throbs all over the land, as do the pulses of animal life in giving impetus to the vital fluid, are the direct outgrowth of the most systematic organization of the combined powers of capital and brains.

In the political world a mighty work is now to be accomplished. The abuses of corrupt administration are to be rectified. Usurpation of official power is to be thwarted or held in check. Unconstitutional interference with the inestimable right of the franchise is to be held at bay. The great returning-board fraud and usurpation of 1876 is to be rebuked. The high tariff enactments, by which the masses of the people are being fleeced of their hard earnings for the benefit of the favored few, are to be wiped out or modified. The books of the treasury are to be settled, the cash counted, and a straightened record kept hereafter. The faith and practice of sectional fraternity and unity is to be instituted for the religion of hate and sectional animosity and bitterness. The accession to power of men as compared with whose records those of the whisky ring thieves and their abettors, in and outside of recent administrations, have the fragrance of sweet orders, is to be prevented, at all hazards, by all the means within the constitutional power of freemen to exert. And all this must be done.

Shall we not, then, organize for the effort? The prospect for success is already most glorious. By supineness the opportunity may slip by. Let us arouse, then, democrats, to the requirements of the occasion and put on our full strength, through the instrumentality of thorough and complete organization everywhere!

IN the Ft. Wayne Sentinel appears a small "ad," headed, "Eat Slow." At first glance it is deceptive, as we read it "Eat Crow," thinking it was a late and improved method of performing that delicate operation.

* * *

WE would like to hear a few more remarks from the Waterloo Press, Garrett Herald and Auburn Republican, relative to Mr. Provines' statement that he "didn't want any democratic votes." Surely, you are not through, gentlemen?

Not So Fast.

Two or three weeks ago, the editor of the "Messenger," at Fremont, Ohio, got his foot into it temporarily by the substitution of Garfield's name for Hancock's, in one of his editorials, and several of the republican papers around this region, including the Auburn Republican, eager, like the drowning man, to grasp at straws, have been crowing over the new accession to their ranks. It appears, however, that all these gentlemen have shot their pencils off a trifle prematurely, and the following explanation from Mr. Osborn, the editor alluded to, will have a tendency to put a quietus on their enthusiasm:

FREMONT, O., July 10, 1880.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

The Messenger has not flopped over to Garfield, notwithstanding the substitution by the compositor of his name for Hancock's in the concluding sentence of an editorial in our issue of July 8. The matter was overlooked in the proof sheet. We simply told a lie unconsciously in connection with Garfield's name, and ask the good Lord Almighty to forgive us for it. The republicans have had their fun over it, and have laughed considerable at our expense, but they should remember that "he who laughs last laughs longest." Next November the republicans will laugh out of the other side of their mouths when they see old Sandusky county roll up a majority of 1,000 for Hancock and English.

Newspapers will readily appreciate the situation. All we ask is that if our exchanges say anything, they will say that we made the greatest mistake (unconsciously) of our lives. The Messenger is for Hancock and English, first, last and all the time.

JAMES M. OSBORN,
Editor Messenger.

It will therefore be seen that it was all owing to the blunder of a compositor, who had probably been out late the night previous; but the exulting of the republican press can be pardoned, as it is the only instance where there has yet been even the shadow of a chance for them to crow—all the accessions being on the other side.

A Larger Show

Coming.

TWENTY TIMES
The Best
Entertainment You
Ever Saw.

12 MONSTER SHOWS IN ONE!

The time will probably never come in the history of the human race when the people will get tired of visiting a good first-class entertainment under canvas. We have just received word from the agent of the Great Inter Ocean, a new show composed of a dozen or more consolidated into one, and creating a perfect furor in the world of amusement, that the entire vast consolidation will exhibit in Auburn on August 14, 1880, and give three full and complete performances on that day. This show was named in honor of the Chicago Daily of the same name, and right well does the namesake keep faith with the public in all it advertises to perform. The wonderful Electric Light is one of the numerous features of the Inter Ocean, and it is said to be by far the finest of the kind ever seen in any show in the world.

The public like enterprise, new life and enthusiasm, and from appearances these are just the qualities that conspire to make a success of the Inter Ocean, and why it is patronized daily by the largest crowds that ever witnessed any show.

The Springfield, (Ill.) State Register, after it had visited that city, says of the show:

THE GREATEST OF SHOWS.

The largest crowd that ever attended the performance of any circus witnessed the exhibitions of the great Inter Ocean circus and menagerie yesterday. Thousands of people gathered along the principal thoroughfares to see the grand street parade, and we do not hesitate to say that the magnificent procession made by the Inter Ocean has never been equaled in this city. The long line of chariots, tableau cars, etc., made an imposing sight that will long be remembered.

The managerie includes all the leading zoological specimens, from every quarter of the globe, among which are the large war elephant, "Empress," the largest elephant in the world, and also the oldest and best trained. Also the White Elephant, the first ever shown here, the Egyptian sea cow, the mammoth sea lions and other leading features, while the museum is the most complete ever seen here.

In the immense canvas used for the circus performance there was not even standing room, hundreds of people being unable to gain admittance. At the evening performance the various acts given were vastly superior to anything ever seen here before.

Our space will not allow us to particularize, but we cannot refrain from mentioning the marvelous performances of the Siegrist children, who are, without question, the finest acrobats in the world. The bareback riding of Miss Mollie Brown is undoubtedly the finest of any one now before the public, while the riding of Sebastian, Scarfer and Rivers are of the highest order.

Take it altogether, the great Inter Ocean certainly gave the most satisfactory entertainment ever given here, and exhibited everything they advertised.

The electric light used by this monster aggregation is a complete success, and is a great improvement on the old method of lighting the canvas.

The managers are to be congratulated on the successful combination they have placed on the road, and the public can rest assured that they will carry out to the letter everything they advertise.

The Keokuk, Quincy, Peoria, Milwaukee, Bloomington and other papers where the Inter Ocean has visited, speak of it in the most commendable terms, all uniting in the declaration, "It is the best in the whole country."

The Grand Army of Dyspeptics.

Thousands are dropping into line daily. They can't tell you just how it happened, but there they are. Eating has no charms for them, and disagreeable and disgusting dreams take the place of refreshing slumber. They feel them, and they in turn despise and detest mankind. The great cause of all this disturbance, in most cases, is an inactive or torpid liver, and can be easily removed by a few doses of Dr. White's Dandelion Alterative. For sale at Casebeer & Matheny's drug store. 31-2w.

Over 1,500 Cases of Fits Cured!

A Preliminary Meeting.

The democrats of Auburn met at Ensley's hall, last Tuesday evening, to take preliminary steps for the organization of a Hancock and English club. A large crowd was in attendance and organized the meeting by the election of Theo. Reed for chairman and D. D. Moody for secretary. Pending the enrollment of names for the club, a motion was carried to suspend further enrollment and listen to an address by Hon. R. Lowry, who had been invited to be present on that occasion. Judge Lowry was introduced and proceeded to deliver a sound, logical and eloquent speech, which was received with rounds of applause by his hearers. All present were deeply interested in the facts presented by the speaker; the democrats were gratified and filled with enthusiasm, while the numerous republicans present showed evidence of being under conviction. The meeting and the speech did a great amount of good and laid the foundation for a lively canvass, which will result in a sweeping victory in October and November.

The meeting adjourned to re-assemble Wednesday evening next, when the list will be completed and an organization effected by the adoption of a constitution and by-laws and the election of officers for the club.

D. D. MOODY, Sec'y.

Commenced in Earnest.

The above has reference to the campaign; it has indeed opened up for active business, and it is to be hoped that all meetings will be enthusiastically attended. The democrats throughout the district of which we form a part are, like us, up and in arms. The following meetings, for the purpose of opening the campaign in a business-like way, will be held two weeks from next Saturday, or August 14, at the various places named:

At Angola, Steuben county, 2 p. m. Hon. John B. Stoll, Hon. Freeman Kelley and Otis L. Ballou Esq. are the speakers.

At Albion, Noble county, 2 p m. Speakers: Hon. A. Ellison and Col. I. B. McDonald.

Kendallville, Noble county, 7:30 p. m. Speakers: Hon. Gabriel Schmuck and Wm. McNagney Esq.

At Auburn, DeKalb county, 2 p. m. Speakers: Hon. E. O'Rourke and M. V. B. Spencer Esq.

At Columbia City, Whitley county, 2 p. m. Speakers: Hon. R. C. Bell and Hon. Allen Zollars.

At Lagrange, Lagrange county, 2 p. m. Speakers: Hon. Robert Lowry and Henry Colerick Esq.

And at Fort Wayne in the evening, 7:30, where the speakers will be Hon. Thos. A. Hendricks, Hon. W. G. Colerick and Hon. J. D. Sarninghausen.

It Was Good to be There.

The dancing party given last Thursday evening, at Pleasant Lake, by the "Bon Ami Social Club" of Angola, was a decidedly happy event; it was characterized by the admirable manner in which all arrangements had been made for its success, and by the entire absence of any improper characters—people who ordinarily manage to edge in, some way, on such occasions. The music was fine and the dancers were in their element; the evening was comparatively cool, the moon was in her glory, and "everything was lovely"—particularly the girls. Mixed up in the happy throng we observed, from Fort Wayne, Misses Annie and Pauline Ward, and Miss Lida Lowry; Mrs. Shryock and son Will, of Huntertown, and the following representatives of Auburn: Misses Annie Hampton, Metta Ferris, Annis Cowan, Ida Bell and Lou. Carpenter; Mrs. F. P. Copper, Mr. and Mrs. Jno. L. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Robbins and Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Zimmerman; Messrs. Fred. Clark, Dave Hampton, Fred. Davis, Will. Shaffer, Elza Shaffer and—once we peeped into a mirror and caught a glimpse of the red-hot features of the writer, who immediately stole out and took a dr—dr—ive in the park.

They Did.

Who did? The Knights Templar did. They did drill and have a jolly good time in Auburn last Friday afternoon. They did have on their uniforms and they looked so charming that the girls could scarcely refrain from embracing them on the public square. All levity aside, the drill reflected much credit on the gallant Sir Knights, and the Apollo Commandery No. 19, of Kendallville, is composed of a body of fine looking men—Auburn members included. After the street parade, the whole party marched to the Swineford house, where they took possession and did full justice to a superb supper which had been prepared for the occasion. And that night the visiting members did go home.

Our Schools.

At a meeting of the school board of the the town of Auburn, held July 26, 1880, it was decided to open the fall term of school August 23, and continue ten weeks, with the following corps of teachers:

W. P. Myers, principal, W. H. Harrison, assistant; T. P. Saxton, grammar. Intermediate department, Miss L. E. Clark and Miss L. A. Coats. Primary department, Miss L. Stoner and Miss B. Tritch. Rates of foreign tuition, per month: High school, $1.50; grammar department, $1.00; intermediate department, 75 cents; and primary department, 50 cents.

JOHN OTTO, Secretary.

—Prepare for the circus.

—Don't eat too much sausage; it isn't ripe yet.

—The "Great Inter-Ocean Show" is coming. Watch the date,—Aug. 14.

—The grand regatta at Bawbeese Lake, Hillsdale, is taking place to-day.

—F. T. Burnham and wife, of Angola, were in town yesterday, registered at the Swineford.

—Clyde Moore has just got home for another talk with his friends, having completed a tour around the world.

—The youngsters are in a seventh heaven of ecstasy, and no more in the next two weeks will nickels be squandered foolishly. Circus.

—We would like to have the names of the school-examiners of DeKalb county for the years 1849,1850, 1851 and 1852—three each year. Will our readers assist us in securing the desired information?

—Mr. J. J. VanAuken, the democratic nominee for sheriff of DeKalb county, was in town last evening. He gives an encouraging account of democratic prospects in DeKalb.—Ft. Wayne Sentinel, Thursday.

—There is some probability that the two circuses—the Great Inter Ocean and Forepaugh's—will conflict, as they are both making arrangements to come here on the same day. What a picnic for the juveniles!

Jas. A. Robinson, advance agent for 4-Paws great show, which exhibits tomorrow in Kendallville, is in town today, distributing dodgers for that performance. Wait for the great Inter-Ocean, two weeks from Saturday.

—Lost, on Eleventh street, between the residences of J. A. McKay and G. W. Stahl, or on Jackson street, between Jno. L. Davis' and G. W. Stahl's, a child's gold necklace. The finder will confer a favor by leaving it at Willis & Co.'s book-store.

—John Korth, the "Flying Dutchman," no longer takes his rations at the hotel Swineford; he got his independent little back up at nothing, and left—as a consequence of which all the other boarders' hearts are broken.

—A transient printer, working this week in the COURIER office, says that Dr. Tanner need not be so proud of the feat he is accomplishing, as he is not the only man who is living without eating; they are to be found all over the country.

—There is one township in Lagrange county, according to the Standard, which is chiefly populated by Millers and Yoders, there being 177 of the former and 120 of the latter. If they don't let up pretty soon, the township will have to be enlarged.

—The button-hole bouquets furnished to the Knights Templar, at their supper Friday evening, were tendered by Mrs. S. C. Swineford, to whom much credit is due. The bouquets were highly appreciated, and the supper was par excellence.

—Monday evening, during a heavy rain and thunder storm near Blair, this county, lightning struck and killed two horses belonging to Samuel and Sam'l M. Foltz. At the time they were struck, the horses were in an open field, no trees, house or barn being near.

—Circuses, John Leasure says, never fail to make business lively in the hardware store. The Inter-Ocean agent hadn't been in town more than ten minutes, yesterday, until a man rushed into Kiblinger's and bought half a pound of putty and a paper of tacks.

—The tight-rope-walking by "Mons. Leroy," Tuesday evening, drew an immense crowd. All the young ladies in town were there, but they only came down to do some shopping, you know. He is a good rope-walker, having walked all over the country—between towns.

—The meeting held Tuesday evening, at Ensley hall, for the purpose of organizing a Hancock and English club, was more largely attended than any meeting that has been held for many years for similar purposes, which is encouragement enough to go on with the good work.

—It is our purpose to make a full and complete settlement of our company book-accounts at least once every year, by cash or note; and one year of our co-partnership having now expired, a settlement with each of our patrons is respectfully solicited. Please call at once, and oblige

DRS. CASEBEER & MATHENY.

—Next Sunday, August 1, is the day set for the basket meeting and reunion of the Universalists of central and northern Indiana, at Pleasant Lake. The train over the Jackson road will pass Auburn at 10:15 a. m.; returning leaves Pleasant Lake at 6 p. m. Fare for the round trip, sixty cents.

—The Presbyterian society will be entertained by Mrs. E. D. Hartman and Mrs. J. E. Rose, in the basement rooms of the church, next Wednesday evening; ice-cream and cake will be served as refreshments. All are cordially invited to attend.

MRS. J. E. ROSE, Sec'y.

—One week from to-morrow, or Friday, August 5, there is to be a grand harvest picnic at Lakeside park, Pleasant Lake, at which there are to be boat-races, a Spanish prize tournament, a binding match, etc., to wind up in the evening with a harvest ball. Tickets will be sold on the Ft. Wayne and Jackson road at half fare.

—The boys at the Jackson depot put up a fiendish job on Frank Leas yesterday, sending him a snide telegram purporting to be from Eugene Trout, of Waterloo, in answer to which Frank got a horse and buggy last evening and went up there; and he is hardly mad enough to-day, —— has been chewing soap and spitting white since daylight.

—Samuel Roberts, of Concord township, who is about 32 years old, was conveyed Monday to the insane asylum at Indianapolis. While at the depot at Fort Wayne, waiting for the train south, Roberts made a desperate attempt to get away, in which he failed, though he succeeded in getting in a crack on Mr. Somers' head, our deputy-sheriff.

—Byron Grube, son of Philip Grube, living about three miles from town, had the misfortune, last Thursday, while adjusting the cutter-bar of a mowing machine, to lose the little finger of his left hand, exposing the bone so badly that amputation at the second joint was necessary. The wounded hand was dressed and properly attended to by Drs. Casebeer & Matheny, and is now healing rapidly.

—A letter received this week from Jack Little, foreman of the COURIER office, who is sojourning now at Williamsport, Pa., speaks in glowing terms of that mountainous region. He says that he sees many novel sights which are "pleasing to his Hoosier eye," and that he has "gained six pounds and is still expanding"—in which case he will perhaps be as large as a fat match when he gets home.

—"Yank" Packard, the notion peddler, talked himself stone blind last night, but he barreled up and lugged away about a wagon-load of quarters, dimes and half dollars. Guy. Plumb stood there and bought until both arms were full, and then was dragged away by a friend who didn't care to see him bankrupted; and Henry Gugerli invested in enough stove-blacking to polish the Swineford house, offset with soap enough to wash it off again.

St. Joe.

—Wm. Volmar has his residence completed.

—Sam. Lawhead will become a citizen of St. Joe shortly.

—Will Seely, of Newville, loaded two cars with lumber last Friday.

—Will. Leighty returned from his northern tour on Saturday.

—James Sechler will build a handsome residence this fall in St. Joe.

—Mrs. W. K. Mitchell was visiting at Bryan, Ohio, the first of the week.

—L. S. Saylor and M. D. Engle with their better halves, took in the grove meeting Sunday last.

—John Leighty, who has been visiting his son Aleck in Michigan, returned to St. Joe Thursday.

—John Summerlot, having sold his property to Sam. Lawhead, contemplates moving to Ohio soon.

—Dr. Goodale and wife were visiting in Steuben county last week. The doctor reports everything lovely.

—The excursion last Friday was rather a tame affair, so far as St. Joe was concerned, only three putting in an appearance from this place—J. A. Provines and lady, and Wm. Henderson.

—The correspondent of the Republican, (Moses) who dishes up the Kingtown items under the head of St. Joe items, should be a little careful in regard to his hog-killing reports, as Jerome is "on his ear" and will make it hot for the parson greenbacker.

—We understand that M. E. Olds and Charles Meek will shortly organize a Garfield club at this place. It is further understood that the greenback parson has been tendered the office of chief spokesman and has accepted, and will enter upon his duties at once.

SPARTA.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-tf

NORTHERN INDIANA INSTITUTE FOR EDUCATING DEAF AND DUMB.

A Worthy Object.

MICHIGAN CITY, IND., July 23, '80.

TO THE PUBLIC: We take pleasure of informing you that we are desirous of establishing an institution for educating the deaf mutes to be under the management of the temporary officers, to be chosen by the directors, and temporary principal and instructor, Mr. Edwin N. Bowes. It is with some hesitancy upon our part that we have undertaken this work, and attempt it now only after repeated assurances from the citizens of Michigan City and vicinity that they would generously support such a worthy object. We are striving to start the school in the fall, and we hope then to be able to accommodate a limited number of pupils, say twenty-five or forty, from the northern part of Indiana. The number will be steadily increased as our finances will warrant, until state aid can be obtained.

The object in view is to teach deaf mutes English education, and also Prof. Bell's invisible speech, which is now extensively and successfully developed at the different deaf mute schools in America and Europe, and also some useful trades after school hours. It is scarcely necessary to demonstrate the many advantages to our city and the deaf mutes in the northern part of this state, as over 200 deaf mutes could not be accommodated at the old asylum at Indianapolis for lack of room, and also its disagreeable climate, and they should not be allowed to go in ignorance, but be made useful citizens.

The sum required to establish the school and support it will be between five and ten thousand dollars until the state aid can be obtained, as it is our intention to make appeal to the legislature next winter, when it will of course be a state institution, hence our principal object is to get the school in running order and then appeal to the legislature to make an appropriation, thus locating it permanently here. Each and every citizen is requested to give according to his or her means, and all donations be sent within fifteen days to our treasurer, Mr. Walter Vail, Cashier 1st National Bank, Michigan City, Indiana. Any assistance in this laudable undertaking will be gratefully received and thankfully acknowledged. A receipt signed by the treasurer and secretary will be sent to your address by return mail.

Please send your subscriptions for aiding the school establishment to our treasurer, Mr. Walter Vail, Cashier 1st National Bank, Michigan City, Ind.

An impecunious but witty actor recently "beat" his landlady out of a week's board by telling her that he would soon have money to liquidate her claims on him, as he had obtained a permanent position. Afterward, when asked what the position was, he replied, "United States inspector of laid railroad cross-ties." A little later he was met between two towns engaged in the arduous duties of his office.

FAIREST MORTAL, LOVELY JOAN.

Just when the doxol'gy was sung,
And saints stood still, with heads low hung,
While walls and vaulted arches rung
With Father Smith's beseeching tongue—
Just then across the aisle there sprung
A tony youth, and proudly flung
Himself beside his future bride,
Whose lovely little arm he grasped
Before she'd said a word, or gasped
A breath of approbation!

So dark and cloudy was the night
The waning moon lost all her light,
While not a star appeared in sight
To tell the youth which street was right;
And his betrothed spoke not a word,
Nor even acted like she heard
The words he said, but onward sped.
As should a fond, prospective groom,
He strove to ease her silent gloom
With strains of adoration.

He heaved a sad, sepulchral moan
That ended in a loving groan,
Then these words spake in frenzied tone:
"Oh, fairest mortal, lovely Joan (Than whom more charming none are known
In any land where birds have flown;
On any sea where sails are blown;
'Neath any sky where stars e'er shone;
'Mid tropic sands or icy zone),
With thee I'd rather dwell alone,
With naught to eat save crust and bone—
Or both lie buried 'neath one stone,
Than without thee to live and own
A crown, a scepter, and a throne."
She heaved a sigh and wiped her eye,
Which made our youthful hero feel
That all his earthly woe, or weal,
Was near its termination.

"In those tear-dimmed, angelic eyes
Methinks, e'en now, I see arise
The pearly gates of Paradise,
Through which there glides, and swiftly flies,
As lightning through the starlit skies,
A turtle dove, which bears, my love,
Within its pure and graceful beak,
Words that none but angels speak—
Save thee, their near relation!

"When I behold those golden curls
(And sure they'd charm great men like Earls)
I know thou'rt not as other girls;
This dimpled chin, that classic nose
(What fragrant music when it blows!);
Those cheeks which blush e'en like the rose
That in the choicest bower grows
So oft and oft have I caressed—
And still more oft, thou knowst, I've pressed
Those finger-tips and velvet lips!
'Tis joy supernal, bliss most sweet,
To bow before thee and thy feet,
And take an observation!

"My very heart with rapture thrills
Whene'er I think how, freed from ills
Of this sad life, by you, my wife—"
Before the "wife" was half pronounced
The fair one turned and at him bounced
This fierce ejaculation:

"Hold! hold! you yellow-headed brute!
Hold! hold, I say, you frog-eyed newt!
I swan I's half a mind to shoot
A great brick-bat clur through yer hat!
And now, you ugly blue-nosed wretch,
Yer'd better git, or shur I'll fetch
Handfuls of wool from off yer head
And scratch yer chin as blue as lead!
You son of old Tarnation!"

Soon sticks and stones flew thick and fast
As hailstones in a summer blast,
And, though he dodged them as they passed,
There came an awful rock at last
Which struck a tree, square at him glanced,
And laid him motionless—entranced!

* * * * * * *

He threw away his car, and danced,
Then, fire and brimstone! how he pranced
And raved and tore! and almost swore
He'd never, 'cept insane, or blind,
Attempt to escort womankind
So vile with degradation!

You've heard, now, boys, my story through,
So listen now—a word to you!
Whene'er your Joan from church you'd take,
Before you've made the final break,
In darkest night, or mid-day bright,
I pray you to right sharply look
Which is your Joan, and which the cook
Of Afric emigration!

ALBION, ILL. WALTER COLYER.

JUST MY LUCK.

Let anybody who likes turn up their nose, I feel not the slightest hesitation in avowing that I was in a hurry—in a great hurry.

The steamboat bell was ringing, for one thing, and blowing off steam in a way to send a nervous man distracted.

I knew I couldn't run—my boots were too tight. Then my wardrobe was on board—my gray suit, and my blue suit, and thirteen other suits—all my boots and embroidered slippers, fancy neckties, embroidered handkerchiefs and that new pomade.

"I'll sue the company if they are lost," I exclaimed mentally. "What business have they to be so frightfully punctual? Here I stopped for a moment to talk to Jenks, who has brought over the last new neck-tie, and—"

"Ha, ha! You'd better run, old boy; I have the first chance at the heiress."

I looked up and saw Ned laughing at me. Confound the fellow! How handsome he looked! If that boat started, should I ever dare to present myself, dusty and begrimed, at Elm Grove to find him there—as, of course, he would be—duly washed, shaved and curled, whispering in Nelly Langworth's ear.

"Run," shouted Ned again. The men were already withdrawing the plank. There was a young, very plainly-dressed woman just in front of me.

"Out of the way, woman," I said, pushing past her. She screamed slightly, and would have fallen, if one of the "hands" had not extended his arm and caught her. So Ned told me, for I was too much absorbed in looking after my baggage even to think about her.

Said he: "You nearly knocked that little woman sitting behind us down."

"Do you suppose I was going to let you have Miss Langworth to yourself?" I answered, chuckling.

"Why, is she so attractive?" asked Ned.

"Haven't the least idea, my dear fellow. You know, I'm only acquainted with her father; but I'm sure she's an angel. She has five hundred thousand in her own right."

"Five hundred thousand is a nice little sum!"

"Yes, when I get it (for, to be plain with you, Fred, I have a suit in the trunk that I think will put the matter beyond doubt). When I get it, I shall start with Mrs. Nelly for Paris, where I shall spend six months. From there I shall go—"

Fred burst into a loud laugh.

"Wait till you're introduced, Jim; perhaps she's cross-eyed."

"If she were humpbacked, for half a million I'd make her Mrs. Jonquil."

"Well, you are welcome to her. Give me a little, rosy, bright-eyed woman, who won't say to me, 'It was my money, sir, that made you what you are.'"

"There's the house—fine old place, ain't it?" I said, pointing to a handsome villa on the bank. "When I'm master there you shall come and spend the summer with me."

Fred laughed louder than ever. The boat stopped, and this little woman, whom I had so nearly knocked down, landed with us; but what was our surprise, after ensconsing ourselves in Mr. Langworth's handsome carriage, to behold her perched on the driving-seat with the coachman!

"It's some governess, or poor relation," I said, trying to reassure myself.

"I'll bet you five to one that it's Miss Langworth herself."

"Miss Langworth, indeed! Why, she has actually cotton gloves. There—see!" as we entered the grounds, "didn't I tell you so? She is going in the back way."

"All the same. She'll tell the heiress what you said," persisted Fred, and would talk of nothing else till Mr. Langworth and his family appeared, which they only did after a long delay.

At the first word he uttered I cast a glance of triumph at Fred. The little, plainly-dressed woman—who, by-the-by, was an insipidly-pretty person, with blue eyes, regular features and brown hair—was a Miss Jenny, a sort of companion to Miss Langworth, who proved to be about five-feet-ten, thin, pale, high-nosed, dashing, and a little under 30.

Of course, I immediately opened a conversation with her, leaving it to Fred to do the agreeable to the milk-and-water Miss Jenny.

"You have a charming retreat, Miss Langworth."

"Oh! yes, sir. Hain't you never saw it before?"

early, Miss Langworth was independent of grammar; but I admired her the more. It was only a proof that she was unsophisticated and not spoiled by the world.

"I am a stranger here; but I should think this such a spot as Lamb, the great poet, would have loved."

I hazarded this at a venture, for I am not great in the poetical line; but I was sure she wouldn't find me out if I did make a blunder.

The reply was, however, somewhat unexpected.

"Lamb! why, he used to live down here. He was the butcher, and we used always to be a laughin' about his name."

I saw Fred and Miss Jenny smile, and proposed a walk in the garden, where Miss Langworth murdered the Queen's English at her own sweet discretion, and I made love at mine, at which she didn't blush (though I do believe she tried to), but giggled in such an encouraging manner that I think I should have proposed on the spot, if the dressing-bell had not sounded at that moment.

"Splendid, ain't she?" said I, enthusiastically, to Fred.

"Raw-boned, rather," said Fred, doubtfully.

"Raw-boned! She's a perfect Juno."

"She's no chicken."

"Own up, old boy—you're jealous."

"Not a bit of it. That little Miss Jenny is charming, modest, intelligent, and pretty."

"Everyone to his taste. Mine, I confess, is more exalted."

"If you refer to her height, I agree with you."

"There goes the dinner-bell."

"Then you'd better hurry up, Jim. It takes you about half an hour to tie that cravat." And away went Fred, laughing maliciously. He would take the vacant seat by Miss Langworth, of course. I should be unbecomingly red in the face—my cravat would be a bungle—my left whisker wouldn't look like a breakfast roll, and—down went the jar with the new pomade.

I didn't swear, for it isn't gentlemanly; but I said something forcible about the jar, and went down to the dining-room.

There my worst fears were realized. Fred was helping Miss Langworth to gravy, as I entered, and the only empty chair was by Miss Jenny.

It struck me, as I seated myself, that my arrival had thrown this little person into something of a flutter. She raised her handkerchief to her face, and when she asked for potatoes I fancied that her voice faltered.

I was annoyed. If it had been in a country farm-house, and nobody else around, I might have noticed her; but, with Miss Langworth opposite, I was surprised that she evinced no more discretion. It was not my fault if I was fascinating; and, if my clothes did fit well, it was not agreeable to have impoverished young females falling in love with me.

I believe she made some remark about the opera, but I turned my head to talk to Mr. Langworth.

I would not swear to it, but I think I saw her drop her handkerchief. I could take my oath, however, that Jim Jonquil didn't pick it up.

After dinner, we adjourned to the bowling-saloon, which Mr. Langworth had built in the rear of his house.

"Not bad, is it?" said I to Fred. "Only I mean to have a window let in there—it's not light enough."

I heard a suppressed titter behind me, and for a moment fancied that Miss Langworth had overheard me; but it was only Miss Jenny, who seemed to have an unconquerable propensity to burst out into causeless fits of laughter.

I stepped past her to Miss Langworth, for I was determined Fred should not outwit me this time.

"Miss Langworth, shall we have a game? We can play against Fred and your—friend."

Miss Langworth acceded graciously, and I instructed her in the mysteries of counting up; for, strange to say, she knew nothing about it; and I got the balls, and I placed them in her somewhat bony hands, and I cried bravo when she knocked down a pin, and looked out of the corner of my eye to see the other little woman roll, which she did like a Trojan.

I must confess I was disconcerted; but I reflected that bowling was a somewhat masculine accomplishment, and that the lady who could make a ten-strike might be able to knock her husband down with equal grace and vigor.

But, of course, Miss Langworth was a proficient in music, of which I am fond.

"No," she said, "I kin neither play nor sing—I couldn't never abear it."

Miss Jenny could, however; and straightway executed one of Beethoven's sonatas in masterly style.

Fred was in raptures. But I talked all the more to Miss Langworth, who told me "she was not cold-hearted, but she was afraid to marry, because everybody knew her pa would hand her over $500,000 on her wedding-day, and she was afraid they wanted her for her money."

Dear creature, how I loved her—how I burned to assure her of my disinterested affection! How I longed to ask her to fly with me to some green isle (with $500,000 in her pocket), and live, "the world forgetting, by the world forgot," in a brown-stone palace, in that remote corner of the beautiful isle of Manhattan known as Fifth avenue.

What orders I'd give Granch, my tailor! What a team I'd drive! And wouldn't I have a yacht, and belong to a club, and drink five bottles of champagne at dinner every day!

All this happiness within my grasp, and nothing needed to secure but the momentary absence of Fred and that disagreeable Miss Jenny, who was tittering again.

"The ladies propose a sail," said Fred. "Will you go, Jim?"

Of course I would; and, wrapping Miss Langworth in a shawl, for the day was cool, we started down a winding path shaded by overarching trees, and, descending a few stone steps, found ourselves on a fine gravelly beach, on which lay the boat high and dry.

We soon got her off—that is, Fred did, for he was a stalwart fellow, and I didn't wish to soil my new pantaloons—and we helped the ladies into the boat; then I discovered that Miss Langworth had a large ankle, but it failed to dampen my love. I scorned to be influenced by such worldly considerations, and I grew even more devoted to Miss Langworth, who leaned up heavily against me, while Fred and Miss Jenny raved.

The last-mentioned lady, after a short time, proposed that we should run the boat up in a little inlet, and make our way home by another and more circuitous route, the whole distance being about two miles.

"She wants Fred to pop the question," I thought. "Poor fellow! But I'm obliged to her; I shall have a chance to propose to Miss Langworth;" and so I seconded the move with ardor.

Fred agreed, of course, and Miss Langworth said, "La, yes! she didn't care;" and, getting out, the lady and myself walked on slowly behind Fred and Miss Jenny, who were speedily out of sight.

Now was my time.

"How beautiful all this is!" said I, "and yet it makes me sad, Miss Langworth."

"Dear me, does it give you the rheumatism? Folks do say it's damp here, but I never feel it."

"Rheumatism of the heart, Miss Langworth," I answered. "To-morrow I leave you; should I ever (which is improbable) revisit this spot, on whose arm should I find you leaning then?"

Miss Langworth said, archly, she was sure she couldn't tell.

"A husband's, perhaps," I continued, in my deepest bass voice; some fortunate being, who, unlike me, may be esteemed worthy to possess that priceless treasure"—I meant the five hundred thousand dollars; but I said—"your heart."

"I shall never marry," she said, faintly.

"Oh, say not so," I cried, about to sink on one knee; but, looking down, I saw that it was muddy. "Say not so, brightest and best of beings. Drive not to despair (seizing her hand) one who loves you so fondly. Give me but the faintest gleam of hope—say but that you will be mine, after years of toil shall have enabled me to ask your hand of your father, and I will go forth more joyfully than ever—ever horse went to water."

That wasn't very poetical; but I could think of nothing else. "Speak, dearest, —only one word."

Miss Langworth had hidden her face behind her handkerchief; but gasped out:

"Yes, dear Jim; ask pa right away. He won't want you to go out and fight, and all that sort of thing."

"Blessed innocent! he could not wish it less than I did." But it was only after long persuasion that I consented to forego my resolution to win name and fame, and ask her pa at once.

The old gentleman was in the library, and just as I entered I met Fred coming out. I gave him a nod and a wink, and, walking up to Mr. Langworth, informed him that his daughter had just declared her willingness to be united with me in the bonds of holy matrimony, and respectfully implored his blessing.

"I am sorry, Mr. Jonquil," said the old gentleman, looking at me rather quizzically, "but I have just promised her to your friend, Mr. Drummond."

"Impossible!" I exclaimed. "I have this moment left her, and, if you will permit me, I will bring her, that you may hear my statement confirmed from her own lips." And, running out, I found and conducted the fair lady to her father in an exceedingly short time.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Jonquil," said the old gentleman, as soon as he saw her. "I was speaking of my daughter, Nellie, whom I have promised to your friend. But, as for this lady, marry her as soon as you please; my jurisdiction does not extend to my daughter's seamstress."

It was too horrible. I rushed madly out of the house. The little plainly-dressed woman, whom I had nearly knocked down and treated since with such persevering and scornful neglect, was no other than Nellie Langworth—who, overhearing our conversation on the boat, had chosen to revenge herself by substituting the long, lean, ugly, awkward creature with whom I had been playing the fool for her sweet little self.

I left for town in the next train, where I shortly after received an invitation to her wedding with Fred. I leave it to the reader to guess if I went.

A Revengeful Camel.

We find this Eastern story illustrating the camel's malignity and passion—notwithstanding his patience and good service when well treated: On one occasion a camel-driver had insulted the animal in his charge. The driver, from the expression of its eye, saw that there was mischief in it, and kept a sharp watch for some days. One night before he retired to rest, he left his cloak spread over the wooden saddle of the camel outside the tent. During the night the camel approached the cloak, and, believing that its master was fast asleep under it, lay down and rolled itself backwards and forwards over the cloak; the saddle broke under its weight, and the animal was evidently much pleased at what it thought was the cracking and breaking of its master's bones. After a time it rose, and looking with contentment on the havoc it had caused, retired from the spot. Next morning, the driver, who had heard all that the camel had done, presented himself to the animal. The disappointed camel was in such a rage at seeing its master safe and well that it died.

TIMELY HINTS.

How to Neutralize the Bad Effects of Heated Terms.

People cannot be too careful in avoiding sunstroke. For the information of the public the Health Department of New York has issued a circular which has been given wide publicity. It is substantially as follows: Sunstroke is caused by excessive heat, and especially if the weather is "muggy." It is more apt to occur on the second, third or fourth day of the heated term than on the first. Loss of sleep, worry, excitement, close sleeping-rooms, debility, abuse of stimulants, predispose to it. It is more apt to attack those working in the sun, and especially between the hours of 11 o'clock in the morning and 4 o'clock in the afternoon. On hot days wear thin clothing. Have as cool sleeping-rooms as possible. Avoid loss of sleep and all unnecessary fatigue. If working in-doors, and where there is artificial heat—laundries, etc.—see that the room is well ventilated.

In working in the sun wear a light hat (not black, as it absorbs heat), straw, etc., and put inside of it, on the head, a wet cloth or a large green leaf; frequently lift the hat from the head and see that the cloth is wet. Do not check perspiration, but drink what water you need to keep it up, as perspiration prevents the body from being heated. Have, whenever possible, an additional shade, as a thin umbrella when walking, a canvas or board cover when working in the sun.

When much fatigued do not go to work, but be excused from work, especially after 11 o'clock in the morning, on very hot days, if the work is in the sun. If a feeling of fatigue, dizziness, headache, or exhaustion occurs, cease work immediately; lie down in a shady and cool place; apply cold cloths to and pour cold water over head and neck.

If any one is overcome by the heat, send at once for the nearest good physician. While waiting for the physician, give the person cold drinks of water, or cold black tea, or cold coffee, if able to swallow. If the skin is hot and dry, sponge with or pour cold water over the body and limbs, and apply to the head pounded ice wrapped in a towel or other cloth. If there is no ice at hand, keep a cool cloth on the head, and pour cold water on it as well as on the body.

If the person is pale, very faint and pulse feeble, let him inhale ammonia for a few seconds, or give him a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in two table-spoonfuls of water, with a little sugar.

Andrew Jackson.

Chevalier Wikoff, in his delightful "Reminiscences," gives the following account of his first meeting with Andrew Jackson: I was taken to the White House, one evening, to be presented to the President. When they arrived, the President was still at dinner, but it was not long before the doors were thrown open, and General Jackson entered at the head of his company, talking and laughing with much animation. He seemed in high glee. Seating himself near the fire, his friends formed a group about him. I was absorbed for some minutes in scanning the face and mein of this remarkable man. In person he was tall, slim and straight as an arrow. His head was long, but narrow, and covered with thick gray hair that stood erect, as though impregnated with his defiant spirit; his brow was deeply furrowed, and his eye, even in his present mood, was one "to threaten and command." His nose was prominent, and indicated force. His mouth displayed firmness. The whole conveyed an impression of energy and daring. My gaze was fixed upon him, and I forgot all else. My friend intimated he would present me on the first opportunity, and the announcement threw me into a flutter.

Presently a gentleman hurriedly entered the room, went up to the President, and whispered in his ear. In a moment he sprang from his chair, his eyes flashing and his arms flying wildly about him.

"By the Eternal!" I heard him exclaim, "I'll smash them!"

Every one near him jumped to his feet, astounded at this sudden explosion. He was surrounded, and all were demanding what had occurred. I was electrified at the spectacle. Like a lion goaded to fury, he kept on gesticulating and denouncing some outrage he would not brook. At length I was told that information was brought him that the Senate had rejected Van Buren's nomination to England, and he regarded this as a personal insult. The opposition in alliance with Calhoun's friends had thus smitten the schemer, whom they accused of breaking up the Cabinet for his occult purposes. Open war was now declared between Calhoun and Jackson. The grand battle came off a little later. It was suggested by my friend that under the circumstances my introduction had better be postponed. I readily agreed, having no fancy to approach the volcano in eruption. I considered myself fortunate, however, in having seen the fiery hero in one his towering passions. What a contrast to his first phase!

What English Soldiers Eat.

It will be interesting to our army men to know the details, just published, of the rations of the British soldiers in the field. A pound of bread, a pound of fresh meat, three-quarters of a pound of flour, and, at the discretion of the commanding officer and medical staff, a pint of porter or half a gill of spirits form the daily ration. As it is not always practicable to obtain fresh bread, fresh meat or fresh vegetables, three-quarters of a pound of biscuit, flour or rice are to be considered equivalent to the ration of bread; a pound of salt meat, or three-quarters of a pound of preserved meat, may be substituted for the fresh-meat ration, and two ounces of preserved vegetables, or a quarter of a pound of onions or leeks, may take the place of fresh vegetables.

A Queer Fish.

The slang phrase "queer fish" has been realized, piscatorial form, in California. At Monterey some fishermen caught it in a seine. It was about nine inches long. The first half of the fish was a mountain brook trout, having the eye, head, scales, spots and shape of that fish. It had a pair of fins at the usual place behind the gills; an inch or two back of this it suddenly changed into a silver eel, the shape, color, and absence of scales being perfect. It will probably find a resting place on the shelves of the San Francisco Academy of Sciences.

What a Volcano Can Do.

Cotapaxi, in 1738, threw its fiery rockets 3,000 feet above its crater, while in 1854 the blazing mass, struggling for an outlet, roared so that its awful voice was heard at a distance of more than 600 miles. In 1797 the crater of Tunguragua, one of the great peaks of the Andes, flung out torrents of mud, which dammed up the rivers, opened new lakes, and, in valleys 1,000 feet wide, made deposits 600 feet deep. The stream from Vesuvius which, in 1637, passed through Torre del Greco, contained 33,000,000 cubic feet of solid matter, and in 1793, when Torre del Greco was destroyed a second time, the mass of lava amounted to 45,000,000 cubic feet. In 1760 Ætna poured forth a flood which covered eighty-four square miles, and measured nearly 1,000,000,000 cubic feet. On this occasion the sand and scoria formed the Monte Rosini, near Nicholosa, a cone of two miles in circumference, and 400 feet high. The stream thrown out by Ætna in 1810 was in motion at the rate of a yard a day for nine months after the eruption, and it is on record that the lava of the same mountain, after a terrible eruption, was not thoroughly cool and consolidated for ten years after the event. In the eruption of Vesuvius, A. D. 79, the scoria and ashes vomited forth far exceeded the entire bulk of the mountain; while in 1660 Ætna disgorged more than twenty times its own mass. Vesuvius has sent its ashes as far as Constantinople, Syria and Egypt. It hurled stones eight pounds in weight to Pompeii, a distance of six miles, where similar masses were tossed up 2,000 feet above the summit. Cotopaxi has projected a block of 100 cubic yards in volume a distance of nine miles; and Sumbawa, in 1815, during the most terrific eruption on record, sent its ashes as far as Java, a distance of 300 miles of surface, and out of a population of 12,000 souls only twenty escaped.

The Army Worm.

The stories told of the army worm and his performance in the Eastern States almost equal the wonderful tales in Herodotus, of ants that devoured camels and elephants and found an army of men no great obstacle to their march. They get so thick and grow so fast that they cover the ground some inches deep, and roll and tumble over each other until the soil seems moving with life. They cannot be stopped or turned aside. They go over stone fences, a squirming gray mass, many yards wide, covering it up like a blanket. When a field is exhausted they take to the road and travel under some apparent guidance, until they come to a field that is fit to eat. They attack barns and eat up every green thing and even the hay. Sometimes houses are assaulted, and it is found hard, even with brooms, shovels and brushes, to protect residences. Half a dozen of them will take possession of a stalk of rye or blade of grass and eat the sustenance out of it. Those who come too late for the first table will burrow in the roots until the field looks as if a fire had passed over it. Carriage and wagon-wheels make no noise as the vehicles drive over the squirming masses. They accomplish most of their work in the evening or the morning. They cannot be stamped out, for they increase faster than they can be killed. A ditch with tar is only a brief impediment, because, as soon as it is full, the remainder of the host crosses on the dead bodies. The worm is about an inch long, thick as a rye straw, dislikes potatoes, and will not touch tobacco. It is not even good for food, like the grasshopper, and so in no way compensates for the devastation which is produced.

Unnecessary Falsehoods.

Surely, clerks in some stores tell many unnecessary falsehoods, in their anxiety to advance their employers' interests. Misrepresentations drop constantly from their lips. "This is all silk, lady," asserts a saleswoman who exhibits a black cotton lace scarf, and "every thread linen," is the description which the housekeeper receives of towels into whose composition not a thread of linen enters. The fibs told in second-class dry-goods stores are so enormous that they argue a love of lying on the part of the salesmen, and utter idiocy on the part of the buyers. Why should any one desire to make the statement that all the goods in his establisment are sold at cost price, or expect customers to believe that he entered into trade from purely philanthropic motives? A fair profit is the right of one who sells. It is the motive of his selling. "Upon my word I am giving this away," imposes upon somebody. Why it is so often uttered is a mighty mystery and must remain so. Then, too, if one desires a certain style of collar, of scarf, of shoe, quite in the mode, and well known to be so, and inquires for the article at a store where they do not happen to keep it, the negative to the question, "Have you so and so?" is always followed by the remark, "Nobody wears them now; they are entirely out of fashion"—a comment both insulting and false. Do such fibs "pay," in any sense of the term?

Oatmeal.

Give the children oatmeal at least once a day. It is genuine bone and muscle food; and they must thrive. Could our girls make the morning and night meals on real nourishment—not pastry—take more to nourish the brain and nerves, we should have less of the neuralgia among our women. Indeed, this oat meal mush would afford ample food for the last meal, which should ordinarily be the lightest, simple, and easy of digestion, securing good sleep, while it may well form a part of the morning meal. Its extensive use would do much to promote health among us.

FROM a census recently taken of the city of Buda-Pesth, it appears that the population is at present 333,557, a considerable increase since the last census of 1876, when the numbers were only 295,254. A hundred years ago Pesth contained but 13,550 inhabitants, and Buda 23,643. Since that the population of Buda has doubled, while that of Pesth has increased twenty-fold.

THE WANDERER'S SONG.

BY MRS. J. Y. H. KOONS.

When through the rough and wintry world
In wretchedness I roam,
With childish love I breathe the names
Of father, mother, home.

They bear one back in fancy sweet
To boyhood's sinless days,
Ere thorns had pierced my weary feet
In desolated ways;

Back to the dear old orchard trees,
Set out by father's hand,
Beneath whose shade the perfumed breeze
My boyish brow has fanned;

While I in silent wonder lay
Upon the velvet grass,
And watched in joy life's fancied play
In panorama pass.

Ah, me! 'tis well those dreams were gold.
Their memory gilds the lead
Of real life, when hearts grow cold
And dreamless as the dead.

If there is aught in us survives
The fearful wreck of death,
The mother-love that warms our lives
Unto the latest breath

Must be the part, the deathless link
That binds the soul to God;
That sings to it of heaven and home
And lifts it from the clod.

PITH AND POINT.

YOUNG man, a diamond pin looks real nice and glistens brightly, but, when $4 a week supports a man and pin both, one or the other is not genuine.

If you love a girl and want to marry 'er,
And lack of pluck is the only barrier,
We would make this mild suggestion:
Shoot yourself or pop the question.

A LITTLE boy came to his mother recently and said: "Mamma, I should think that, if I was made of dust, I would get muddy inside when I drink."

"WHAT! only five policemen for a town like this?" exclaimed a traveler. "Oh," replied the native calmly, "they have no difficulty in keeping what little peace we have."

"WHAT is a woman's will?" shrieks a social scientist of the bachelor persuasion. Experience in our younger days teaches us that it is the only will that the heirs don't want to contest.

A UNIVERSAL BIOGRAPHY.

At ten, a child; at twenty, wild;
At thirty, strong, if ever;
At forty, wise; at fifty, rich;
At sixty, good, or never.

A LITTLE boy, weeping most piteously, was interrupted by some unusual occurrence. He hushed his cries for a moment; the thought was broken. "Ma," said he, resuming his sniffle, "what was I crying about just now?"

RECORDER (to witness with bandaged eye)—"Did he have any provocation when he struck you?" Witness—"He may have had something of the kind concealed on his person, but it was a brick he struck me wid."

WHEN inviting guests to dinner the number should be limited in accordance with the quantity of dinner that can be served. Thirteen at the table is unlucky when there is dinner enough for only ten.

Act one, they meet as in a pleasant dream;
Act two, he'll treat to soda and ice-cream;
Act three, his cash, alas! is nearly played;
Act four, his girl grows cold, sedate and staid;
Act five, just as his love is ripe and yellow,
His girl is sporting with another fellow.

IT was a colored preacher who said to his flock: "We have a collection to make this morning, and, for de glory ob heaben, whichever of you stole Mr. Jones' turkeys, don't put anything on the plate." One who was there says, "Every blessed niggah in church came down with the rocks."

A QUAKER gentleman, riding in a carriage with a fashionable lady decked with a profusion of jewelry, heard her complain of a cold. Shivering in her lace bonnet and shawl as light as a cobweb, she exclaimed: "What shall I do to get warm?" "I really don't know," replied the Quaker, solemnly, "unless thee put on another breastpin!"

A DANBURY man tells a good story of his aunt, who is a model housekeeper and a scrupulous stickler for a good table. The clergyman called near the dinner hour, and was pressed to stay to the meal. At the table there was a good supply of well-prepared food, but the lady felt compelled to make many apologies for imaginary deficiencies. In the grace the clergyman asked our Heavenly Father to "bless the frugal meal." This made the lady very mad.

SAID Angelina, suddenly breaking the oppressive silence, "Don't you feel afraid of the army worms, Theodore, that are coming so rapidly this way?" The question was such a strange one that Theodore's surprise caused him to look right at Angelina for the first time in his life. Why did she ask that, he wanted to know. "Oh, nothing," she replied, as she toyed with her fan, "only the papers say they eat every green thing wherever they go."

THERE is a great deal of interesting conversation going on over the telephone wires, if you have the machine open and listen. The message of a fond mother whose cherub had eaten a watermelon or so too much, and a gentleman who had sent home a large redfish for dinner, got mixed the other day. First voice: "What shall I do about the baby?" Second voice: "Scrape all the scales off him, cut him open, and have him dressed nicely for dinner with caper sauce. Ain't he a whopper?"

"MUSIC hath charms," etc. For instance: In a traveling menagerie in England was a large lion. A piano was played near him, the high tones of which seemed to excite him to great surprise. But scarcely had the low notes been touched when he rose abruptly, his "eyes darting fire;" he endeavored to break his chains, he lashed his flanks with his tail and gave deafening roars. The music having ceased, the beast became calm almost immediately. As the weather is now warm enough for parlor windows to be thrown open, there are thousands of people in this country who feel just as that lion did. The fellow who fingered the piano in that menagerie was not the only bad player in the world.—Norristown Herald.

John Quincy Adams on Vanity.

"They say I am vain. Thank God I am so. Vanity is the cordial drop which makes the bitter cup of life go down. I agree with Mrs. Elizabeth Montague, who wrote to her uncle, the Bishop, to inquire whether the text, 'All is vanity and vexation of spirit,' was not badly translated. She thought it ought to be, 'All is vanity or vexation of spirit.' She implied that what was not vanity was sure to be vexation, and there I am with her."

PREPARING FOR BATTLE.

Meeting of the National Democratic Committee.

Hon. W. H. Barnum Unanimously Re-elected Chairman.

The Members of the Committee Call Upon Gov. Tilden.

The National Democratic Committee met at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, on Tuesday, July 13, and organized by unanimously electing W. H. Barnum, of Connecticut, Chairman. Mr. Barnum briefly thanked the committee for this expression of confidence, saying it had been his wish that some other person should be selected for the position, but that, the committee having expressed its wish that he should preside over it, he would do all in his power to make the campaign successful. Mr. Brown, of Indiana, nominated F. O. Prince, of Boston, for Secretary, and he was unanimously elected.

The committee was about to adjourn when Mr. Hewitt called attention to the fact that a sub-committee of the Congressional Committee was in the hotel and desired to present a communication. The chair appointed Mr. Hewitt and Orestes Cleveland a committee to wait upon the sub-committee. Mr. Hewitt and Mr. Cleveland returned with the sub-committee, which consisted of Senator J. E. McDonald, of Indiana; Senator Wm. Pinckney Whyte, of Maryland; Gen. Eppa Hunton, of Virginia; and Duncan S. Walker, of Washington. Senator McDonald said that the Congressional Committee had been at work for some time in Washington, and desired to put itself into communication with and work in co-operation with the National Committee. He presented a resolution of the committee to that effect. The committee, he said, desired that, when the National Committee had appointed its Executive Committee and selected its headquarters, notice be given to the Congressional Committee. The communications and requests were referred to the Executive Committee, when appointed.

The National Committee then took a recess until 8 p. m.

Upon reassembling in the evening the committee spent two hours informally, representatives of the different States giving an outline of the political situation in their States and explaining what is necessary to be done in each case. The general outlook was reported to be brighter than it has been at the opening of any previous campaign.

The Democratic National Committee reassembled on the morning of the 14th, Senator Barnum presiding. The number of the Executive Committee was increased from thirteen to eighteen. The following were then appointed an Executive Committee:

W. H. Barnum, of Connecticut; F. O. Prince, Massachusetts; George T. Barnes, Georgia; Wm. C. Goudy, Illinois; Austin H. Brown, Indiana; M. M. Ham, Iowa; Henry D. McHenry, Kentucky; B. F. Jonas, Louisiana; Outerbridge Husey, Maryland; P. H. Kelly, Minnesota; A. H. Sulloway, New Hampshire; Orestes Cleveland, New Jersey; Abram S. Hewett, New York; M. W. Ransom, North Carolina; Wm. W. Armstrong, Ohio; Wm. L. Scott, Pennsylvania; Thomas O'Connor, Tennessee, and B. B. Smalley, Vermont.

After routine business the committee adjourned to the call of the chair. The members subsequently proceeded in a body to the residence of Ex-Gov. Tilden to pay respects to that gentleman.

The committee, on reaching Mr. Tilden's residence in Gramercy park, were received by Henry Tilden, the ex-Governor's brother, Senator Kernan, Augustus Schell, and others. When Mr. Tilden appeared, looking unusually well, ex-Gov. Stevenson addressed him as follows:

The convention of the American Democracy upon the 22d of June last met at Cincinnati and nominated Winfield Scott Hancock, of Pennsylvania, for President, and Wm. H. English, of Indiana, for Vice President. The committee charged with the duty of informing those eminent statesmen of the high trust which has been committed to them performed that duty yesterday. The gentlemen who composed that committee now surround you. Having notified the nominee, whom the people intend to elect in ides of November, next President and Vice President of the United States, their duty would have been but half performed without waiting in person upon you and tendering the homage of the entire American people to him who, in 1876, was, by a large majority, elected President of the United States. The fact that you chose, in order to avoid civil strife and bloodshed, by noble self-denial, to forego the execution of the duties of Chief Magistracy of the American republic, thus delegated to you, and from which you were deposed by a conspiracy founded in force and fraud, and by a crime against free representative self-government, does not in any manner detract from the high honor and confidence of the American people in your wisdom, virtue and capacity to exercise the high trust and duties of that responsible position. In refusing to allow your name to go before the National Convention as a candidate for President in the approaching election, you have taken from the people the privilege of electing you a second time to the Presidency of the United States and of vindicating in your person the crime committed upon the constitution by a conspiracy founded upon force and fraud and refusing to give effect to the voice of the people in calling you in 1876 to execute the high trust of President of the United States. Those acts of self-denying patriotism on your part only have endeared you to the confidence and regard of lovers of American free government throughout the Union. For these acts of self-denial and patriotism, the Democracy of the United States pray to the Almighty Power that your life may be prolonged for many, very many years more; particularly that you may live to see the country and its constitutional Government relieved from many incumbrances heaped on them, as well as a rectification of the basest frauds perpetrated upon the people by the overwhelming defeat next November of the Republican party. I speak not by the voice of this committee, but by the voice of the Democratic party throughout this broad land, who unite in paying you homage simply because of your patriotism, virtue, and exalted statesmanship. We know that the country and constitution would have been as safely guarded by you as by Madison, Jefferson, or Jackson, had you been installed as President.

The speaker here read a resolution in reference to Mr. Tilden, passed by the Cincinnati Convention. Mr. Stevenson then concluded:

This document but expresses the true sentiment of every single member of the Democratic party in the whole country. I now hand it to you, and permit me to say that I think you ought to feel proud of it. You have our best wishes for your continued health and prosperity.

In reply Mr. Tilden spoke as follows:

MR. STEVENSON, President of the Democratic National Convention: I thank you for the kind terms in which you have expressed the communication you make to me. The solution which enables the Democratic party of the United States to vindicate the right of the people to choose their Chief Magistrate (a right violated in 1876), and at the same time relieves me of the burden of the canvass and four years of administration, is most agreeable to me. My sincere good wishes and cordial co-operation as a private citizen attend the illustrious soldier whom the Democracy have designated as their standard-bearer in the Presidential canvass. I congratulate you on the favorable prospects with which that canvass has been commenced, and the promise it affords of complete and final success.

The members of the committee were then introduced to Mr. Tilden individually, and soon after took their leave.

Messrs. Hewitt, Smalley, and Barnum were appointed a committee to secure permanent headquarters, and Messrs. Hewitt, Cleveland, Scott, Smalley and Horsey an advisory committee. A sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Barnum, Hewitt and Scott, was appointed to confer with a sub-committee from the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee in regard to carrying on the campaign. The latter sub-committee consists of Senators Whyte, of Maryland; McDonald, of Indiana; Wallace, of Pennsylvania; Eppa Hunton, of Virginia; Augustus Schell, of New York, and Duncan S. Walker, of Washington. It was decided that the Executive Committee should meet the second Tuesday of each month, and the matter of establishing a branch in the West was discussed but no action taken. The committee then adjourned until Wednesday next.

The matter of two Democratic electoral tickets in Virginia came up, and, after a brief discussion, was referred to the Executive Committee.

The committee selected to notify Hancock and English of their nomination met and resolved that they "do hereby return their sincere thanks to Gov. Stevenson, permanent President of the National Convention, for the dignified and feeling manner in which he presented, this day, members of this committee and their sentiments to Gov. Tilden, and they rejoice to record, not only for themselves, but for the Democracy of the republic, the patriotic devotion of Mr. Tilden to the cause and candidate of his party."

THE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE.

The Democratic Congressional Committee met at the St. James Hotel, New York, on July 14. Senator Wallace presided, and Duncan S. Walker acted as Secretary. The two vacancies in the committee were filled by the appointment of Gen. Wm. Franklin and Aug. Belmont. Senator Whyte moved that the Executive Committee be increased for the present to not less than nine members, and that the committee have power to still further increase the members. On motion of Senator McDonald, the Chairman appointed the following gentlemen as the new Executive Committee: Senators Wm. A. Wallace, W. Pinckney Whyte, J. E. McDonald, and H. G. Davis, Mr. Augustus Schell, Mr. August Belmont, Gen. W. B. Franklin, Congressman Joseph C. S. Blackburn, and ex-Congressman John G. Thompson. Duncan S. Walker was elected Secretary.

A resolution was adopted authorizing the Executive Committee to co-operate with the National Executive Committee upon the plan of the campaign, and defining the duties of both committees. The headquarters of the Congressional Committee will be at Washington.

THE SPOILS SYSTEM.

A Union Soldier Supplanted by an Ex-Rebel.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

Mr. Hayes' civil-service order is not in very active operation during this campaign. Beside the forced assessment of clerks by the withholding a portion of their pay in the Treasury Department, a general inspection of the departments is being made for the purpose of weeding out all who are not professed loyal Republicans, without regard to their clerical capacity. One of the most flagrant cases of removals of this class is the dismissal from the War Department of Capt. Hamlin, of Springfield, Ill. Hamlin was one of the best clerks in the War Department. He served during the war in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Illinois. He was clerk in the office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction in Illinois in 1877 and 1878. He was indorsed for an appointment at the War Department by Senators Logan and David Davis, and Gen. W. T. Sherman. During his service as clerk he has discreetly avoided politics. The clerk that sat next to him never suspected that he was a Democrat. Complaint was made to Noah, the appointment clerk, that Hamlin had been a Democrat. Some one heard him say that he was going to Cincinnati. This was enough, and Hamlin was abruptly dismissed. When he asked the reason he was bluntly told that it was because he was a Democrat. Capt. Hamlin has since addressed the following letter to the Secretary of War.

WASHINGTON, July 8, 1880.

Hon. Alex. Ramsey, Secretary of War.

SIR: Under the law approved March 16, 1880, to facilitate the settlement of pensions, by indorsement of Senators David Davis and John A. Logan and Gen. W. T. Sherman, I secured an appointment as one of the additional force. Upon inquiry I found that of all the additional force appointed I stood first in the performance of duty. Of those appointed, as I now understand, only two are dismissed, of whom I am one. Among those retained the public record will show that the tail of the list in performing public service has had a great share in the dispensation of Government patronage, thus illustrating the beauties of "civil-service reform" as now practiced. J. J. Noah, who supervises your appointments, submitted these inquiries: "Are you not a Democrat?" "Did you not say you were going to Cincinnati?" and added: "You have talked too much." I replied that I had said I was going to Cincinnati; that I was a Democrat; that he had no place in his gift for which I would surrender my political opinions; and also told him both by letter and in person that I had fought three years to maintain the Union of the States, and was now a pensioner of the Government, and in addition to that I informed him that he had appointed in his new organization a person who carries the recommendation of Shelby M. Cullom, Governor of the State of Illinois, being his cousin a Mr. McHenry, who during the whole war served as a Confederate soldier, was directing his bullets against the bosom of myself and comrades and against the integrity of the Union, of which you, sir, and your party profess to be the especial champions. Your secretary and appointment clerk informed me that some vacancy might occur in which he could place me, but his remarks so clearly indicated that political proscription and no "civil-service reform" founded on merit would govern the bestowment of place that I deem it a public duty to address you this open letter, to know whether or not you sustain this manner of administering the service of the people. I had declared that I would never give one dollar to corrupt the people of this country to vote against the party of which I am a member, and especially against the great soldier who bared his bosom to the storm in behalf of the Union, and whom the Democrats have presented as their candidate for the Presidency. This may have been an additional reason why I failed to respond successfully to the peculiar civil-service reform that has signalized the history of your Secretary's administration, and which he graphically described by stating that "you know, Hamlin, this is a political year." I am, honored sir, your most obedient servant,

D. M. HAMLIN.

When Senator Logan heard of the removal he addressed the following letter to the appointment clerk who had ordered Hamlin's dismissal:

JULY 15, 1880.

Judge Noah:

DEAR SIR: I am truly sorry that you have discontinued Capt. Hamlin. He was appointed especially for Judge Davis, with my joining him in the recommendation. I hope you may find it the proper thing to do to restore him. I understand that he has been supplanted by a Confederate soldier. This is rather tough, you being a Union soldier yourself. He was a Democrat, but left them, and claims that he has done nothing to cause you to think otherwise. Yours, truly,

JOHN A. LOGAN.

Judge Davis also wrote from Bloomington as follows:

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., July 3, 1880.

MY DEAR HAMLIN: I am chagrined and astonished at your discharge. I have recommended no one in your place. Indeed, I have no recollection of having recommended any one to the War Department for any place. I do not believe Gen. Logan has recommended any one for your place. If Logan is in Washington you had better see him, and I have no doubt he will see you rectified. My recommendation is on file. I don't see what more I can do unless I was there in person. I am sorry,

Truly yours,

DAVID DAVIS.

HANCOCK IN 1876-7.

Nothing Dishonorable or Treasonable in His Attitude.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, a conservative Republican journal of wide influence, and a supporter of Garfield, reviews the charge of treason brought against Gen. Hancock by the reckless organs of the spoils party, and reaches the conclusion that Gen H.'s attitude pending the electoral count was in every way honorable and consistent with his duty as a soldier. The Republican candidly says—and its words are commended to every reader of this journal, Republican as well as Democrat:

Gen. Hancock's conduct during the electoral struggle of 1876-7 is going to be the battle-ground of his record. Nothing else derogatory to his reputation as an officer and citizen stands examination, or discloses any substance of evil. The data regarding his course then have been placed before the public about as fully as they are likely to be. Hiram Atkins has told his story, as we have already printed, and as derived from Gen. "Baldy" Smith; Gen. Smith doesn't deny it, and is apparently a little nettled that the story is out. Gen. Sherman declines to say anything about it. Atkins says that Hancock made known his position to Sherman before the Electoral Commission was fixed upon as a mode of settlement, and that he simply informed Sherman that, if Congress sustained Tilden's claim, he should feel obliged to obey the orders of President Tilden.

It is clear that the Republican claim that, as the New York Tribune says, "Gen. Hancock took it upon himself to decide that Mr. Tilden had been elected," is all bosh. The Presidency was disputed, every intelligent citizen viewed the situation with anxiety, and Gen. Hancock, the citizen before he was a soldier, said frankly, on being asked his opinion by his superior officer, that if the authorities who certify to the election of a President differ, and Congress sustains one and the Executive another, he should go with Congress. Perhaps he said that if the House (not Congress) sustained Tilden, he should also; it is not improbable, the House being the body constitutionally authorized to choose a President in case of failure to elect.

The charge amounts, then, to this, that Hancock, being a soldier of the nation, yet dared to have opinion upon a civil question on being asked and to say, in case controversy arose, in which direction he should conceive constitutional authority to lie. We find nothing dishonorable or treasonable in that attitude. On the other hand, it is one of the few presumptive evidences of Hancock's capacity for civil administration. The American theory of Government does not require the soldier to be a machine of unthinking militarism. The American soldier is raised and trained amid the atmosphere of citizenship. While this fact lost us many officers from the regular army to the rebellion, it added devotion and intelligence to those who remained, and will always be the pride of American arms over those of Europe. Had Congress, or had the House, sustained the claim of Tilden to the Presidency, and the administration of Gen. Grant sustained the claim of Hayes, the grounds for a divided allegiance would have been so strong on both sides that it is vain to speculate upon the degree of moral error involved in a declaration for one or the other of the two authorities. We were fortunately saved from such a catastrophe, and there is nothing to prove that Gen. Hancock was ever disloyal to the Government which was based upon that settlement.

Gen. Hancock, referring to this matter himself this week at an interview reported in the Brooklyn Eagle, said:

Whether I wrote a letter to Gen. Sherman on the subject of the electoral contest I shall not say, but my position in regard to that matter was well understood at the time, and has not changed since. I am of the opinion that Gen. Grant's term as President ended at midnight March 3. After that I should have paid no more attention to him officially than I would to the man in the moon. The houses of Congress alone had power to count the electoral vote, and declare the result, and they were the constitutional authority. My position on this question cannot be open to misconstruction. Anything I may have written to Gen. Sherman or any one else concerning it is at the disposal of the public. I am not ashamed of my views regarding the electoral contest and still adhere to them.

Oily Garfield.

The true-blue Republican organs of this city and the country in general have been amusing themselves of late with the publication of stories having reference to Gen. Hancock's Presidency of an oil company, which did not prove a success, after the close of the war. This has been magnified into something very big and proportionally odious by writers employed on the party journals referred to. It may, therefore, be interesting to those virtuous persons to learn that their "standard-bearer"—to use the well-worn cant expression of the day—is not entirely free from oleaginous contamination. On the contrary, while the "superb" individual nominated by the Democrats for the Presidency only lent his name to an oil project, in which he lost some money by way of proving his sincerity, it will be seen, further on, that the canny Garfield was interested as an agent in a somewhat similar scheme, and did his utmost in this city, fifteen years ago, to rope some innocent people into the business.

Mr. S. H. Kerfoot, of Chicago, recollects that, some time in 1865 or 1866, Garfield arrived in the city, sent for him, told him a plausible story about a number of newly-discovered and immensely profitable oil-wells in Ohio, and asked him to help organize a company to develop them. Kerfoot had other matters to attend to, and could not devote his time to the brilliant scheme, but Garfield remained in Chicago some time, preaching to and roping in the Campbellites, and finally did organize the Venango Oil Company. A number of people took stock in the enterprise, but, so far as can be learned, not one of them ever realized a cent, or recovered the sum invested. The Republican organ-grinders have been crowding out news for several weeks to make room for a charge similar to this against the Democratic candidate for President. It remains to be seen whether they will lay the above charges before their readers with the same frequency and explicitness.—Chicago Times.

A Candid Verdict.

The Springfield Republican (Garfield supporter) passes judgment upon the smirched Republican nominee in these plain and cutting words. Well may Garfield cry out, "Save me from my friends:"

We present an interesting letter this week calling importunately for a verdict from the Republican upon Gen. Garfield's case or cases, and exhorting us to throw off our coat and pitch in lustily for the Republican candidates.

The Republican recognizes the duty of a verdict only so far as we can interpret the facts to justify one. Gen. Garfield is accused of a series of political misdemeanors—three at least, the Credit Mobilier, the De Golyer, the salary grab. If we were disposed to "hire an eminent lawyer," after the manner of the Nation (we do not know the grounds of the attribution), we might produce verdicts to order upon all these points with the promptitude and dispatch required by the ardent G. S. M. We can procure eminent lawyers' opinions to anything probably. We do not recognize any such imperative exigency, however. Garfield has not yet been nominated a month, his full defense has been in circulation only a week, his letter of acceptance is yet to appear. It is not judgment of him to say that he is "spotted," "tainted," "seriously compromised," etc., for these are historic facts. His reputation never can be as clean as it would have been but for these things, never can stand with that of Edmunds, for instance, or that of Hancock. This may be terrible, it may be unjust, but it is the injustice of that nemesis which every public life must confront, and which, in obedience to the law of human nature, ranks the suspected and the accused below the unsuspected and the stainless.

Read This.

Those who laugh at the idea of Republicans voting for Hancock should read the resolutions printed below, which were adopted in St. Louis, by a Republican club of sixty-five members. The meeting took place at the corner of Fifth and Myrtle streets, with Edward Crowley in the chair:

WHEREAS, The Republican party has seen fit to nominate a man for the Presidency in whose integrity we have no confidence, and who we believe has no abiding interest in the welfare of the nation only so far as it can minister to his paltry personal ambition; and,

WHEREAS, The Democratic party has placed in nomination for the same office a man of integrity, ability and courage; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, a band of candid Republicans, who believe in adhering to the true principles upon which our republican form of government was founded, have severed our connections with that party governed by rings and cliques, and cheerfully pledge ourselves to support the candidacy of Hancock and English during the ensuing campaign and promise to use all honorable means to insure their triumph at the national coming election.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Gen. Hancock, the next President of the United States, to William H. English, the next Vice President.

A Frank Opinion About Garfield's Letter.

On the tariff, Gen. Garfield's expressions are generalities, of no value in themselves, but, interpreted in the light of his recent course in Congress, giving little cause for expecting any aid from him in those rational reforms which are imperatively demanded by the interests of the country, and by none more than by the great body of unprotected and overtaxed manufactures. Neither in substance nor form is this part of his letter worthy of his position, or calculated to strengthen him where he most needs strength.

The portions of Mr. Garfield's letter relating to the reform of the civil service are below the level of the platform adopted at Chicago. He calls for legislation from Congress, which would certainly be desirable, if it were of the right kind, but he ventures no suggestion as to what such legislation should be, nor does he pledge his personal support to the principles of the system which has been, in places, applied with perfect success by Mr. Hayes, without any aid whatever from Congress. On the contrary, he distinctly takes a stand less elevated than that of the platform—which declares that "fitness, determined by practical tests, should admit to the service"—by announcing the necessity of consulting members of Congress, whom he indicates plainly, though he describes them in a roundabout fashion, as to appointments. On the whole, the letter of Gen. Garfield is very uneven, and fails to place him in that commanding position which he might have easily assumed.—New York Times (Stalwart Republican).

Enthusiasm for Garfield.

There is no use in saying that Garfield has never developed any enthusiasm. Listen to this:

When Chittenden had secured Garfield's service for the Chicago paving ring, he wrote to McClellan and De Golyer as follows: "To-day's and to-night's work has secured the assistance of Gen. Garfield. You cannot overrate this occasion. He is Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and holds the purse strings of the national treasury. Through him must come every dollar of appropriation. I need not say that I now feel certain of success."

Manufacture of Paper.

Paper stock of all kinds is now in use. In France paper is made from the hop vine; in Scotland from jute. The material is inexhaustible, but the process of manufacture is too expensive. Wood, straw, esparto grass, and various other vegetable products have been pressed into the service. The hop stalk, as yielding textile fibre possessing qualities of length, suppleness and delicacy, is the best substitute for rags yet discovered.

MADISON Star: A lady living in the western part of the city is the owner of a litter of young kittens and a pet hen. There is nothing remarkable in this fact, but the hen, which lately lost her brood, has taken the kittens in hand and cannot be kept away from them. JAMES PURCELL, of Washington township, Harrison county, killed a snake three feet long, resembling a spotted viper. Two-thirds of the way down its body were two well-formed legs, about two inches long and one-fourth of an inch thick, each having a joint. Mr. George Windell preserved it in spirits, and now has it for the examination of the curious.

WILLIAM DUNHAM, an insane convict from Crawford county, broke out of his cell in the insane department of the State prison south, a few days ago, and made a desperate attempt to escape. Armed with a long bar of iron he made an onslaught upon the guards who went in pursuit, but fortunately he did not hurt any of them. The desperate convict was driven in range of the dummy-engine used in the prison, when the water was turned upon him with such force that he was knocked down and recaptured.

THE explosion of a coal-oil lamp at Harmony burned Mrs. William McClain so badly that she died. She was carrying the lamp in her hand, when she stooped down, and, upon rising suddenly, the action of the air caused the flame to run into the bowl of the lamp, causing the explosion. The woman's clothing was saturated with the oil, and the flame enveloped her entire body in an instant. Her husband first attempted to tear her clothes from her body, but made no headway, after which he threw bed-clothing upon her and extinguished the fire, but not until she was fatally burned.

TWAIN AND DAN DE QUILLE.

Exterminating Redskins with Babbitt Metal.

[Carson Appeal.]

It was nearly twenty years ago when Dan De Quille and Mark Twain attempted to start a paper in Mendocino county. They took the type and material of their recently defunct newspaper establishment in San Francisco, and loading the stuff in a wagon, struck out into the country to retrieve their fortunes. They packed their type just as it stood in the forms, tied up the articles with stout cords by a process well known to printers, and, packing them closely in boxes, vowed to establish a newspaper somewhere which would be the leading exponent of politics and history for the Pacific coast. Had not an unfortunate circumstance taken place, it is quite evident that the same newspaper which they contemplated building would have been alive to-day. Their journey over the mountains was utterly uneventful until they reached Simpson's station, a spot well known to old travelers on that route. Here they met a party of emigrants making for lower California, and the latter had with them a small mountain howitzer, which they had brought with them across the plains.

Twain took a great fancy to this gun, and offered $50 for it, with two kegs of powder thrown in. The emigrants were glad enough to part with it, as they concluded the time for its use had passed. Dan thought the purchase of the artillery and military supplies was a reckless piece of extravagance, and said as much, but Twain replied:

"When we start our paper we must fire a salute. A newspaper office with artillery has a big bulge on the business. No well-regulated office in California should be without a howitzer. If a man comes in for a retraction we can blow him into the next county. The howitzer goes."

This silenced the argument, and the next day the two journalists took the road with their printing outfit and artillery.

On the next night they camped in a mountain ravine, fifteen miles from Simpson's, and after building the usual camp fire, fell asleep. About 11 o'clock the horses awakened them by prancing about, and the two journalists were led to the conclusion that nothing less than a party of Indians were making arrangements for a night attack.

In the clear moonlight they could be distinguished about half a mile away at the foot of the ravine. The idea of entertaining Indians had never entered the heads of the two fortune-seekers, and they had no arms. Suddenly Twain brightened up, remarking:

"The howitzer."

"We've got nothing but a little powder,"

"Well, powder'll scare 'em, and we'll load her up."

The piece was immediately loaded with a good big charge, and the two men felt quite certain that the Indians, hearing the roar of the guns, would beat an unconditional retreat. The piece was hardly loaded and placed in position, when about fifty of the redskins came charging up the ravine.

Twain seized a board from the campfire and was about to lay it on the touch-hole, when Dan. yelled, "Hold on," as he rammed something into the mouth of the piece, and remarked:

"Turn 'er loose."

The roar of the howitzer echoed through the lonely forests, and the savages with frantic cries of pain, reeled down the ravine in wild confusion.

"What in h—l did you put in?" asked Mark.

"A column of nonpareil and a couple of sticks of young spring poetry."

"Poetry did the business, Dan. Get one of your geological articles ready for the next charge, and I guess it'll let the red devils out for the present campaign."

The savages again advanced. Mark attended to the powder and Dan. sorted the shot, so to speak.

"Jeems Pipe's song, 'My Mountain Home.'"

"Good for three Indians; sock 'er in."

"An acrostic, by John R. Ride, in long primer."

"It'll paralyze 'em."

"Frank Pixley on the constitution," half a column of leaded brevier.

"If it hits 'em the day is won."

"Your leader on law and order."

"Save it as a last resort."

Dan. pulled the type out of the boxes and stuffed column after column into the howitzer's mouth as the savages came charging on. Another round from the gun, and the redskins rolled over and over each other like boulders swept away by a mountain cloud burst. Mark, in an ecstasy of delight, pulled an American flag out of his effects, nailed it to the tail-board of the wagon, and was about to make a speech, when the dusky figures of the foe were once more seen moving to the attack.

The piece was again loaded, and this time with a double charge. Mark's leader on "Law and Order," the puff of an auction-house by Fred. McCrelish ("as a sickener," Dan. said), Frank Gross' verses on the "Rebel Yell," an agricultural article by Sam. Sebaugh, showing the chemical properties of corn juice as an educational lever, a maiden poetical effort of Olive Harper, and some verses by Col. Cremony and Soule completed the load.

"That poetry, reaching 'em first, will throw 'em into confusion, and my editorial, coming upon the heels of the rest, will result in a lasting demoralization. It will be like the last charge of the French at the battle of Austerlitz."

For the third and last time the faithful howitzer belched its typographical compliments to the advancing foe. The havoc was terrible. There was a wild yell from a score of savage throats, and then the low groans of the dying floated up the ravine on the gentle wind. The two men walked over the field of slaughter and counted fifty-six aboriginals lying in heaps. The bodies were horribly mutilated with nonpareil, long primer, two-line pica, bourgeois "caps," misere dashes, and unsorted pi.

"My leader cooked that man's goose," said Mark, pointing to a savage with his bowels hanging over the limb of a cedar.

"My geological article did the business for him," rejoined Dan., nodding carelessly to an Indian, whose head was lying twenty yards away.

"The pen is mightier than the sword."

"You bet! Hurrah for Faust and Guttenberg."

"Is there any type left?"

"Not a pound."

Ten days later the two journalistic tramps reached Virginia City, weary, discouraged and footsore, and secured a place on The Enterprise.

A few days ago Dan. received the following letter from his former partner:

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 1.—Dear Dan: I send you the congratulations of the New Year. Do you recollect the time when we exterminated the unlettered (?) savages in Mendocino county? If you can spare the time I wish you would make a pilgrimage to that historic spot, gather the ghostly relicts together and plant a tablet, not too expensive and at your own expense, for the memory of the departed. Have a shooting-stick laying across a long bow, with our monogram and coat of arms entwined, and some appropriate epitaph carved in the stone; an extract from Carl Schurz' "Peace Policy" might do. Inclosed is a dollar and a half for your incidental expenses; you can dead-beat traveling expenses. Yours, MARK TWAIN.

P. S. Send me a thigh-bone of the fallen chief by next express.

Dan. will attend to the matter in the spring.

The old howitzer used on the occasion is still in his possession.

A Rough Translation.

A young lady moving in the most exalted society circles of Galveston, after much toil and practice at the piano, learned to play with considerable dexterity a piece entitled "Picnic Polka." It is something after the style of the celebrated "Battle of Prague," in which the listener can readily distinguish the roar of artillery, the rattle of musketry, the shouts of soldiers and the groans of the dying. In the "Picnic Polka" the noise of the wind among the trees and the joyous carols of the birds are reproduced, the finale being a thunder-shower, which disturbs the sylvan revelers. It happens that a country cousin is in town just now, and the young lady thought she would play the piece to him and hear his comment. He is a plain, simple-minded youth, and, although not very bright, is very appreciative. She told him what the piece was and then proceeded to give him the "Picnic Polka." The first notes rather slow and hesitating, the idea sought to be conveyed being the solemn solitude of forest, through which the gentle zephys (not heifer) sighs. After she got through with this preface, she ask him if he did not almost imagine himself in a lodge in some vast wilderness. He replied that he thought all that slowness meant the delay in getting off. Said he: "There is always some darned fellow who oversleeps himself and keeps every body else waiting."

She did not care to discuss the point with the ignorant fellow, so, to conceal her emotions, she once more let herself out on the piano. The woods were filled with music. The mocking-bird whistled as if his throat would split, the cuckoo filled the sylvan bowers with his repeated cry, while ever and anon the mournful cooing of the dove interrupted the matin song of the lark.

"There, now, I guess you know what that sounds like," she said, as she paused.

"You mean that 'tootle, tootle, tootle, chug, chug, chug?' You just bet I understand that. Many is the time at a picnic I've heard it from the mouth of a demijohn or the bunghole of a beer keg."

Her first impulse was to hurl the piano stool at him; but it passed off, and once more she went at the piano as if it was the young man's head and was insured for double its value. The thunder growled, the lightning flashed (from her eyes), and the first heavy drops are heard upon the leaves. She banged and mauled the keys at a fearful rate, peal after peal of deafening thunder perturbed the atmosphere, and re-echoed in still louder reverberations, until it wound up in one appalling clap as a grand finale. Then, turning to the awe-stricken youth, she said:

"I suppose you have heard something like that before."

"Yes, that's what the fellow with linen pants said when he sat down on the custard pie."

The audience found himself alone, but he picked up his hat and sauntered out into the street, densely unconscious that he had said anything out of the way.—Galveston News.

"De gem'man dat does the boot blackin' at the old Colony depot" has the misfortune to be a deaf mute, and, like death, he does his work silently and well. The other day a brawny and slightly balmy Hibernian entered the station and, seating himself in the bootblack's chair, stretched out his brogans for a shine. The artist as usual pulled out his kit and went silently to work, but his patron, being far from tongue-tied, looked down and queried:

"F'what time do the next train be going to Gingham?"

The remark fell on the dusky brusher like water on a duck's back as he labored on. Casting a pitying look at the inferior race, the Irish gentleman asked again with labored politeness:

"Look here, young feller, I wos axin you f'what time the train leaves for Gingham?"

Still no response, and, losing patience and politeness, the Hibernian howled:

"Bad luck to yez for a black nagur! Will yez tell me whin the keers goes to Gingham?"

Here an amused habitue of the place interposed and remarked to the irate son of Erin:

"That man can not hear or answer you; he is deaf and dumb."

Drawing himself up in the chair, with a look of ineffable contempt, the Irishman launched this final shot:

"Ah, now! Is he, thin? Well, he needn't put on so much sthyle, anny how!"

Be it known that I, Jefferson Grube, have invented certain new and useful improvements in

Grain Separators,

and have letters patent therefor. This invention has relation to machines for separating Grain, Seed and Chaff, each from the other, and adapted to employ the same High Blast for each separation, and to conduct the grain and seed to opposite ends of the machine, whence they are conducted by proper chutes into sacks, held in position by the machine itself. I expect to have ready by June 1 the Warranted to separate plantain seed from clover seed. For simplicity and convenience it surpasses all others. It delivers grain direct into sacks, which saves much handling.

LETTER FROM MONTANA.

VIRGINIA CITY, MONTANA,
July 18, 1880.

EDITOR COURIER: Perhaps a brief letter from the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, would be acceptable to you and find a place in the columns of your valuable paper, which, no doubt, will be interesting to a few of the many readers of the COURIER.

Since migrating to this golden domain, I have experienced the pleasure of living among the mountains of Montana, and have learned to love and cherish the climatic features so evidently realized here. I am now residing in Virginia City, the county seat of Madison county, which is beautifully situated on the famous Alder gulch, about twelve miles up in the Tobacco Root mountains, east from the Ruby valley. Of late this city has been looming up grandly, and I deem it a successful rival to any of its neighbors; and the enterprise and thrift displayed by its industrious people can be readily observed on every side, which bespeaks volumes in its favor, and augurs grand results in the near future.

Ruby valley is, without doubt, one of the finest and most fertile valleys in Montana. It is about thirty miles in length, with an average width of from four to ten miles, is almost level, and, being hemmed in by snow-cliffed mountains, is susceptible to a constant degree of moisture most requisite, and its splendid water course renders a system of irrigation easy of accomplishment. Although the valley is already thickly settled, there are still many most eligible locations for stock and agricultural farms. The land is of a fine, loamy nature, and the surface soil runs quitedeep. The more than average yield each season of the different cereals, the large and numerous tracts of land under cultivation, best attest its value as an agricultural district. And as a stock range, no valley in the territory can surpass it, considering its size. The industrious and well-to-do ranchmen are happy and contented over the favorable prospect of the growing crops, and treasure the hope of reaping another golden harvest as a compensation for their labor so cheerfully executed. Mining is the greatest industry of Madison county. The principal minerals are gold, silver, lead, copper, iron and coal; precious stones are quite abundant, and among the most valuable are rubies, garnets and agates. There are ledges of white marble, also of excellent building rock and sandstone, the latter used in the manufacture of grindstones. Madison county has quartz lodes in nearly every section of its large territory. There have been five thousand quartz mines recorded in the county. All the world knows of Alder gulch, whose unexampled richness first really started Montana on an era of prosperity that will know no end. This world-renowned gulch lies near the center of the county, and has yielded $35,000,000 or more, and for sixteen miles it is yet strung with mining enterprises of more or less magnitude. At the present time this gulch is extensively worked and affords employment to an enormous corps of men, who receive for their labor per day, $4.00 worth of the glittering gold.

The Indian scare which prevailed throughout different portions of the territory this summer, has nearly subsided. The hostile Sioux who have been ravishing the country have nearly all surrendered to General Miles, at Fort Keogh, giving up their arms and ponies and ask to be taken back to their reservation, which request will be readily complied with by the government officials.

Here, malaria epidemics are unknown, and destructive storms very rare. Summer nights are delightfully cool, and, indeed, every breath of the pure mountain air, winter or summer, perfumed with the odor of pine and spruce, is a conscious inhalation of new life and strength.

As the tourist or homeseeker enters Montana from the south, via the Union Pacific and Utah and Northern railroads, he hardly crosses the line ere objects of interest plead for attention right and left. Then he may wander all over this marvelously beautiful domain, from the bad land regions of the lower Missouri and Yellowstone, at the extreme east, to the grandly rugged summits of the Bitter Root range at the western boundary, and, at the close, confess in his bewilderment, that nature charmed so irresistibly at different steps, it would be difficult which spot to favor in a second ramble. When, from the slopes of Madison county, "Old Baldy," I looked down upon Ruby valley, with the golden light of the morning sun creeping down the purple heights of Ruby range, and gradually chasing away the deepest shadows, I mentally ejaculated there could be no other such enrapturing picture in all nature. But a few weeks later I feasted my eyes on Bitter Root valley, far to the northwest, with its wildly romantic walls lifting snowy summits six thousand feet above my head, its river a glorious mirror of the fields, forests and orchards fringing it, and its golden harvests and pine-embowered homes (sunset and all), and, fickle mortal that I was, straightway proved treacherous to fair little Ruby. As for the distinctively grand and awe-inspiring, when still a few weeks later I peered into that five-mile throat of granite through which the Missouri seeks egress from mountainland, or stood enraptured among the clouds of spray at the foot of the great falls of the same noble stream, I could easily forget both Bitter Root and Ruby.

Montana derives its name from the Indian name "Tay-a-be-shock-up, or, "Country of the Mountains." The entire region is a most harmonious blending of mountain and valley, lake and river, which presents a physical grandeur unexcelled in America.

And now I must close by saying to those who have perused my letter, that Montana is molded in the heroic style of terrestrial architecture. Her cloud-piercing mountains, in which lie buried the wealth of nature; her unrivaled scenery, which can charm the painter's eye; her magnificent rivers, upon whose waters can be borne the commerce of a world; her extensive plains, upon which feed and fatten countless herds; her fertile valleys, that would yield wealth and happiness to thousands of homes, and her wild and salubrious climate will, should you wend your way here, give you a cordial welcome, provided you will agree to stand by our mottoed banner, "Montana solid for Hancock and English." Respectfully yours,

J. F. KLINE.

English or Arthur, Which?—A Plain Statement for Thinking People.

The political professions and promises of candidates for office amount to little, and it is far better to judge them by their conduct when they have been intrusted with political power. Were they honest and faithful to the trust confided to them? Let us for a moment apply this test to Arthur and English, the candidates for the vice presidency. Mr. Arthur was intrusted with the collection of the United States revenue at the city of New York. Was he faithful to that trust? This question has been answered in the negative by the highest republican testimony in the land, and it is too clear and emphatic to be called in question or explained away.

Here is what Hayes and John Sherman said of this same man Arthur not long since. It is republican testimony and should not be questioned by republicans:

"With a deep sense of my obligations under the constitution, I regard it as my plain duty to suspend you in order that the office may be honestly administered."—R. B. Hayes to Collector Arthur, January 31, 1879.

"Gross abuses of administration have continued and increased during your incumbency."—Sherman to Collector Arthur, January 31, 1879.

"Persons have been regularly paid by you who have rendered little or no sevice; the expenses of your office have increased, while its receipts have diminished. Bribes, or gratuities in the shape of bribes, have been received by your subordinates in several branches of the custom house, and you have in no case supported the effort to correct these abuses."—Secretary Sherman to Collector Arthur, January 31, 1879.

Now we have seen what Secretary Sherman and President Hayes said of Mr. Arthur, let us see what was said of Mr. English when he was intrusted with political power.

The president of the United States wrote to Mr. English as follows: "It was your fate to end a dangerous agitation, to confer lasting benefits upon your country, and to make your character historical. I shall remain always your friend. If I had a thousand votes you should have them all with a hearty good will."

And now let us see what his constituents said when he retired from office. The convention which nominated his successor, adopted unanimously the following resolution:

"Resolved, That in selecting a candidate to represent this district in the Thirty-seventh congress, we deem it a proper occasion to express the respect and esteem we entertain for our present member, Hon. W. H. English, and our confidence in him as a public officer. In his retirement, in accordance with his well known wishes, from the position of representative, which he has so long filled with credit to himself and benefit to the country, we heartily greet him with the plaudit, 'Well done thou good and faithful servant.'"

Again: Mr. English was for fifteen years intrusted with the management of one of the most important financial institutions in the west, from which he voluntarily retired with the thanks of the directors and stockholders,

"For the very great financial ability, constant watchfulness and perfect fidelity with which he has managed it from its organization to the present time."

And this resolution was offered by Colonel John C. New, now the chairman of the Indiana republican central committee.

Here then is the whole case in a nutshell: English was faithful to the public trusts committed to him, and voluntarily retired with the praise of his administration and the unanimous plaudits of his constituents, "well done thou good and faithful servant," whereas Arthur proved recreant to his trust, and was kicked out of his office in disgrace, "in order," as President Hayes and Secretary Sherman said, "that the office might be honestly administered."

These are not partisan statements, but plain unvarnished facts which honest thinking people will not fail to consider in making up a judgment as to which of these two men it would be safest to intrust with public office.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hayes has now drawn nearly $100,000 of Tilden's salary. He should reform and make restitution.

When Dr. Tanner finishes the art of living without eating, and gets nicely broken in, he will probably "up and die," like the Irishman's horse.

Whenever any prominent republican comes out for Hancock, as they are doing from all quarters, the republican papers say: "Oh, he has not voted the republican ticket for years."

What a beautiful fitness there is in Garfield's being the standard-bearer for the republican party! A man whose political life is tainted with fraud is a fit subject to lead a party that is reeking with corruption.

Porter, the republican nominee for governor, resigned his position in Washington City and came home to take an active part in the campaign. After the election, Mr. Porter will probably find himself out of a job.

The republicans claim that Garfield is a more thorough scholar than any president since the days of John Quincy Adams. They, however, overlook Tilden; but the American people, the masses of whom are honest, will prove at the next election that they have not overlooked the great fraud of 1876.

The Washington Post says: "The hearty cordiality with which a radical politician embraces an ex-confederate who says he will vote for General Garfield, is only equaled by the malignant bitterness with which he denounces the union veteran who supports the hero of Gettysburg." And that is just about the "size of it" all over the country.

The Atlanta Constitution makes a decidedly appropriate and happy comparison thus: "The republican party, knowing that the people of the north want peace, is trying to turn its 'sectional-hate' face away from public observation. Too thin. When Jones went to bed drunk and turned over to keep his breath from betraying him to his wife, Mrs. Jones quietly remarked: 'Oh, you needn't turn away, Jones, for you are drunk clean through.'"

Of the great soldier who is now denounced by the republican press as a traitor, Captain Glazier, in his "Heroes of Three Wars," says: "Hancock always displayed the characteristics of a true and chivalrous manhood. Gracious to a conquered enemy, generous in all his instincts, incapable of pettiness, never revengeful, splendid in military qualities, he was such a general as would fitly adorn the annals of any age, however glorious. The student of human nature takes pleasure in contemplating such a character, and believes afresh in the possibility of the lofticst types of mankind."

The Lagrange Standard man, in his last issue, gets his pencil off in this assuring (?) little paragraph:

"It is reported that the democracy are much worried over their candidate for governor, and that it is in contemplation to draw him off and substitute Hendricks. The state central committee were to meet yesterday, for that or something else. That Indiana is going republican is becoming every day more apparent."

By whom, please, is such bosh "reported," outside the republican press? We are prone to believe that it originated in Mr. Rerick's versatile imagination. Such misrepresentations, however, can do no harm, as will be manifested by the approaching election.

Judge Taylor, the would be congressman from this district, blasphemously asserts that "God is on the side of the republican party." This insult to Jehovah is worthy of Dr. Monroe, editor of the Seymour Times, who spells God with a little "g" and Lord with a little "l." The judge has evidently been misinformed. The attributes of God are love, mercy, truth and justice; our God is an honest God, and says "Thou shalt not steal," and if he had been acting with the republican party, the greatest theft known in the history of the world—stealing the presidency of the United States—would never have been committed. No, God is not a republican, judge.

Last week's Middlebury Record tells the following harrowing tale of man's inhumanity to woman:

A swain who was jilted by a young lady in Wellington had his revenge. She wrote to him and requested that he would be good enough to return the lock of hair which he had obtained from her. His reply was brief and to the point. Rummaging his trunk he collected a heap of tresses, culled from various sources during his love-making career, and forwarded them in a bundle to his deceitful fair, inclosing a note to the effect that he had really forgotten which was hers, but she might select it from those forwarded and return the rest at her earliest convenience. This is considered a stinging rebuff, and so it was with a vengeance. The lady is now on a visit to some country relatives.

THE EAST.

SO FAR nine boys have died in Philadelphia from injuries received by the explosion of toy-pistols on the 4th and 5th of July. The boys ranged in age from 10 to 16 years, and each one was injured in the hands, which resulted in tetanus and death.

DR. TANNER'S condition was reported as good at the close of the twenty-eighth day of his fast. His weight was 129½, a loss of one pound in the preceding twenty-four hours.

DR. TANNER entered upon the thirty-first day of his fast in prime condition, and confident of completing his tremendous task. He took his usual two-hours' drive in the morning and filled his demijohn with well water. The scales showed that he had gained half a pound in weight in the twenty-four hours. His pulse was 84; temperature 98.80; respiration, 14; weight, 130 pounds.

CENSUS returns from the thirty-two most populous counties in New York indicate that the population of the State will exceed 5,000,000.

A CHANGE for the worse in Dr. Tanner's condition was noted at the close of the thirty-second day of his long fast. He was reported weaker than at any time since the beginning of his self-imposed task, and his eyes wore a dull and heavy look. During the day he vomited an ounce and a half of mucous, tinged with bile, and was weak and helpless for nearly an hour afterward. Notwithstanding the symptoms of weakening, the doctor was confident that he could hold out for forty days. His pulse was recorded at 72; temperature 98 3-5; respiration, 15; weight, 127½ pounds. His strength was tested by the dynometer and found to be 80 kilometers on the right hand and 75 on the left.

VANDERBILT'S mare Maud S. beat Trinket in three straight heats at Chicago, giving him a double distance in the last, which was made in 2:18¼. This time is within three-quarters of a second of the best ever made, and is considered remarkable for a 6-year-old mare. In one of the heats Maud S. made a quarter-mile at the rate of 2:08....The official census returns make the population of the Second district of Kansas, comprising fifty western counties of the State, 335,060—an increase of 275,000 since 1870. The census of the entire State will probably show a population of 1,000,000.

THERE was a sudden termination to a colored camp-meeting near Hillsboro, Ohio, when a gang of white roughs who invaded the grounds attempted to demolish the sutler's tent and had a regular pitched battle with the officers. About fifty shots were fired, and clubs and bowlders were freely used. Three men are very badly hurt, probably fatally, and many others more or less injured.... In Oakland, Cal., Edward Schroeder entered the office of Dr. Alfred Lefevre and shot him dead. Both parties were of good social position, Schroeder being teller of the London and San Francisco Bank, and Lefevre a long-established and popular dentist. POLITICAL.

EX-GOV. B. GRATZ BROWN is a candidate for the United States Senate from Missouri.

THE Maine Democratic and Greenback State Committees were in session at Augusta last week. The result of the conference was a determination to pool their issues, raise a large amount of money, flood the State with speakers, and wage an aggressive campaign.

THE West Virginia Democratic Convention, in session at Martinsburg, nominated Col. J. B. Jackson, of Parkersburg, for Governor.

THE Ohio Greenback Convention, in session last week at Columbus, nominated the following State ticket: For Secretary of State, Charles A. Lloyd, of Seneca; Supreme Judge, D. W. C. Louden, of Brown county; Clerk of the Supreme Court, Charles Bowsall, of Columbiana; Member of the Board of Public Works, Amos Roberts, of Knox county; School Commissioner, R. D. Smart, of Ross county; Presidential Electors-at-large, Harvey Kellogg, of Lucas, and L. T. Foster, of Mahoning.

FOREIGN.

PRACTICALLY, the German Government has been compelled to tender a compromise to the church. The announcement that after the Church bill is gazetted the control of church funds will be given into the hands of the clergy is significant of the extent to which concession has been found to be necessary by the Government.... Turkey's answer to the collective note of the powers, relative to the enforcement of the treaty of Berlin, is wholly unsatisfactory, as it was expected it would be. Instead of addressing itself to the points made in the note, it raises new questions for the consideration of Europe, and proposes that the Porte shall reopen direct negotiations with Greece.... The Montenegrin envoy at Constantinople has been recalled in consequence of the representation of the Porte to the powers that Montenegro was the aggressor in the affair with the Albanians....Abdurrahman Khan has been formally recognized as Ameer of Afghanistan by the British.

MORE than 300 lives were lost by the late earthquake at Manila....Montenegro has ordered a levy of all men between 16 and 60. ....It is reported from Vienna that the powers have decided to give Turkey just three weeks in which to make up her mind to obey the voice of Europe....At a communistic soiree in Paris violent speeches were made, eulogizing the commune and its defenders, demanding a European republic, annihilation of Kings and social revolution.

JOSEPH PEDRAHITA, an American citizen, claims $200,000 damages from the Spanish Government for false imprisonment in Cuba. ....A row-boat was run down by a steam launch on the Thames, and a gentleman and lady and two children were drowned....The steamer Hazeldean, from Bilbao for Newcastle, recently sank in the British channel. Five of her crew were drowned.... In the recent engagement between Cuban insurgents and Spanish troops the former are reported to have been badly worsted, losing three of their principal officers—Gen. Medina, Gen. Fleites and Col. Johnson, the latter an American....A pleasure steamer capsized in a squall on Lake Brienz, Switzerland, and sixteen persons were drowned....The German Government has expelled from the country Mormon missionaries making proselytes.

A CABLE dispatch chronicles the restoration of capital punishment by another of the Swiss cantons by which it was abolished. To further secure the beneficial effects in the way of terror to evil doers, this canton has also enacted that hereafter all executions shall be public....A St. Petersburg dispatch says the reports of Gen. Skobeleff's death are untrue.

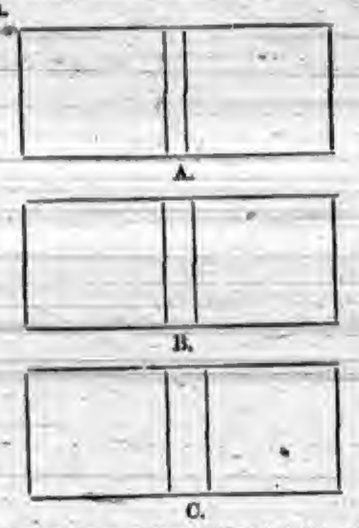
ANOTHER disaster has overtaken the British arms in Afghanistan. Ayoob Khan, at the head of a largely superior force of natives, surprised and attacked Gen. Burrows' command near Candahar. They were driven ten miles with great slaughter, only a remnant escaping, and they barely saved themselves by taking refuge in the fortifications of Candahar. It was the most disastrous repulse yet sustained by the English in Afghanistan, and will probably lead to an entire reopening of the campaign....Turkey's reply to the collective note of the powers has been delivered to the Ambassadors at Constantinople. It declares a readiness to execute the Montenegrin convention in three weeks, but, relative to Greece, it states that it is impossible to surrender Janina, Larrissa, and Metzovovo, and urges further negotiations.

HOW HE DID IT.

The Way Hill Made Ten Dollars With Nine.

[St. Louis Post-Dispatch.]

Charles A. Hill, Esq., attorney-at-law, is just now an occupant of Cell 33 in the City Jail, and with the cheerful prospect before him of ten years in the penitentiary. He is the most notable capture which the United States detectives have made since the Biebusch case, and the arrest has caused a great deal of excitement throughout the town. In yesterday's Post-Dispatch the details of the collar were given, and within the last twenty-four hours quite a number of new facts have developed, enough to make conviction a certainty. Mr. Hill has been in the habit of clipping one and two-dollar greenback bills in such a way that out of each nine he makes ten. The process is rather a complicated one, and needs diagrams for thorough comprehension.



Out of one dollar bill "A" he clips a piece through the head of Washington three-eighths of an inch wide, and cut with artistic irregularity. The two ends of the bill are brought a little closer together than they were before the piece was taken out, and a rough continuation of the lines of the head is made with ink upon the white surface of the gummed paper beneath. The bill is then artistically dirtied, and is ready for shoving. Bill "B" is then taken up, and a section three quarters of an inch, or twice as large as that taken out of "A" is then removed; the piece taken out of "A" is then inserted between the two ends of "B," the pasting, inking and dirtying repeated, and this bill is also ready for the market. A section an inch and a half wide is then removed from "C," and the three-quarters cut from "B" let in, and so the process is continued, each bill, instead of its true length of seven and three-quarter inches, being only seven inches. The first one is the most dangerous, because it is hard to doctor up the head of the Father of his Country in a way that the children of the same will not recognize the old gentleman, and hence this bill is left the longest of the lot.

It is easy to see that out of every nine bills there is an extra bill left over, making ten dollars for nine. Working as hard as he could, Mr. Hill could not have made more than from three to five dollars per day—rather a small sum for the risk he ran, as it was necessary to shove fifty of the mutilated dollars to make five Excursion Horror on the Detroit River.

The steamer Mamie, containing a pleasure party belonging to the Catholic Church of the Holy Trinity, at Detroit, was run down by the steamer Garland, in the Detroit river, on the night of the 22d of July, and seventeen of the excursionists found a watery grave. Following are the particulars of the distressing accident, as furnished by the Detroit papers:

The pastor of Trinity Roman Catholic Church, the Rev. Father Bleyenburgh, in accordance with his annual custom, took to Monroe, Mich., for a day's pleasure, the acolytes and altar boys of his church. There they spent a happy day, and, on their return, while coming up the Detroit river, at about 10 o'clock at night, at a point just below Grassy Island lighthouse, the yacht was met by the steamer Garland, of Detroit, having on board the Molders' Union and a large party of friends, when a collision took place, the Garland literally running the steam yacht down and almost running over her.

The Mamie was cut in two, and immediately sank, taking down nearly all the twenty-four persons on board. Boats were immediately lowered and life-preservers thrown overboard, but with the strong, swift current at this point, where the water is thirty-five feet deep, they were of little avail. Seventeen persons perished, with but little hope of their bodies being found for several days.

The people on board the Garland, and also her wheelsman, say that both boats would have been all right had not the yacht suddenly changed her course and shot across the bows of the Garland. The captain of the Garland refused to give any particulars, but the wheelsman states that he saw a light, which he took to be an anchor-light, and no red or green lights. When about fifty feet from the light he heard a whistle from the Mamie, answered it, and backed the engines. He called to Capt. Wright to help on the wheel. He thinks the Mamie must have tried to cross his bow.

It is generally admitted that there was a great lack of nerve and system in the matter of rescuing, so far as the officers of the Garland were concerned, and that the accident was the result of the greatest carelessness and most criminal neglect, as the night was clear and moon shining brightly.

Father Bleyenburgh, the priest who had charge of the boys on the yacht, has taken his acolytes on such excursions yearly. His sad experience in this case has completely broken him down, and it is feared the nervous shock may result in permanently injuring him. His parish is the largest in the city or State, and the grief is widespread.

The Beginning of American Diplomacy.

Paris was the birthplace of American diplomacy. Our first commission was sent to Paris. Paris was made the headquarters of our European diplomacy; with which all the more-distant members held correspondence. The first diplomatic letter dispatched by an American agent from Europe was dated at Paris, Jan. 17, 1777. After the recognition of our independence, the first Minister ever sent from the United States was sent to Paris, and the first Minister we ever received came from Paris. Our negotiations with Holland were mostly conducted at Paris, and it was at Paris that a Swedish Ambassador, specially instructed to that purpose by his King, made a treaty with Dr. Franklin in January, 1782, saying that Sweden was the first country in Europe which had volunteered to make a treaty with the United States, without request on our part, and that he hoped it would be remembered.

The treaties of peace with England, the provisional treaty of 1782, and the final treaty of Sept. 3, 1783, were executed at Paris. And, lastly, it was at Paris that Dr. Franklin, in July, 1785, affixed his signature to the celebrated treaty with Prussia of that year, the last public act of his life in Europe.—R. H. Dana, in Scribner.

Habits of the Beaver.

I am well acquainted with the habits of the Northern beaver. Several years ago I bought up several hundred acres of mining lands near the south shore of Lake Superior, in Ontonagon County, Mich.

On Carp River, a small stream that crossed a part of my lands, the beavers had built several dams, and formed extensive ponds, in which they built their houses, or lodges, as the Indians call them. These lodges are built in water several feet in depth, and the entrance is several feet under water, but the floor of the lodge is built at least two feet above high water mark. The floor is built solid from the bottom of the pond, except the entrance.

Although the beaver is warmly clad with long fine fur, he is very sensitive to the cold, and rarely, if ever, leaves the pond or lodge during cold weather. He lays in his winter supply of food, which mainly consists of the bark of a species of poplar. He cuts down small trees and cuts them into short pieces of one foot, or a little over, in length, and takes them into the pond, and fastens one end of these pieces securely in the mud at the bottom of the pond. These pieces of wood are dragged up into the lodge, as often as food is needed, and the bark gnawed off; and after being denuded of the bark, they are by no means thrown away as useless, but are taken under the ice, and carefully placed in the dam, to strengthen it.

They built one dam a little below the foot of Carp Lake, which raised the lake thirty inches. The lake is a small one—about one mile long and a fourth of a mile wide. I measured the stump of a maple tree that they had cut down, and it measured fourteen inches in diameter. There were no less than eleven dams on the stream, all in sight of our buildings, where we were mining for copper.

The beaver possesses great engineering skill, always building his dams in the form of an arch, the crown of the arch being invariably up stream, giving it strength to resist the pressure of the water. The Indians used to tell me many singular traits of character that this animal possesses. They build their dams and lodges of mud, sticks and stones, compactly and very strong. I once saw an albino beaver skin. I thought, and still think, that it was the purest white I ever saw.

A Queer Breed of Children.

"There are the most curious children in that coach that I ever saw in my life," said a gentlemen standing on the Union Pacific Depot platform to a Bee reporter. "Just step in and look at 'em, and if you can tell me what they are you can have them." With a view of accepting the offer and starting a side-show business if the articles referred to proved to be genuine curiosities, the Bee representative mounted the steps of the coach on a tour of investigation. Surely enough, occupying four seats on the left-hand side, sat a Chinaman well dressed in his national costume and beside him a full-blooded negro woman, holding two children on her lap, while four others, under the charge of a Chinese servant, rolled and tumbled over the seats and down the aisles of the car. There was nothing so peculiar in the appearance of either the man and wife, for so the reporter found them to be, but the six children, the oldest of whom was nine years of age, were the most singular combination of negro and Chinese imaginable. Their hair was crisp and curly; their skin very dark, but the shape of their face and the almond-shaped eyes proclaimed their paternity too distinctly for any mistake. They jabbered away with their father in his native tongue in the most artless manner, while at the same time they kept the passengers in convulsions of laughter with contortions and grimaces which would have done infinite credit to the stage of negro minstrelsy. The reporter acertained that the name of the Chiaman was Hang Hang, who, twelve years ago, went a coolie to Cuba. While working in Cube he became enamored of a negro slave, He saved enough to purchase her freedom and married her. In the course of a few years he became a coolie contractor himself, and is now wealthy.—Omaha Bee.

What Women Have Done.

Women have made four important contributions to civilization: They have cared for the body in its immediate needs by the preparation of food and clothing, and by ministration to the sick; they have been the conservers of moral forces, and have insisted on special standards of conduct in society and in the home; they have guided the rudimentary intellectual training of children; and they have contributed to the æsthetic development of the race by creating and combining beautiful forms and colors, in dress, in decoration, and in household art. These four departments have been mainly controlled by women, and the comfort and beauty of every-day life proclaim their success.—Miss M. A. Hardaker, in North American Review.

Black Coats.

The late famous Rev. Dr. Macdonald was crossing at Kessock on one of his frequent journeys. The day was very stormy, and there was difficulty in getting the boat across. An old woman, one of the passengers, quoted the saying that "where there were black coats there was always bad weather," and asked the doctor if he could give any reason for it. He answered, with habitual quickness, that "ministers are at war with Satan, and that he supposed the latter, as prince of the power of the air, was at the bottom of the matter." Coming back some time after, the day being fine, the old woman was there again, and this time quietly remarked, to the discomfiture of the doctor, "I see you have made your peace with the prince of the power of the air."

"SIT down!" said a nervous old gentleman to his son, who was making too much noise. "I won't do it," was the impudent answer. "Well, then, stand up. I will be obeyed!"

ALL SORTS.

SOME men are born fools, some achieve idiocy, and some have it thrust upon them by the American paragraphers.—New York News.

A WOMAN at Des Moines has a hen which she declares to be twenty-eight years old. More than fifty hotel-keepers have sought to buy the fowl.

"Now tell me candidly, are you guilty?" asked a lawyer of his client. "Why, do you suppose I'd be fool enough to hire you if I was innocent?"

A BOSTON theatrical company recently played a scene laid in a church so naturally that to many of the audience it seemed so real that they went to sleep.

Two young limbs of the law out for a country airing. Coversation—"What do you suppose is the matter with the wheat in that field, it looks so small?" "Mortgage keeps it down, I guess."

MEN who have lost a hand or a leg in a saw mill now get looked upon as military heroes by gazing upon towns wrecked by cyclones and remarking that the scene looks like a battle field.

THE expression of a boy's face, at the end of a straw that lacks two inches of reaching the cider in a barrel, is supposed to be the model that the artist selected in the delineation of Adam leaving Paradise.

"I THINK," said a farmer, "I should make a good Congressman; for I use their language. I received two bills the other day, with a request for immediate payment; the one I ordered to be laid on the table, the other to be read that day six months."

A LITTLE girl once said that she would be very glad to go to heaven because they had plenty of preserves there. On being cross-examined she took down her catechism and triumphantly read: "Why ought the saints to love God?" Answer: "Because he makes, preserves and keeps them."

"WHEN a girl gets mad and rises from a fellow's knee," says an exchange, "but thinks better of it and goes back again, that's what they call a relapse." Correct, but when the head of the family happens to witness this "relapse," it is generally followed by a "collapse." At least that's what we heard say.

ONE of our most enterprising stock-brokers had occasion, a few days since, to call on a customer for additional margin. He had prepared himself for almost any excuse which the man might offer for delay, but he confessed himself quite unable to cope with the ingenuity which inspired the following reply: "My dear fellow, that's all right. Why, bless your heart, I'm so anxious to accommodate you that I've sold a piece of property worth $100,000; but my aged grandmother has an eighth interest in it, and just as she was going to sign the deed she had a stroke of paralysis. Just my luck!"

A CLERGYMAN in Pittsburg lately married a lady with whom he received the substantial dowry of $10,000, and a fair prospect for more. Soon afterward, while occupying the pulpit, he gave out a hymn, read the first four stanzas, and was reading the fifth,

Forever let my grateful heart
His boundless grace adore,

when he hesitated and exclaimed, "Ahem! The choir will omit the fifth verse," and sat down. The congregation, attracted by his apparent confusion, read the remaining lines:

Which gives ten thousand blessings now
And bids me hope for more.

"IT is a curious fact," says the Philadelphia Times, "that Philadelphia is about the only great city in the world where horse-racing is thoroughly disreputable. At New York and Baltimore, for example, to go no further away, races are conducted with at least the semblance of honesty, and with a careful regard for decency, and gentlemen and ladies go to enjoy the sport, as they do at Epsom or Longchamps, without any danger to their self-respect. In Philadelphia, on the other hand, a horse-race attracts nobody but gamblers and fast women, and no decent person would like to be seen at one of our race-courses."

THERE are 400 tile factories in Ohio, 486 in Indiana, and 320 in Illinois. All of these are doing a fair business, depending on location. The day is not far distant when thorough underdraining will be deemed essential to good farming, especially of wet lands with clay substrata. In fact, it has been demonstrated that the product of a given acreage may be enhanced from 50 to 75 per cent. by systematic draining, all other modes of treating the land and crops being identical with those pursued before the tilling was done. It is not extravagant to anticipate that the number of tile factories in the three States above named will be doubled by the end of the present century.

A Rattlesnake Snared.

Mr. L. B. Rathburn, a farmer residing near Cherokee, has in his employ four or five Italians engaged in chopping wood. Ground squirrels being very plentiful in the neighborhood of the camp of these men, and being a very destructive animal on the grain fields of Mr. Rathburn, the Italian gentlemen set their wits to work to discover a mode to capture them; and this was the plan they adopted: They found the holes in which the squirrels burrowed, and drove a solid stake close to the mouth of each hole. They then took a piece of small-sized wire and fastened one end securely to each stake, made a sort of slip-noose at the other end, which they placed directly in the mouth of each hole. The result was, when Mr. Squirrel attempted to emerge from his hiding-place, he would run his head directly into the noose, and that was the last of Mr. Squirrel. As many as eighteen of the little vexatious animals were caught in this manner in one day. The trappers, however, discovered one soggy old chap, as they thought, who baffled their ingenuity, and for the purpose of ensnaring him they rigged up three of their nooses and placed them into the hole occupied by the wary animal, thinking that if he passed through one or two of them he would be caught by the third one. Judge of their astonishment on finding securely fastened within two of the nooses, instead of a squirrel, an immense rattlesnake, wearing on his nether end sixteen rattles. The snake was fastened tightly by two of the nooses, and was soon dispatched by the trappers. Mr. R. says rattlesnakes are very abundant in his neighborhood; that several have been killed near his place within the past few weeks. —North San Juan (N. M.) Times.

Railway Building in 1880.

The Railway Age, in speaking of new railroad building in 1880, says it is already certain that the year 1880 will be marked by an activity in the projection and construction of railways that has not been equaled in this country since the panic of 1873, and it is not improbable that the addition to our mileage during the present twelve months may exceed that of 1871, the year of greatest increase, when over 7,200 miles of new track were laid. Therefore, in 1880 the mileage is more than twice as great as in the corresponding period of any year since 1873—in fact, is four and a half times as great as that in the first six months of 1875.

It is impossible thus early to state with any exactness the mileage constructed during the past six months. The Age has undertaken, however, to compile and classify the statistics now on hand, and presents a partial and nearly complete statement of the mileage of new track laid in the different States and Territories, between Jan. 1 and July 1. It shows that the rails have been going down in at least twenty-nine States and Territories, and, up to last date, fully 1,700 miles had been laid.

The Age has also prepared a partial list of the roads upon which grading or track-laying is now understood to be going on. The statement shows that work is now in progress upon at least 119 railroads in thirty-five States and Territories, covering a proposed mileage of about 8,000 miles.

Origin of "A Wild-Goose Chase."

A writer in the Troy Times says: "Wild-goose chase" was a term used to express a sort of racing on horseback formerly practiced, resembling the flying of wild geese, these birds generally going in a train one after another, not in confused flocks as other birds do. In this sort of race the two horses, after running twelve-score yards, had liberty, which horse soever could get the lead, to take what ground the jockey pleased, the hindmost horse being bound to follow him within a certain distance agreed on by the articles, or else to be whipped in by the triers and judges who rode by, and which ever horse could distance the other won the race. This sort of race was not long in common use, for it was found inhuman and destructive of good horses when two such were matched together. For, in this case, neither was able to distance the other till they were both ready to sink under their riders, and often two very good horses were both spoiled, and the wagers forced to be drawn at last. The mischief of this sort of racing soon brought in the method now in use, of only running over a certain quantity of ground, and determining the wager by coming in first at the winning post. The phrase "wild-goose chase" is now employed to denote a fruitless attempt, or an enterprise undertaken with little probability of success, such as May, an early dramatist, thus pleasantly described:

Ah, me! throughout the world
  Doth wickedness abound;
And well I wot, on neither hand
  Can honesty be found.
The wisest man in Athens
  About the city ran,
With a lantern in the midst of day,
  To find an honest man.
And when at night he sat him down
  To reckon on his gains,
He only found—a'ack, poor man—
  His labor for his pains.

"MY daughter, never tell any one your private affairs," said a mother in sending her daughter away upon her first journey. "Monsieur, a third-class ticket, if you please?" said the daughter at the ticket-office. "For where?" asked the employe. "Is that any of your business?" answered Madamoiselle, indignantly, remembering her mother's advice.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

AUBURN COURIER.

ROB. J. LOWRY,
EDITOR.

THE doctors say that jumping the rope has killed a great many little girls. We have known it to kill some full grown men, because they couldn't jump clear through it—shoulders too broad.

THE Inter-State Industrial Exposition of Chicago will open Sept. 8 and close Oct. 23. Applications for space have been already received sufficient nearly or quite to cover the entire exhibition surface.

THE census returns indicate that the population of California will be over 850,000, an increase of nearly 300,000 over the census of 1870. The growth of San Francisco has not been as great as was expected, but the agricultural sections have done well. There has been a decrease in some of the old mining counties.

IT is believed Texas will show nearly 2,000,000 population this year, against 800,000 in 1870; and yet Texas has no large cities. Dallas, with her suburbs, shows up, in round numbers, 16,000 people; Houston, 17,000; San Antonio, 19,000; Galveston, 22,000. These are the leading cities of the State, all others falling far below them.

NEW ORLEANS has neither cellars nor sewers, because the city rests on a substratum of marsh. The gutters have carried off the drainage, or failed to, according to the frequency of rains. The Sanitarians, a local society for the preservation of health, have now brought about a steady flow of water from the river through most of the streets.

THE Ministerial bill against drunkenness about to be considered by the Dutch States General limits the number of public houses to one per 500 inhabitants in towns of 50,000 souls, one per 400 in towns of 20,000, one per 300 in towns of 10,000, and one per 250 in all smaller places. It also forbids the supply of intoxicants to children under 16, and imposes from one to eight days' imprisonment for supplying intoxicants to persons already drunk.

THE Louisville Courier-Journal contains a report showing the population of the cities of the South as enumerated by the census of 1880, viz.:

Austin, Tex.	11,080	Huntsville, Tex.	1,600
Cape Girardeau, Mo.	5,900	Knoxville, Tenn.	13,928

PROF. THURSTON, testing pieces of the wire cable of the Fairmount suspension bridge, recently taken down at Philadelphia, after being in use about forty years, found the iron to be fully equal in tenacity, elasticity and ductility to the best wire of the same size found in the market. This fact, and similar results obtained by another experimenter in 1878, led him to the important conclusion that iron subjected to the ordinary strains of properly designed bridges does not deteriorate with age.

IN a paper read before a farmers' club at New Brunswick, N. J., it was stated that there were 30,000 farmers in New Jersey, 30,652 farms, 79,000 horses, 63,607 farm laborers, and $264,000,000 capital stock, which produces annually $16,000,000. There are 6,636 manufactories, with 58,000 horse-power and 75,000 operatives, with $80,000,000 capital, which produce $169,000,000. For the improvement of farms and the increase of crops more than $500,000 worth of purchased fertilizers are used in New Jersey every year. The hay crop amounts to more than 500,000 tons a year. New Jersey is the largest cranberry-growing State in the Union. The crop last year was 75,000 bushels.

A CLERGYMAN of Sheffield, England, has invented a method of saving sinners and saints, too, who cannot swim. It is a chemical preparation which is inserted between the lining and the outside of any garment—along the breast and back of a coat, for example. It recently had a trial at a swimming-bath. The attendant, with it on, "took a header" into the water. He reappeared on the surface almost immediately with the coat inflated, and was borne safely up. Subsequently he attached a small piece of lead to the coat and threw it into the water, where it easily floated. It will remain buoyant forty or fifty hours, and if it will perform what is claimed for it it will supersede life-preservers. One would need only a traveling coat or waist made up with it in order to feel, in all ordinary disasters, a perfect security.

EVER since the mutiny of 1857 the people of British India have been disarmed, though generally in villages bordering upon a forest one or two inhabitants are licensed to carry a matchlock, which, although useful in driving off hogs, is of small value in tiger-slaying. This, therefore, becomes especially the business of the magistrate of the district. Consequently, when a tiger appears in the neighborhood, one or two officials pitch their camp in his neighborhood, but are often thwarted for weeks by his cunning, and sometimes do not get him at all. A man-eating tiger is abnormally suspicious, and is off at the slightest alarm. When once a tiger has become a man-eater he seems to care only for man, and perhaps on this account usually comes off rather short for food, and when killed seldom presents a prosperous appearance. Not one tiger in a hundred, however, is a man-eater; but once let one of this sort get near a village, and it has often happened that the whole of the inhabitants will, after repeated losses, in despair move en masse to a neighboring town for safety.

THERE are in the world over 200,000 miles of railroad, nearly one-half of which, or 86,000 miles, are in the United States. Europe has nearly 100,000, and the remainder of the world only about 25,000 miles. There are, however, more miles of railroad to the square mile (one mile of road to every forty square miles of area) in the United States than there are in Europe (one mile of road to forty-four square miles). In the United States there is a mile of railroad to every 586 people, in Europe, a mile to every 3,481 persons; which, of course, is only another way of saying that the European railroads run through far denser populations than those of the United States; but, on the other hand, the populations of Europe do not travel as many miles annually as do the people of the United States; and, although there are six times as many people in Europe as in the United States, they have only 12,000 more miles of railroad. In Asia 36,000 people, in Africa, 9,000, have only a mile each, while in Australasia there is one mile of railroad to every 1,100 square miles and 1,040 people; and Canada is very little better off than Australasia. So that the people of the United States patronize the railroads more than the people of any other and every other country.

The Tichborne Case.

I listened for a time to the Tichborne trial, while Dr. Kenealy was speaking, and I am sure no American lawyer would have continued in the case an hour after the contemptuous interruptions, contradictions and hostile comments he endured mainly from the Chief Justice himself. The bias of the Court was as plain and partisan as that of the prosecution. The manner was much more offensive than the matter. Conviction was inevitable unless the jury resisted the evident desires and doubted the impressions of the bench.

Of course I am giving the impression of some hours only spent in the Court. These impressions, however, were colored by no sympathy with the claimant, for I have ever believed him an impostor. Certainly the departure from the province of the Court, as recognized on this side of the waters, was startling to an American. The mode by which I gained access to the court-room was certainly unusual. I went one day to Westminster Hall, an utter stranger to place and persons, but with a vague hope of somehow getting in. Finding the entrance strictly guarded, and admission apparently impracticable, I approached a knot of gentlemen in the vicinity, and said to one of them I was an American lawyer, desirous to look in on the trial. "Certainly," said he; "wait a moment, and I will take you in." A few moments later he bade me follow him, which I did, past officers and spectators, far up in front, where he bowed me to a seat with members of the bar, and then himself clambered up into the lofty jury-box! I owed my admission to the courtesy of one of the famous jury.—St. Louis Correspondent of the Albany Law Journal.

Strange Impulses.

The conduct of people in great crises is a wonderful puzzle. Take the Seawanhaka disaster, and we read of a man who stood on the deck and burned to death in spite of all urgings to jump into the water. He was so perplexed that he utterly forgot self. On the other hand, some of the rescued people in the small boats were clamorous to get ashore, and did all they could to prevent rescues until they themselves were on land. Such utter selfishness is hard to believe. Among the rescued, one old woman whose hand-bag, containing $372, had been saved for her, was so indignant at the loss of six pairs of window-fasteners that she compelled the people of the hospital who had taken care of her to send for six new fasteners. She also wanted a diver who was going down to be ordered to look for her spectacles. A very indignant man called at Randall's island for his bag, and, learning that it was lost, threatened a lawsuit at once. This led to a new search, and it was finally found. It contained a pair of stockings, a chemise and a comb and brush. A singular fact connected with steamboat disasters is that the dead always have their pockets turned inside out. They are regularly found so. The truth seems to be that some utterly lose their head, and on the other hand the trying hour develops a cunning deviltry in others that is something for human nature to blush at. Robbery is a sure element of every great accident that renders it possible.—Hartford Courant.

Strange Recovery.

Mrs. Greenzwrit, of Williamsport, is rejoicing in the recovery of her lost voice, and considers it due to the prayers which had been offered by herself and friends. She lost her voice about the middle of July, 1873, in consequence of a severe cold, and since that time has only been able, with much painful effort, to speak in a whisper. For some time past, according to the story, she has united with a neighbor in making her malady the subject of special prayer. Her friend felt assured that on the morning of July 4 the infirmity would be removed, and when the day arrived Mrs. Greenzwrit surprised her friends by talking in a natural tone of voice. Both ladies are accordingly convinced that her recovery was the result of a supernatural visitation.—Pittsburgh Telegraph.

DOMESTIC RECIPES.

WET a flannel cloth in kerosene, dip it in dry whiting, and rub the plate ware. Let it dry on it, and then polish with a chamois skin.

CHALK, or magnesia, rubbed on silk or ribbon that has been greased, and held near the fire will absorb the grease so that it may be brushed off.

PASTE for hanging paper should be made about the consistency of cream, perfectly smooth, without lumps; a little size will add to its tenacity, and a small portion of powdered alum will help it to dry.

CRANBERRY JELLY.—Two ounces of isinglass and one pound of sugar to three pints of strained cranberry juice. Make a strong jelly of the isinglass; then add sugar and juice; boil up and strain into your glasses or molds.

WHITE WINE JELLY.—Take one pint of cold water and pour it on six sheets of isinglass. Let it stand until dissolved. Then pour a pint of boiling water into it, and add the juice and grated rind of one lemon, one pint of sugar, and one wine-glass of white wine. Let it stand until it hardens. This is excellent in sickness, and makes a delicate dessert, to be eaten with cake.

STRAWBERRY CONSERVE.—Prepare the fruit as for preserving, allowing half a pound of loaf sugar to one pound of fruit. Sprinkle the sugar over the fruit at night; in the morning put it on the fire in a kettle, and boil until the berries are clean. Spread on dishes and put in the sun until dry, after which roll the fruit in sugar and pack in jars.

PRESERVED STRAWBERRIES.—Pound for pound of berries and sugar. Put them in a preserving kettle over a slow fire until the sugar melts. Boil twenty-five minutes fast. Take out in a perforated skimmer, and fill a number of small cans three-quarters full. Boil and skim the syrup five minutes longer, fill up the jars, and seal while hot. Keep in a cool, dry place.

FISH PUDDING.—Three pounds of boiled fish; a large lump of butter; a tablespoonful of flour; two cups of fresh milk. When boiled it must cool a little. Add to it the yolks of seven eggs, the whites beaten, and stir it around; then add salt, pepper, and nutmeg. Put it in a buttered dish, and cook for one hour in a pretty warm oven, and then serve. Sauce—Flour and butter and a little broth and capers. This will be found an excellent and toothsome dish.

MOLASSES PICKLES.—One quart molasses and three of water; keep adding as needed. Cut the cucumbers from the vine with a sharp kCife or shears, leaving about an inch of the stem on the cucumber. Use sorghum or any good cane molasses, as the other sirups will cause them to become soft. Keep watch of them while gathering, and if they do not keep good add more molasses and you will have pickles that will be good and our.

A Name which Reflected on Nobody

It is amazing how people imagine that an article in the paper refers to themselves. A Western editor who wrote funny articles had a heap of trouble on that account. His first yarn had a Mr. Bunting for its hero, and the day it appeared Mr. Flagg called and ascertained that it wasn't a hit at him. The next story was about the Hon. Eggleston Eggs, and the Hon. Carrington Carr left word that if it occurred again he should sue the concern. The editor tried the name of Mongrel, and a prominent citizen who was not only named Cross but had a little Indian blood in his veins, came into the office and tried to take the editor's scalp. The editor having had so much trouble determined to be safe the next time, and the man that he described as falling down stairs into a soap barrel was named "Morgue." That time the unlucky humorist had to fight two men, Messrs. Graves and Coffin, who chased him through the main street with pitchforks and a dog. He did think that no man would mistake himself for a person called Cowwallow, but Mr. Oxford did and stood in front of the office for three-quarters of an hour, and threw stones into the office window and called the hapless editor to come out and be ground against a tree. The editor did not respond, as he was too busy attending to two gentlemen who thought they were slurred in a laughable account of the misfortunes of a Mr. Beast. One was named Lyon and the other Lamb, and the editor whispered to each that the other wrote the piece, and then Lyon and Lamb lay down together on the floor and clawed each other's clothes off, and then they got up and threw inkstands and did over $75 damage to the place before they were taken out. And then the editor inserted an advertisement requesting anybody who considered the name of Daguerreotype Q. Watermelon a slur on him to respond, and as no one did he uses that name. And people wonder why humorists give such odd names to their characters.

A Spelling Reformer.

It was in a tobacconist's shop that a painter was at work lettering the counter panel with the word "segars." From time to time a customer would drop in, read the word and say something about the orthography. Why wasn't it spelled "cigars?" "Segars" was wrong, and so forth. After perhaps seventy-five or 100 had thus gratuitously aired their knowledge, a slim, inoffensive-looking, middle-aged gentleman in eye-glasses walked in. No sooner had he crossed the threshold than that painter rose up firmly but orderly. He seized the middle-aged gentleman with both hands and addressed him as follows: "G-n-a-t, nat; p-h-t-h-i-s-i-c, tizik; p-h-l-e-g-m, flem; s-e-p-a-r-a-t-e, separate; g-a-u-g-e, gaje; m-e-t-e-m-p-s-y-c-h-o-s-i-s, metempsikosis; s-e-g-a-r-s! s-e-g-a-r-s! S-E-G-A-R-S!" That was all he said. He turned the middle-aged man to the right-about and kicked him into the street. Then he took up his brush and finished his work, while a serene look hung about his face and glorified it.

"WHAT makes the sea salt?" said the teacher, and young America shouted, "The codfish that are in it."

INDIANA NEWS.

THE cost of the Indianapolis schools last year was $244,636.

THUS far 2,685 dog licenses have been issued in Indianapolis since June 1.

THE devil that was reported to possess a South Bend woman proves to be tapeworm.

AN excellent quality of iron ore has been discovered on a farm five miles north of Corydon.

JOHN S. DAVIS, Judge of the Floyd and Clark Circuit Courts, died at New Albany, last week.

THE contract for a new Court House at Marion, Grant county, has been let to Chicago parties for $133,000.

THE "Great Arabian Circus" collapsed in Salem last week, the employes attaching the property for their salaries.

THE number of cars of freight handled at Indianapolis last week was 10,116, or 2,188 more than in the preceding seven days.

JASPER STEVENSON died at Noblesville, from lockjaw, caused by a stab in the arm received while in a fight with Sam Kiger.

THE Kansas grasshopper has put in an appearance in Northern Indiana, and his coming is looked upon with considerable dread by the farmers.

RACHEL MORRIS, of Spiceland, bed-ridden for several years, has begun to walk again. She claims that her recovery is a special answer to prayer.

MILTON STAPP VAWTER, of North Madison, has in his possession a relic of old-time journalism—a copy of the Indiana Republican, published at Madison in 1828.

A DAUGHTER of William Giles, residing in Tippecanoe township, Carroll county, while out in the woods playing, ate a number of May apples, and died of the poison.

THE oldest man in Marshall county is James Van Valkenburgh, of Plymouth, who is in his 100th year; the oldest woman is Mrs. Susan Sniggers, of West township, who is 97.

PEOPLE at Madison, who some years ago subscribed to $160,000 stock in a Chicago insurance company that has since failed, are now writhing under a liability for double the amount.

FATHER IMHOFF celebrated his 105th birthday, last week, at the residence of his son, in Richmond. He was much sprier than many of his friends twenty or twenty-five years his junior, and gives promise of living to be enumerated in the next census.

MRS. POLLY DAVIDSON still lives, at the age of 91 years, on the place where she settled, in Hendricks county, in 1828. She is the mother of fifteen children, and her descendants, so far as known, number 490. The old lady is in fair health, and can see to thread her needle without "specks."

WHAT is known to their sorrow among ruralists as the "Western Medical Association" is again rising in unfavorable mention. A Putnam county farmer was in Indianapolis, the other day, seeking relief from a $212 note given in the usual way, and now held by an "innocent purchaser."

THE surviving members of the Box family, near New Albany, supposed to have been poisoned three months ago, are slowly recovering. Paralysis of the arms still remains, though in a much-mitigated form. The case is still shrouded in profound mystery, and the real cause of the poisoning may never be developed.

ABOUT ten days ago, a son of Galen Bray, of Worthington, Greene county, stepped on a piece of glass, cutting his heel so severely it was feared he would bleed to death. Relief was obtained soon, but the wound commenced bleeding afresh, and amputation was thought necessary; but before this was begun he bled to death.

JOHNNIE HOGAN, aged 9 years, and Bennie Aldrich, aged 9 years, left their homes in Jeffersonville, a few days ago, for the purpose of going in bathing in the old mill-race at the head of the falls. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon some other boys found their clothes on the bank of the river, and the supposition is that the little fellows went out too far and got over the "step-off," as it is called, and, not being able to swim, both were drowned.

INDIANA shows an extraordinary increase in her wheat acreage, occasioned by the two successive heavy crops previous to the harvest just closed, which induced many farmers to sow wheat upon fields that years ago failed. The grain is short of weight, but the increased acreage places the product far above that of any previous year. The crop was saved in fair condition.

AN Indianapolis reporter observed an unusually brilliant meteor pass along the southern sky at 10:15, the other night, and says: "It was as large as a score of stars of the first magnitude, and its light was sufficient to cast a distinct shadow against the waning light of the moon, which it outshone two to one. It left a trail of light smoke behind it that lingered about as long as a steam cloud of the same size would have done."

HON. LUCIEN BARBOUR, whose death is announced at Indianapolis, was a native of Connecticut, having been born in 1811. He early emigrated to this State, and has been prominently identified with the State and city for many years. He was originally a Democrat. He became a Republican in 1854, and was elected to the Thirty-fourth Congress from the Indianapolis district. Previously, as a Democrat, he served as United States Attorney. His death was the result of a general giving way of natural forces.

The Census.

The population of Ohio township, Warrick county, has decreased 1,120 since 1870, which is over one-third its total number of inhabitants.

Putnam county has 408 persons over 70 years of age in a population of 22,276.

Fort Wayne has 26,048 inhabitants, an increase of 8,330 in ten years; the towns of the county have 28,516, an increase of 2,146, and the county of Allen therefore counts 54,554.

Marion county has 102,000, including Indianapolis.

It is estimated that the total population of the State is 2,400,000.

The census returns give Laporte county a population of 30,943, being a gain of 3,881 since 1870. Michigan City has 7,352, a gain of 3,457. The city of Laporte has 6,184, a loss of 397.

Decatur county has a population of 19,800, a gain of 746 in ten years. Greensburg has 3,129 of the number.

The population of Union City is 2,489, with enough late arrivals to make it even 2,500—a gain of 80 per cent. since last census. The population of Wayne township, outside of Union City, is 1,892, an increase of 111 since ten years ago.

Increased Value of Farm-Lands.

In the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture that portion devoted to the prices of farming and timbered lands contains a table showing that, in addition to the bounteous crops which the farmers of nearly all sections will gather during the present year, the average market value of their farms has increased 8 per cent. as compared with the values of one year ago. Timbered lands evince a tendency to advance in price more rapidly than cleared lands, showing that there is a growing scarcity in lands of this character. The following table gives the information in detail:

A Busy Family.

A case of assault and battery, in which farmers' sons were plaintiff and defendant respectively, was on trial in Detroit, and the plaintiff's lawyer was very anxious to make out that the defendant's family must have seen the fight which took place just outside the kitchen door.

The defendant's mother being on the stand the lawyer began:

"Where were you when the first blow was struck?"

"Down cellar skimming milk and tying cloths over my preserve jars," she replied.

"Where was your husband?"

"He was in the barn mending the harness and greasing the wagon."

"Where was your daughter Sarah?"

"Sarah was in the north bedroom changing the pillow cases on the spare bed."

"And where was Jane?"

"Jane? She had run over to a neighbor's to borrow some coffee and a nutmeg."

"Let's see! Haven't you a sister living with you?"

"Yes, sir. She was sewing carpet rags up stairs."

"Ah! she was? You have a younger son named Charles, haven't you?"

"Yes, sir, and he was salting the sheep across the road."

"Just so. You are a very busy family, I see. I suppose even the dog was very busy just at this particular moment?"

"Yes, sir, he was. Old Bose was down at the gate looking toward Detroit for one-horse lawyers!"

That closed her testimony and settled him more than a foot.

Two Pictures—Before and After Taking.

Garfield's views, before accepting the nomination of the spoils party for President, if we are to believe his own words, were not exactly what they are to-day. Read the two extracts below:

ADDRESS AT WILLIAMS COLLEGE, 1876.

Congressmen have become the dispensers, sometimes the brokers, of patronage, and civil office has become a vast corrupting power to be used in running the machine of party politics. Every man of the 102,000 feels that his only hope of staying is in toadying to those in power, so that the offices are an immense bribe, securing to the party in power an army of retainers who are the most servile of their sort in the world. Nothing less than the absolute divorce of the appointing function from Congress can remedy the evil. It should be done so completely that every member of Congress shall be able to make such boast as Thomas Hughes, M. P., did on his visit to this country—that, although he was personally on good terms with every member of the Cabinet, he could not influence the appointment of a clerk.

LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

To select wisely from our vast population those who are best fitted for the many offices to be filled requires an acquaintance far beyond the range of any one man. The Executive should, therefore, seek and receive the information and assistance of those whose knowledge of the communities in which the duties are to be performed best qualifies them to aid him in making the wisest choice.

"The Grand Old Bloody Shirt."

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat says that "One shake of the grand old bloody shirt will bring more votes to the Republican party than all that can be said for civil-service reform from now till doomsday." The Globe boomed for Gen. Grant and a bloody-shirt campaign; but the General sat down on the "shirt." He said in his Bloomington speech a few weeks ago:

> I have been gratified with my reception in the recently-rebellious States. I passed from Philadelphia to Florida on my way to Havana, and on my return came via Texas from Mexico, thus passing through all the rebellious States, and it will be agreeable to all to know that hospitality was tendered me at every city through which I passed, and accepted in nearly all of them by me. The same decorations were seen in every State that are seen here to-night. The Union flag floated over us everywhere, and the eyes of the people are as familiar with its colors as yours, and look upon it as guaranteeing to all the rights and privileges of a free people, without regard to race, color or previous condition of servitude.

THAT Ft. Wayne "people's paper" seems to be fast merging into a merely Garfield's people's paper. But why come down so on the postoffice gang? Aren't they the boys who do the work? Barring those same little polities of theirs, they are, in fact, as clever a lot of trampers—not tramps—as a good "deacon" could well be expected to get around him.

The Letters and The Man.

Two letters of General Hancock's have been published within the past week. They both show his pen to be no less effective than his sword. As the latter gleamed aloft in the onset of battle, so now, when the onset of contending hosts is to determine once more the weal or woe of the country, by settling the great civil contest now impending either in favor of the friends of purity of administration, economy in expenditure, and a spirit of fraternity and peace amongst all our people, or in favor of their adversaries, the great chieftain is found again in the lead, and with his pen, dropping words of wisest counsel in the ears of his countrymen. The letter of acceptance has been hailed with satisfaction by the democratic press throughout the entire country, and the more candid of the republican, and almost all of the independent papers, are quite unstinted in its praise. In fact it breathes so generous a spirit of devotion to the true principles of the government, and the real interests of all our people, as to challenge the admiration of every candid and patriotic man. Brief and pointed in its utterances, it yet covers the whole ground in controversy, and, showing as it does, the hand of a master, is at once a guarantee of the past and a pledge of the future.

The other letter we refer to is that of General Hancock to General Sherman. It concerns the relation of the military to the inauguration of presidents to office. The story had been going the rounds of the republican press that, during the dispute about the presidency in 1876, Hancock wrote to Sherman that he would obey orders from President Tilden after March 3, of that year, in case of the latter taking the oath of office. This has induced the publication of the letter itself. In it, to the amazement of those who have thus been instrumental in procuring its publication, General Hancock says: "The army should have nothing to do with the election or inauguration of presidents." * * * "The people elect the presidents." * * * "The congress declares in joint session who he is. We of the army have only to obey his mandates, and are protected in so doing only so far as they may be lawful." Discussing the question as to the ceremony of inauguration, he declares in favor of simplicity, and all absence of parade, and winds up with the declaration that if the services of the military "should be invoked in such exceptional times, when there existed such divergent views as to the correct result, the army will suffer from its action, if it act wrongfully." And so indeed it would have suffered—but not more intensely than are the gentlemen now suffering who have been instrumental in calling forth the publication of this truly admirable letter, Written in the confidence of the relation existing between the two great soldiers, it is only additionally illustrative of the true grandeur of character of the man.

THIS is the 38th day of Dr. Tanner's starvation, and he still lives.

UNDER the Rose, eh? That's where those awfully crushing, slangwhanging Republican editorials are written, is it? How is it, then, they are so pointless and kind o' harmless like?

ROSE oil, it seems, is what the Republican office lights up with. Better be a little careful, brethren. It smuts up badly, and then it's so thin and fluffy, you know, it's mighty dangerous.

HOPE our correspondent, "Republican," hasn't got us on the wrong scent, horticulturally speaking. We're fond of flowers, and if he has, we'll charge him a bouquet with at least one nice blushing Rose in it.

THE Ft. Wayne Gazette has now taken up the cudgels against one of the medical colleges. Goodness! If that editor's cadaver won't be minced up one of these days when that "faculty" get a chance to dig him up once!

IT is indeed amusing to note the arguments brought to bear by the republican press and speakers in their extremity. The fact is, they have no arguments that carry weight with them in the minds of candid and honest thinking people.

A LITTLE more tolerance and tact, and less talent and tongueiness next time, if you please, Messrs. Retiring Publishers of the Ft. Wayne Sentinel. It is no crime, ever since Chatham's day, to be young; but then we youngsters don't know so very much more than some of the chaps who are a little older, after all.

SOME commotion has been stirred up by the report that some members of the notorious Bender family have recently been apprehended, and that some additional horrifying revelations have been made. It will be gratifying to an incredulous public to learn to a certainty that the right parties have at last been caged.

JUDGE O'ROURKE'S speech, delivered at the meeting in Ensley hall last night, was an able discussion of the leading issues, honestly presented, in which he compared the records of the candidates of both parties and exhorted all democrats and fair-minded republicans to consider well the comparison and then make their choice.

THE Republican seems haunted with the idea that a gentleman by the name of Judge Lowry has a great dread of one of its favorite order of flabbergastic spouters. Shouldn't wonder if he does rather dislike such critters. If it wishes to convey the impression that he fears any such, however, that is too thin—in fact the thinnest kind of Rose-water.

THE Fort Wayne Sentinel, under the late control of Messrs. Nelson & Morss, has been purchased by Mr. E. A. K. Hackett, of the Bluffton Banner, who took possession and assumed control of the Sentinel last Monday. We shall expect to see an ably edited newspaper, under the new regime, and hope to get an occasional copy wherein some worthy citizen or institution isn't getting cut and slashed.

GARFIELD, accompanied by a grand body-guard, arrived in New York last evening. They were met by another squad of inflated fellows at Buffalo and conducted with the pageantry usually attendant upon royalty, to the great city. Object: to conjure up some means of stopping the stampede in favor of Hancock. This novel contrivance shows the desperation of the case. Won't work, though,—won't work.

A REPUBLICAN friend suggests that we affectionately enquire of a certain Roseate member of the bar, in this place, if he has a faint recollection of one Hiram S. Tousley. He ran against somebody once in an overwhelmingly republican circuit for the position of judge. It is suggested that the Mr. Somebody got knocked into such an awfully-shaped cocked hat that he hasn't got the kinks smoothed out yet. Gracious, what an extinguisher!

THE editor of the Republican says he would no sooner think of voting for the illustrious soldier who rendered such unsurpassed services to his country—General Hancock—than he would of shouting for Jeff. Davis. Of course he wouldn't, nor half as soon either, especially if Jeff. had made a good big haul at the credit-mobilier corruption fund, or taken in a lot of the De Golyer plunder, and understood the business of subtraction, division and silence!

OUR impulsive contemporary over the way fancies it has struck a boom, so to speak. It got hold of a speech by one Wood, addressed to Irish Americans, whom the Wooden man thought he could induce to vote the republican ticket, and then exultantly exclaims: "No, the democrats don't own the solid Irish vote." Of course they don't. The Irish are a people who know enough to own their own votes. They have a habit of giving them away frequently, too, but always to the democracy.

THE weak attempt of our 'steemed contemporary to smooth up things in reference to the declaration of Mr. Ninde, in his speech at the republican congressional convention, that he didn't blame General Hancock for carrying out the sentence of the military commission and the order of the president in reference to the execution of Mrs. Surrat, but that he ought to hang also all those who are going to vote for him, is only making the matter worse. You're only skipping out of the frying-pan to find yourselves floundering around in the fire, gentlemen. Mr. Ninde did say, substantially, those very words, and some of the best republicans there are here, and in other counties of the district, will attest the fact. We say other counties of the district, for we have heard the matter spoken of and commented upon elsewhere, as well as here. No talk about "garbling" will avail. The argument deemed so potent by some folks, namely, "you lie," is altogether too attenuated. Better face the music, for the simple reason you have got to. Just try your hand, though, at teaching some of your candidates the consistency of applauding such sentiments to the echo and then turning around and asking democrats to boost them into office by giving them their votes.

A Republican Protest.

As a republican, I desire to protest, Mr. Editor, against the publication in our midst, even in a partisan paper, of such articles as that contained in the Republican of last week, in reference to the speech of Judge Lowry at Ensley's hall. There is no sense in it. But even the stupidity of the article should not exempt it from that degree of attention necessary to insure for it merited reprehension. There is such a thing as hospitality, and gentlemen of neither party, coming to our place at the request of any of its citizens, should be subjected to be belied merely because there are those who think it smart, in the absence of capacity for respectable criticism, to play the blackguard. The undersigned was not present at the meeting, neither was any person whose name appears in the Republican as one of its editors. Discovering, therefore, the true author, the writer has had just enough curiosity to learn once more as to his truthfulness. The result is that, as is most usual, the statements of the author are just the reverse of the fact. My information is uniform to the effect that the speech in question, while of course characterized by pointed and it may be at times severe criticism of our party leaders, was, at the same time, in no way indecorous or discourteous. If Mr. Weamer will inquire of those of our reliable citizens who were present, he will learn that instead of "venom" there was good nature; instead of "mud," simply allusions to alleged historical facts; instead of charging any one with being a "perjurer," there were quotations from what the judge at least claimed to be public records; and instead of anything savoring of "profanity," simply playful quotations of certain expressions of members of our own party.

Such slang as is added in the article referred to, in the way of assumed comment, is nevertheless mere slang and cannot possibly do otherwise than simply produce a bad odor, even though it come from a Rose!

And now, Mr. Editor, while I am a friend to decency and a lover of fair play, I am still, A REPUBLICAN.

THE judicial and joint representative democratic conventions, for the purpose of nominating a prosecuting attorney and joint representative for their respective districts, as per call published elsewhere, will be held tomorrow, August 6, at Kendallville.

A Popular and Reliable Company.

As to the soundness and standing of the Ohio Farmers' Insurance Company, the Indiana Farmer has the following editorial in the issue of May 22, 1880:

"Some of the foreign insurance companies are waging a war on the Ohio Farmers' Fire Insurance Company in this state, and report all manner of things about it. We had occasion to examine its reports and papers on file in the office of the Auditor of State this week, as well as those of other companies, and we found its affairs were frankly and freely open to the world, and that its condition compares favorably with other companies. We examined them with a view of ascertaining how much truth there was in statements of other and interested companies, and we believe that the company is sound, and does business safely. The fact that for 32 years it has promptly paid all losses, and accumulated nearly a million of capital besides, is a bit of practical experience in its favor that cannot be whistled down at a breath. It seems that the cause of the war and jealously is, that this company has become very popular among the farmers of the west, and taking no city or conflagration risks, can and does issue policies for less than the rates of some other companies."

The principal office of the company above named is located at Le Roy, Medina county, Ohio. Mr. C. G. Shepard is the soliciting agent for DeKalb county, Indiana and Defiance county, Ohio. For full particulars concerning the company, address F. M. Thompson, general agent, Hicksville, O. 24-tf

A MONSTER SHOW PROCESSION.

A recent exchange thus alludes to the street parade made by the Great Forepaugh Show, which is to exhibit here on SATURDAY, AUGUST 14TH.

Adam Forepaugh's "greatest of all great shows" passed our office this morning, in processional array. We unqualifiedly pronounce the display the most elaborate, novel, extensive, and magnificent of any ever seen in this city. The cavalcade was headed by a large and most excellent band, seated in a magnificent chariot, which was drawn by fourteen thoroughbred horses, all prettily plumed; following this appeared a cavalcade of richly robed processionists, mounted upon handsome horses. The great cages containing the wonderful Hippopotamus, the six-ton Rhinoceros, the Giraffe, and the tank with sea-lions followed, and then a realistic scene, entitled the "Grand Bashaw and His Court" was presented. The great mogul appeared seated upon an elegantly caparisoned camel, followed by his servitors, sultanas, cup-bearers, etc.

10 ASIATIC AND AFRICAN ELEPHANTS Harnessed to the "Car of India," next appeared, presenting a truly Eastern spectacle of magnificence and grandeur.

Black Camels and White Dromedaries followed, and a long line of sumptuously constructed cages, containing the ornithological varieties of the menagerie.

Upon the canopied covering of a chariot that followed, stood a monster, full grown African Lion, perfectly loose, and standing by his side was to be seen a handsome and modest girl of of 16 or 18 years of age. Then came and the immense cage had French plate-glass sides and ends, which exposed to view a mass of wriggling pythons, serpents, anacondas and constrictors, and in the midst of them was seen an Egyptian or Asiatic Snake charmer, his entire body encircled with the folds of these shining monsters.

OPENED DENS OF WILD BEASTS

THE CAR OF THE SEASONS

next appeared drawn by snow white horses. Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter, were represented; and the monster sea coast mortar, from which Mons. Loyal is blown, came after drawn by a pair of horses. The gun was a formidable looking piece of artillery.

THE CAR OF FREEDOM.

illustrating religion, law, victory and peace, next appeared, followed by a monster steam orchestrion, whose thundering tones could be heard all over the city. A long line of animal cages, magnificently decorated followed, and then came the which was drawn by coal black horses. It was mounted and presented the appearance of a huge locomotive on the highway. Gilded, silvered, and elaborately painted, it constituted one of the most attractive features of this marching mile of magnificence.

The Colossal "Chariot of Olympus," adorned with representations of the Fates, Furies, Graces, Sirens, Nymphs, Gods, Heroes, and men, next appeared, followed by a line of palace-caged denizens of earth, sea and air, extending the entire length of the avenue, the whole forming one unbroken line of splendor, unparalleled in its vastness and magnificence, and viewed by the entire populace of the city.

It should be remembered that this grand parade will start between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock, on the day Forepaugh's Show is to exhibit here, and those who reside at a distance from the town should endeavor to reach here by 9 o'clock on show day, in order to see this monster street demonstration, which will be free to all.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 14TH,

The Grand Army of Dyspeptics.

Thousands are dropping into line daily. They can't tell you just how it happened, but there they are. Eating has no charms for them, and disagreeable and disgusting dreams take the place of refreshing slumber. They feel that every man's hand is turned against them, and they in turn despise and detest mankind. The great cause of all this disturbance, in most cases, is an inactive or torpid liver, and can be easily removed by a few doses of Dr. White's Dandelion Alterative. For sale at Casebeer & Matheny's drug store. 31-3w.

Over 1,500 Cases of Fits Cured!

Local and Miscellaneous

—No Inter-Ocean show.

—Austin isn't a banjoist.

—Hollister has an enormous new ice-box.

—"Gabe" Meredith, of the junction, can tell you what he knows about snakes.

—A friend of Fred. Clark's, from Detroit, made a brief visit Monday in Auburn.

—How about our proposed boulevard, the avenue to the junction? A good time this would be to pile on the gravel.

—Conductor Covert, of the Jackson, has been off duty for a week or so, owing to illness. H. O. Fitch is running extra in his place.

—Rev. H. Johnson having returned, there will be preaching next Sunday morning and evening, as usual, in the Presbyterian church.

—Patronize home trade and procure your fruit-cans of B. Goodman. He makes them himself and furnishes them at 35 cents a dozen.

—One of the neatest and prettiest little residence places in town is that of D. D. Moody, on south Main street. He bestows all his leisure moments to its improvement.

—A party of young folks will be entertained this evening, by Miss Annie Hampton and Dave, at the residence of W. J. Austin. No assurances of a good time are needed.

—Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Raut came home Monday from a short visit to Mrs. Raut's parents, at South Bend. Charlie says South Bend beats them all for business, and he has got it about right.

—"Bird" Little, of this office, will get home next week from Pennsylvania. We make this statement for the benefit of several of his young lady friends who have manifested some anxiety about him.

—If there is anything that has a tendency to make a man a trifle madder than anything else—i. e. just for a little thing—it is to spend one full minute trying to get up friction enough to light a match and then learn that it's a tooth-pick.

—W. H. Kiblinger expects to open up his mammoth new store next Monday. He has been moving all this week. Step in there, corner of Main and Seventh, some day next week, and see a handsome hardware store.

—Much of our space on the outside of this issue has been monopolized by Forepaugh's huge circus "editorial," but we have endeavored to more than make up for it by a large amount of reading matter on these two pages.

—Mrs. Ferris, of Fostoria, mother of Mrs. F. P. Copper, who has been taking a trip through Michigan, was here a day or two this week. She left yesterday for Decatur, but will return here to day, on the way to her home in Ohio.

—Tucked under the front door of our sanctum, one day last week, were discovered the cards of Misses Kittie B. Dills and Josie E. Klotz, and we take this occasion to express our regret at not being "at home" when the fair little maidens called.

—Rev. H. J. Norris has put a very neat picket fence in front of his home on Seventh street, this week, and a substantial sidewalk has been laid by Dr. Matheny, at his residence on south Main. These are the improvements we like to put on record.

—On account of the illness of Mrs. S. W. Sprott, the social which was to have been entertained last evening, at the basement of the Presbyterian church, by Mrs. J. E. Rose and Mrs. J. K. Culbertson, has been postponed until Saturday evening, August 7.

—Mrs. S. W. Sprott, who has been seriously ill for some time past, is reported as being very low this morning, and but little hope is entertained of her recovery. Much solicitude is felt by all our people, each one of whom will rejoice to learn of any convalescence.

—Miss Lizzie Tess, who has for nearly two years been a faithful employe as dining-room girl at the Swineford house, has severed her connection therewith, her parents claiming that she couldn't be spared from home. She is missed by the patrons of the Swineford.

—Joe Bender, formerly a typo in the COURIER office, and who has not been here for four years, came up from Fort Wayne yesterday. Joe wears a cane and a French waxed moustache, looking every inch a bond-holder. He has just got back from Leadville, and this accounts for it.

—I. R. Cowan, of Decatur, father of Dr. Cowan of our place, left for his home last Saturday, after a visit of three weeks, during which his eyes have been under Dr. Allyn's treatment; and he claims to have derived more benefit from the operation performed here by Dr. Allyn, than from any practitioner who has attended him for many months.

—U. E. Babb, of Hicksville, who is well known to most of our citizens as a former resident and business man of this place, was here Monday on his way home, having attended the large picnic at Pleasant Lake the day previous. Mr. Babb is now making arrangements to leave Hicksville, where he has lived ever since his residence here.

They Won't Excurt.

The Wabash railway will hereafter run no more excursion trains. The recent terrible smash-up near Antwerp, Ohio, a full account of which was given in the COURIER, has been the cause, in a great measure, of this determination by the management of that excellent road. A party at Logansport lately made application for an excursion train to Rome City, but it was refused by Sup't. Wade, the company having decided that there was too great danger attending the running of "wild" trains. All excursion parties hereafter, therefore, will be carried on regular trains.

Dave's Daisy.

The smilingest man within the incorporate limits of Auburn to-day, or perhaps within the boundaries of the entire state, is our hub-and-spoke and hardware man, Dave Snyder. He is generally good humored enough on all occasions, but for the past week, particularly, one couldn't address him on the most ordinary topic without his mouth extending from ear to ear, and once the corners came near meeting at the back of his neck. This is all due to the appearance in his household of several pounds of new girl, who came last Friday and ordered her measure taken for a new summer outfit. She got it, and all is peace and good nature around the Snyder house.

Funk's Spunk.

There are some cases of imposition on children where the older members of the family have a perfect right to "get their mad up," but in the majority of instances, as in the present one, parents are liable to be over-sensitive and get unwarrantably wrathy. Last Friday evening, while E. A. Watson's little boy was exercising a frisky colt, on south Main street, it in some way collided with Peter Funk's little son, and the latter's foot was severely injured by the colt stepping on it, the boy being barfooted. The boy got home and delivered himself of a huge bawl, claiming that the Watson boy had run over him, and Funk senior rushed over to Mr. Watson's in a violent rage, and "cussed a blue streak" for upwards of fifteen minutes, claiming that his boy was about killed and that Watson was to blame for it. Mr. Watson endeavored to reason with him, but scarcely could control his temper, and for a time there were indications of war and bloodshed. Funk finally withdrew, his boy in his arms, and swore that Watson should be prosecuted. Mr. Watson, on the other hand, feeling sympathy for the injured boy, offered to pay medicine and doctor's bill, though in justice he could not be made to pay a cent.

Impromptu, But Good.

As was announced in the COURIER of last week, the second meeting of the Hancock and English club was held in Ensley hall last night, at which the organization was continued and twenty-seven additional names were added to the already large list. Since the announcement last week, however, through the mismanagement or inactivity of those having the matter in charge, no speaker had been engaged, and it was not until after six o'clock last evening that it was known Judge O'Rourke would speak. His presence then was only due to the enterprise of some Fort Wayne citizens who exerted themselves in our behalf, and to the kindness of Judge O'Rourke in consenting to come on so short notice, in view of the urgent necessity. The meeting, nevertheless, was well attended, and Judge O'Rourke's impromptu speech was listened to attentively and appreciatively by all present. Limited time will not permit a detailed mention of it, but suffice it to say that it was a logical, kindly summing up of important facts for the campaign, and that it will be productive of much good. We hope matters will be differently arranged for the next meeting, and that no more misunderstandings may occur.

A Snake in the Grass.

This means literally, not figuratively, and it is a monster; that is, the snake is a monster, not the story, as from the statements of various reliable people the story is true and the snake is a big one. But we digress. A few days ago, while Sam. Rhodeffer was engaged in hauling some wood from a place on Dave Weaver's farm, about one mile west of Auburn, he heard a noise in the grass which startled him, and on turning around he beheld the head and neck of a monster snake, the balance of whose body was concealed by the grass. Sam. will make affidavit, however, that the serpent's neck, near the head, was as large as an ordinary man's arm, and upon averaging up the rest of the body in proportion to what he saw, Sam. felt his hair raising; so, to use an inelegant but expressive phrase, he "turned tail" and struck for the wagon. His horses, too, by that peculiar instinct with which they are aware of danger when they cannot see it, had become unmanageable, almost, and he could only with great exertion keep them from running away. This reptile is said to have been seen, at various times in the past four or five years, by parties whose testimony cannot be doubted, and each time its monstrous proportions have struck terror to their hearts. Why not organize a small army and go in search of it?

—That new little 3-horse power engine built alone by Mr. E. Berry, which was mentioned in this paper not long since, has just lately been finished and photographed. —The man with the "wonderful automatic machine" has folded his tent and fled, which statement we make with a sigh of indescribable relief—a gratefulness of heart that will be seconded by every business man within a radius of four blocks. Automatic apparatus may be nice enough in its way, but the incessant grinding of that infernal calliope (?)—with a nigger at one end—had become distracting. It was high time for him to skip, and he has skup.

—Last Saturday morning Lute Wright brought a fellow down from Angola to take care of that new trotter, and on the following Monday the sheriff of Steuben county came down and asked said youth to go back with him. He went, having got so mixed up in a harness up there somewhere that he couldn't leave without taking it along, and this was "because why" he was needed in Angola. Lute said he was here just long enough to wrap himself around several square meals and get the wrinkles taken out of his abdomen.

—The last drill, before they go to Chicago, was made by the Knights Templar at Kendallville last Monday, and those who attended from this place were: Jay Van Auken and wife, John L. Davis and wife, and F. E. Davenport AND LADY. F. E. had said he "guessed he wouldn't take any lady," but when they got to the train the lady was there, all the same, and the rest all denounced it as a "put up job." F. E. didn't come home, either, when the balance did; he had some "unfinished business" to attend to.

—Members of the Episcopal church in Auburn, or other parts of DeKalb county, are earnestly requested to send their names by postal-card to Rev. J. J. Faude, dean of the northern convocation, Plymouth, Indiana.

—John Leasure went down to St. Joe last Monday to see a man. He says he drove out in the country and back at a break-neck speed, for fear of missing the train, and then prowled around the depot like a wild beast in the desert for four solid hours, the train being about 240 minutes late.

—Samuel W. Tarney and Emma R. Galloway, of Garrett, were married Thursday evening of last week, at the residence of S. U. Tarney in this place. The knot was tied by Rev. H. J. Norris, and it is to be hoped that neither of the happy twain will ever want the courts to untie it.

—A lawn social will be given by the M. E. society at the residence of Mrs. T. C. Mays, on Wednesday evening. The band will probably be in attendance. Refreshments served at half past eight. All are respectfully invited to attend.

—Farmers of DeKalb, look here! You can save money by insuring with the Ohio Farmers' insurance company, whose agent will wait on you as soon as possible and give you the safest and cheapest insurance in the United States. J. W. Swaysgood in north half of county, for F. M. Thompson, agent. 32 2w

—The annual meeting of the "Deciples of Christ" in DeKalb county, for 1880, will be held with the church at Coburn's Corners, commencing on Friday, August 20, and continuing over the Lord's day following. A general invitation is extended for all to attend. Elder L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, and other ministers will be present.

—A neat little restaurant and farmers' eating room has been opened on Seventh street, next door to Tom Somers' saloon, where fresh, warm meals can be had for little money at any time. Good cigars, five and ten cents, also kept in stock. Farmers will do well to call and see me when wanting a good square meal or smoke.

—Now is your time to attend camp-meeting. There will be a great camp-meeting (D. V.) near the village of Nappanee, Ind., commencing to-day, August 5, and continuing eight days, held by the Free Methodist denomination. The B. & O. railroad will sell excursion tickets at two cents per mile, to accomodate those who desire to attend. Come one, come all. 32 2w.

—There will be a social at the residence of D. D. Metcalf, about five miles east of town to-morrow (Friday) evening, for the purpose of raising funds to assist in furnishing the new church which is being built at that point. A general invitation is cordially extended to those interested. Hacks will start from the Methodist parsonage in this place, at half past six in the evening.

—If any man is wrestling with the sad delusion that it requires but little labor and attention for one man to get out a newspaper the size of the COURIER each week, write up the advertisements that come in, get up a full supply of editorial and local matter, attend to a lively job work department, keep the books, read all the exchanges and give his personal attention to office matters of a miscellaneous character,—if there is any misinformed person who believes all this won't eventually steer a man into the insane asylum, that person needs undeceiving. It isn't so

Greenback Labor Conventions.

A. B. DARBY, Chairman.

There will also be held, on the same day and at the same place, conventions for the purpose of nominating a candidate for state senator, for the counties of DeKalb and Steuben; also a candidate for prosecutor for the 35th judicial circuit. Speaks for Itself.

The appended letter from Mr. Wm. Holland, of the Plymouth nursery and fruit farm, for whom J. E. Beugnot is the agent in this region, was received by the latter a day or two ago. The stock he speaks of is the same as that sold by Mr. Beugnot a year ago. Here is the letter:

PLYMOUTH, IND., July 27, 1880.

Mr. J. E. Beugnot,

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 27th, with report, is received. Stock is doing splendidly, and I have everything in fine growing condition. I have a nice lot of peaches which you can recommend in selling, for they will be nice to deliver. All the stock I have for this fall will be much larger and nicer than any I have yet had. Yours truly,

WM. HOLLAND.

The Reason.

Auburn came very near getting up a corner on circuses last week. The gentlemanly agent of the "Great Inter-Ocean" show came in last Thursday and proceeded to make arrangements for their exhibitions here on the 14th, morning, afternoon and evening; but next morning Forepaugh's agent arrived and discovered that the Inter-Ocean was arranging for the very day that his mammoth aggregation desired to exhibit here, and that wouldn't work. At noon, however, the two agents met and had an understanding. Mr. Perley, of the Inter-Ocean, telegraphed to his manager that Forepaugh desired to go from Defiance to Chicago, and Auburn was the only stand they could make on the route. Mr. Perley was intending to skip Columbia City and show here, but the manager finally concluded, in order to let Forepaugh have Auburn, to exhibit at Columbia City, and thence to Butler on the 16th. It had merely simmered down to a question of courtesy, and we are glad to know that great concerns of that character can appreciate an act of this kind.

THREE.

BY HATTIE E. D. CRESSY.

Last night when the sun was slowly
 Creeping out the kitchen door,
And the deepening shadows lengthened
 On the old unpainted floor,
Lonely sat I cogitating
 On the happy scenes of yore;
Again I seemed to see the faces
 Of the dear ones gone before,
And to hear the loving voices
 I had thought to hear no more.

Then I thought of all the changes
 Wrought within the last three years,
Till my heart was full of sadness,
 And my eyes o'erflowed with tears.
In that time three of our number
 Had been called to other spheres;
Then there came a sickening vision
 Of as many shrouds and biers,
And I felt a secret longing
 To die in spite of all my fears.

Thus sat I in silence musing
 Till the sun was out of sight,
And the purple twilight shadows
 Wrapped the earth in clouds of night.
Then it seemed there came three angels,
 Robed alike in spotless white,
And they spread their white wings o'er m
 Till the room was full of light;
But they tarried scarce a moment,
 And then took their upward flight.

But with them the light departed—
 I could not even see a ray—
And the old, familiar kitchen
 In the blackest darkness lay.
And 'twere better so than otherwise
 Until the following day,
For my feelings were all wrought up,
 And my memory in full play;
Then could I view that night again—
 Those dear old walls of gray!

So in solitude and darkness
 Crept I to my lonely bed,
Lying there in tearful silence,
 Holding commune with the dead
While their happy, shining spirits
 Hovered o'er my weary head.
Not for them, though, was I weeping,
 But for my lone self instead,
Since into joyful habitations
 Their blessed spirits had been led.

MRS. BLYSTER'S ROMANCE.

Mrs. Sims' boarding school was a high building, and it stood on a hill. My room was in its third story, and I had often sat looking out over the city from its "sightly" windows (as Peggy, the maid, called them). The hill was nearly conical in shape and terraced on two sides, my side being one of them. At the foot of the hill ran a broad, handsome street, and on a prominent corner of this street, in plain sight from my windows, stood a large, rambling old mansion, about which we girls had woven many a romance. We wondered who lived there. Ladies and gentlemen promenaded through its pleasant grounds; carriages rolled up to its wide gateway many times every day; professional-looking gentlemen went in and out of it. What could it be?

One day I found out. There was great excitement that day in Mrs. Sims' boarding school. I had been feeling ill for some days. My head ached and my tongue was dry and hot. The doctor said at last that I had the scarlet fever, and must be removed at once. "Better take her home," he said; "she isn't fairly sick yet."

"Home!" groaned Mrs. Sims; "doctor, she lives in India!"

"Good gracious!" said the doctor, and he scratched his head thoughtfully. At last he said, "I have it! Here's Dr. Dolby's hospital right down here—just the place for her." So I was wrapped up and driven to "Dr. Dolby's Hospital," which proved to be nothing other than the dear, rambling, romantic old house, which, with its wildly-overgrown but delightful shrubbery, had so long been the object of our speculations.

They put me to bed in a large, quiet room. The open fire looked wonderfully pleasant. A quaint, old-fashioned tea service, with cherubs and gillyflowers and various other incongruous designs on it in blue, sat appetizingly on the round table at my bedside. Three or four easy-chairs were mingled among the others, and in one of them, after I was nicely "tucked up" and ready to go to sleep, I beheld—yawning already, and casting wishful eyes toward her own white cot near by—my buxom nurse, Mrs. Blyster, who had been engaged expressly for me.

How fat and good-natured she looked! And how the white cot creaked when she finally sought repose!

The next morning I was worse, and for several days I tossed in delirium and pain, but by a week more the fever began to abate and Mrs. Blyster said, reassuringly:

"You hain't dead yet, miss, and what's more you hain't a goin' to be—not with Sarah Blyster to see to ye!" Then good Sarah Blyster gave me a motherly kiss on my forehead, fumbled over my already painfully tucked-in bed clothing in an attempt to express still more forcibly her affectionate zeal for my welfare, and sat down with a sort of good-natured grunt at the back window.

I closed my eyes and was just about falling asleep when I was roused by a half-suppressed sob.

"What's the matter?" I said faintly. To see happy Mrs. Blyster sobbing and in tears was too much for me.

"She's dead, miss; the woman 't lives in the little house back. They're a hevin' her funeral this blessed minute."

"A friend of yours?" I was impressed almost to tears myself by Sarah Blyster's manner.

"Law, no!" said the lady, starting up and assuming her own radiant countenance again. "And what I'm a whinin' around here and givin' you the blues for I'm sure I don't know. Cheer up, Sarah Blyster, cheer up!"

I smiled faintly and soon dropped off into the nap which Mrs. Blyster's sob had interrupted.

A day or two after Mrs. Blyster was "snivolin'," as she expressed it, again by the back window. I was stronger and better now, and asked cheerfully:

"Not another funeral, I hope, Mrs. Blyster?"

"No," said that worthy lady, still unable to attain her wonted serenity; "but there's a boy—her boy, I s'pose—a-workin' much inside, and he—and he—he's a shakin' out her clo'es and a-foldin' 'em up, and it does seem 's if some o' the fema e relatives oughter be a-helpin' of em."

Surely it did. There was considerable pathos in the way of stating it, in spite of the "female relatives," which only showed that Mrs. Blyster had mingled much in scenes of woe herself and knew how they ought to be conducted.

"I wouldn't look that way," I said, soothingly; "try the other window."

" did," said Mrs. Blyster, "but my eyes would go that way somehow—everything shows so plain from here. There was a black alpaca, as good as new. I see her out in it the very day I came here to take care of you. She took sick the very next day, I reckon, for I see her curtain was down and the doctor there, and now I think she's dead, and there's that alpaca dress a remindin' them!" And Mrs. Blyster sobbed again.

I had been sitting up for some time. "I'll lie down, now, Mrs. Blyster," I said, hoping to divert the good creature from her sorrowful reflections. And in arranging my bed and getting the cherubs and gillyflowers set in order for my tea she forgot the alpaca dress and its departed owner.

But only temporarily, for, two or three days after, sitting solemnly and almost tearfully again by the window, she began in the tone which people use when they are telling the "particulars."

"You jest orter see them, miss"—for I had utterly refused to glance in the direction of the grief-stricken house—"it's so touchin' like. He's a-siftin' the ashes now, miss. She done it that first day we come. She had on an old calliker—they give it to the woman next door afterward; and then she slicked up her kitchen and put on the alpaca and went out a-callin' or somethin'. She seemed to think a lot of her neighbors and they of her. I see they had a houseful at the funeral."

"Mercy!" I exclaimed, quite out of patience with Sarah Blyster's prying disposition. "You shouldn't be looking in at their windows, Mrs. Blyster; it isn't polite."

"Humph!" said the good soul, with some spirit, "I ain't a-lookin' in at their windows. I see it all without lookin'; can't help seein', they're so close and low like; and I've seen a sight o' trouble and death, and it ain't to me as it is to a giddy young thing like you," and with this "crusher" Mrs. Blyster went out to take my tray.

The next day the doctor sent her out to take a walk, and she came in radiant.

"I went by the front o' that little house, you know, where she died a fortnit ago. Jest as clean, you never see! Them two men must a' scrubbed the steps and front theirselves. An' such a nice rag carpet on the front-room floor, an' the clock a tickin' on the mantelshelf. My! it must be awful lonesome without her!" And Mrs. Blyster drew her face down dolefully.

Ah, la! Mrs. Blyster's heart was getting enlisted. The dear old house, if it was only a hospital, was not going to be without its romance after all.

"He goes to his shop every mornin'," said Mrs. Blyster, irrelevantly, as she brightened up the fire a day or two later.

"He? Who?" I asked, stupidly.

Mrs. Blyster started like a child caught at the cookies.

"I jest see that man over there," and she nodded in the direction of the back window. "I see him a splittin' some kin'lins an' then a goin' off to his work. I rayther guess he's a carpenter, but mebbe it's a mason, or mebbe it's a shoemaker."

"Sure enough!" I rejoined. "But what difference does it make to you, Mrs. Blyster?"

"Law!" said Mrs. Blyster, bridling; "you haven't no interest in your fellow-bein's. Now here's a poor man, as likely a man as I've seen this many a long day, gone and a-lost his wife—the dearest creetur to him prob'ly in the world." And Mrs. Blyster's voice choked up. "And you haven't no more sympathy with him than nothin' in the world."

There was an eloquence of reproach in this which quite alarmed me—though I feebly protested my innocence—and the subject was dropped.

Sunday, however, was the grand day for Mrs. Blyster's observation, for then the "inexpressive he"—it was a real trial to her that she did not know his name—was at home all day. She speculated on his name a great deal.

"There's a bearing about his mien," said that lady, with some sentiment, "that seems to sorter show he hain't got no common name; now I know he haint' got no name like Smith."

"I'm afraid we never shall know," I said, soberly; "I'm getting well very fast, Mrs. Blyster."

"Yes, you be!" said the good soul, giving me an affectionate hug. "Yes, you be; an' I'm glad enough if it do put me out of a job. But likely the doctor'll get me here again."

"Oh, yes!" I said; "but what do you think that man's name is now?"

Mrs. Blyster returned to the subject with evident alacrity.

"Likely 'tain't nothin' like Perkins?" she said, interrogatively. The Perkinses were a great family, who lived near by in a grand mansion.

"You know I haven't seen him," I said, half ashamed of drawing out the dear, old creature just for my own amusement. "Perhaps it might be Crippen." The Crippens lived further down the street, and, though not so aristocratic as the Perkinses, had claims to consideration.

"That just about suits him," said good Mrs. Blyster, with some enthusiasm. "Mr. Crippen! That sounds like him. I declare I'm ashamed of my age, but, rainy as 'tis, I could really almost put on my gums and go out. I feel so kinder anxious to git hold of his name."

I couldn't help laughing. "Mrs. Blyster," I said, "I do hope you will know some day, and if I ever find out I'll tell you."

Something in my manner quite injured her feelings.

"I s'pose you think I'm silly," she said, in a hurt way; "but, indeed, he's a very nice man."

"I know he is, dear Mrs. Blyster," I said, penitently. "And I'm every bit in earnest, and I want you to promise to make me some of that famous toast of yours to-night. Alas! I fear I shan't have much more of it"—for I was almost well. This cleared good Mrs. Blyster's face in a moment, and she hastened to set out the cherubs and gillyflowers and ran to get the toaster.

Two days later I was to go. The bills were paid and the carriage was ordered, and Sarah Blyster and I were sitting before the pleasant fire having a farewell chat, when suddenly in burst one of the maids.

"Mrs. Blyster," she said, in an agitated voice, "the doctor wants you right away. There's a carpenter lives back here on the little back street, and he's fell off a roof. Oh! it's awful. I saw him, and mebbe he'll get well, an' mebbe he won't."

Mrs. Blyster's rosy face grew perceptibly paler and her comfortable hand felt cold as it touched mine.

"It's him, miss. Mr. Crip——" she checked herself, "but likely that ain't his name. And, miss, I do believe there's a Providence in it, and here I'm a-goin' to find out his name without havin' to put on my gums at all; but, mercy!" for she had suddenly realized that this was no time to ruminate, "I hope he ain't a-goin' to die. He ain't if good nursin' 'll a-save him! Good-by, miss—yes, I'll call up to Simses sometimes. Bless your heart," and Mrs. Blyster was gone.

So I went back again to school. The fever had not spread, and everything was as quiet and stupid as ever. Sometimes letters came, and I spent the vacation with my mother's friends in a distant place. I forgot almost that I had ever had the scarlet fever, or had been under the care of good, efficient Mrs. Blyster. The fall term began, and Thanksgiving was close upon us when Peggy entered my room one day and handed me a card upon which was printed, "Mrs. Sarah Blyster."

Then it all came back to me, and I rushed into the reception room to give the good creature a loving embrace—which quite upset her, and made her wipe her kindly, susceptible eyes—and to ask, the first thing, "How's the carpenter that was hurt?"

"Mrs. Blyster blushed violently, and said with a simper:

"You hain't a-forgot, sure's I live."

"Of course I haven't," I said, warmly. "I take a great deal of interest in my fellow-beings, in spite of your thinking I don't. How is he?"

"Law, miss, he wan't hurt so awful bad; still," raising her eyebrows and looking serious, "he was pretty sick for a while, and he broke a leetle bone in his foot, which makes him rather lame."

"But what's his name?" I interrupted, impatiently.

"That's it," said Mrs. Blyster, impressively. "Wasn't it strange enough you should a-said Crippen? I knew 'twan't no common name, and it ain't. It's Crimpton; now don't that sound mostly like Crippen?"

"It does, indeed," I said, trying to look as amazed as I felt that I ought to. "But how did you get along?"

"Oh!" blushing again, "we got along first-rate, and that's what I come to tell you. We—that is—well, miss—I declare," and good Mrs. Blyster looked like a 15-year-old girl with her first beau, "I come a-expectin' to ask you if you would do us the honor, you havin' a-known all the circumstances from the start, to—to—"

"To what?" I cried, as interested as Mrs. Blyster herself.

"Well, if you must know—it's a pleasant room, you know, with the rag-carpet and clock a-tickin', and we're goin' to be married there Thanksgivin' day. 'Tain't been a year yet, but he needs me, bein' lame, you know—and mebbe you'll come to the weddin'."

You may be sure that I went.

A Disastrous Lemonade.

A gentleman in full dress—broadcloth coat, white gloves—bolted into a drug store precipitately recently.

"Can you fix me, right off," he panted, "a preparation of castor-oil that can be taken without anyone ever detecting the odor, or even suspecting that it's a medicine, and yet that will—you know, one that'll——"

"I should say I could," said the druggist.

In five minutes the apothecary came out with a glass of pleasant looking liquid in his hand.

"Monsieur," he said, with a smile, "while you are waiting, permit me to offer you a glass of lemonade."

"Certainly, but hurry, please."

The customer drank the beverage hastily. Several minutes passed, when he growled impatiently,

"Come, come, where is that preparation?"

"Monsieur," said the apothecary, "I am happy to observe that I have exactly met your desire. That preparation you have just taken, without the slightest suspicion of its character—"

"Beast, villian! Ah—h! It wasn't for myself that I wanted it! I'm to be married in an hour, and it was for my prospective mother-in-law, who has just been taken ill."

Getting on the Police.

"Well, my man," said a philanthropist to a hardened-looking chap confined in the New Orleans parish prison, "what are you in for?"

"In for thirty days, I reckon," said the prisoner, sullenly.

"No, not that. What offense did you commit?"

"Didn't commit anything. The Judge committed me."

"Well, you must have been accused of some crime?"

"Oh, yes; I was accused of trying to get on the police."

"Nonsense. Trying to get on the police is no crime. I have myself recommended many worthy men for positions on the police force, and have helped to get them on."

"It is a fact. That was all I was sent here for. You see, there were two of us, and we both tried to get on the same policeman. We had him down, but some of the other peelers thought we were crowding the man too hard, and—"

"That will do, sir," said the philanthropist. "I understand your case perfectly. Here are a few pamphlets for the improvement of your mind, which just now appears to be a little warped."

Big Trees of the West.

Case's "Botanical Index" gives the following record of some large trees growing in Indiana: Chestnut.—In Jackson county there are to be found the largest chestnut trees in the State. They are veritable giants, located about three miles southeast of Seymour. One of these measures 22 feet in circumference two feet above the ground, and the height to the first limb 70 feet. Sassafras.—This tree attains a remarkable size on the Lower Wabash. One of these, one mile and a half west of Springfield, is fully 3 feet in diameter, and is for more than 60 feet clear of limbs and knots. Its height is fully 85 feet. Catalpa.—In this same region and along the Wabash the catalpa grows slender and tall, and in great abundance. It is used for both fence rails and posts, and for durability stands next to the black locust. Sycamore.—The giant tree of Indiana, in all probability, is a sycamore in the White river bottom, not far from Worthington. It is said to be 48 feet in circumference, and has a solid trunk. At a height of 25 feet it branches into three or four limbs, one of which must be more than 5 feet in diameter. The tree is not quite round, but still it is quite regular.—Scientific American.

The Horse's Frog.

If we were to go to many a blacksmith and ask him if he did not think nature had made a mistake in putting the clumsy frog into the horse's foot he would hardly be ready to say yes, and very likely would put on a surprised look, and perhaps explain that in some countries horses did very well without shoes, and so the frog was left to care for itself. But while not ready to take ground with you in any criticism of the plan upon which the foot is constructed, you have but to look in the corner of the shop where two horses stand newly shod; lift up their feet and observe for yourself that, if the smith has not said it, the knife has said the frog is a bad thing, and must be cut away. The horses do not stand on the ground, but nearly half an inch higher, on the iron of their shoes, and which takes the weight of the horse on the outer shell of the hoof. The practice is as sensible as it would be for a man who had to travel on all-fours, taking the weight on the nails of his fingers and toes rather than on the cushion which lies behind them. It is always the soft part—the india rubber part of the feet of animals that have such—which receives the weight, and not the heelly, hard part. We know what an elephant's foot is; it is all rubber like. The horse has the same incased in a shell, which gives him accuracy and steadiness of movement. Now, this casing protects the frog. It grows slowly, the frog grows rapidly. The healthy foot of the colt shows a center, if not projecting, at least level with the line of the hoof. He does not take his weight wholly on the rim of his feet. Old horses would have feet more like them if blacksmiths would allow they knew a little less than nature, and really knew enough to read her intentions.

The object in shoeing the animal, aside from the occasional one of changing its gait, is simply to prevent the wear and shattering of the outer shell, and to enable it to take a firmer hold of the ground, escaping the slipping of the unshod horn. It is an unfortunate incident of our system of shoeing that the horse is raised from the ground as a boy is when he mounts stilts.—Farm and Fireside.

Davy Crockett in Camden, N. J.

The venerable President Gill, of the National State Bank, tells this anecdote of the eccentric individual whose name heads this article. It is remembered of Col. Crockett that he was very skillful in the use of the rifle, and that he won much of his fame by the dexterous use of that firearm. About the year 1831 or 1832 the Colonel visited Camden for the purpose of giving an exhibition of his skill in rifle shooting to a few of his friends, as well as to astonish the natives by some crack shots. The ground selected for rifle practice was that near where the county Court House now stands, and in full view of the then Camden and Amboy railroad. During the progress of the shooting, the first locomotive on the road, with which the engineers were experimenting, passed along, and when the sight of it broke upon Col. Crockett's vision he irreverently exclaimed, "Hell in harness," and for a moment gazed in astonishment at the moving wonder. Wherever he appeared Col. Crockett was lionized, but he found it impossible to withstand the growing popularity of Gen. Jackson, and going to Texas he cast his fortunes with that State, in its contest against Mexico, and was murdered by the Mexicans after he had surrendered with six survivors of the attack upon Fort Alamo.—West Jersey Press.

Piute Trout Fishers.

The Twin lakes are at present quite a resort for Piutes, who go there for the purpose of fishing for trout. A company of them will sit on the bank, and while the brave buck bobs for the speckled beauties the faithful squaw is in the immediate vicinity sewing on a piece of calico or waiting on the fishermen. The favorite bait is ant eggs, and after a nest has been ransacked of its contents the fun begins. The supply on hand is placed in the mouth and used when required. The moisture toughens the bait and makes it more suitable for use. If the buck happens to be particularly lazy the squaw is used to hold the bait and deals it out as often as called upon. Sometimes the native sons of the forest will haul in several dozen trout during the day, while on other occasions the result is not so encouraging. —Bodie (Cal.) News.

Johnny's Essay on Dogs.

Last summer our dog Towser was a-lyin' in the sun trine to sleep, but the flies was that bad that he culdn't, cos he had to catch 'em, and bime by a bee lit on his head, and was woking about like the dog was hisn. Towser he held his head still, and when the bee was close to his nose Towser winked at him like he sed you see what this buffer is doin'; he thinks I'm a lily of the valley which isn't opened yet; but you just wait till I blossom and you will see some fun, and sure enuf Towser opened his mouth very slow, so as not to fritten the bee, and the bee went into Towser's mouth. Then Towser he shet his eyes, and his mouth, too, and had begun to make a peaceful smile, wen the bee stung him, and you never see a lily of the valley ack so in your life.

English Justice.

A lad was recently sent to the work-house in Cambridge, England, for picking a rose and a spray of geranium. The Mayor and Aldermen considered it an offense to be punished by three months of hard labor.

Wife-beating is one of the cheapest luxuries in England. A brutal fellow in Exeter, who severely thrashed his wife with a bellows because she had not got his breakfast ready, was recently sentenced to pay a fine 5 of shillings.

Seventy-eight millions of lead pencils were used up in this country last year. All but one million were worn out by the idiots who left their names in railroad depots, church belfries and city hall towers.

Other Long Fasts.

Dr. W. W. L. Phillips, of Trenton, N. J., who was the physician in the State prison in that city in 1874, is authority for the averment that in that year John Parvianes, a native of Finland and then a convict, 33 years of age, fasted for forty days. Reading the scriptural accounts of our Savior's fast of forty days, and of the fasting of Moses and Elijah, invited Parvianes to his fast. Dr. Phillips watched the prisoner throughout the period, and at the expiration of thirty-nine days was satisfied that no nutriment, except what there is in ice and water, was taken. The attendants offered the prisoner food every day, but he persistently refused to take it. After the fast he was deranged, and now he is an inmate of the New Jersey asylum for the insane. During his fast he had perfect quiet and all the fresh air a man may have in a prison. At the end of forty days he called for boiled salmon, a boiled egg and a drink of whisky, which he ate and drank with a relish. While he was fasting Dr. Phillips tempted him with the choicest delicacies that could be found, but he would take nothing. The prisoner said that he had previously fasted for twenty-eight days at a time. He talked rationally until toward the end of his fast, when he was reduced almost to a skeleton.

When the Rev. Jabez S. Swan, well known in Connecticut as "Elder Swan," a revivalist of great power, was conducting a revival in Mystic, Mr. Calvin Morgan, of Poquonnoc Bridge, was converted. Moved to manifest his unspeakable faith, he determined to fast forty days and forty nights, and he says that he did so, taking nothing into his mouth save a little salt and water. He is now hale and hearty at 78 years of age. To a correspondent of the Herald he said: "I entered upon the task determined, with the help of God, to perform it. I was then a robust and ruddy-faced young man, and after completing my fast was so weak, haggard and emaciated that I had to be moved on sheets for several weeks. I don't want to go through it again. I think Dr. Tanner could hold out if he had true faith in God to support him." Mr. Morgan's neighbors speak of him as a rigidly-truthful man.

"A. J. R." writes to the Herald that he was one of five persons who watched a man who fasted for seven weeks in London, England, last year. The man lost his craving for food about the seventh day, and on the tenth he no longer demanded water. He took a wet-towel bath every morning and evening, but felt weaker for it, and then, fancying that his famishing system greedily absorbed too much water through the pores while he was bathing, he simply rubbed himself with a dry towel, and felt much better. He took long walks every day, and attended to his daily business in the board meetings at Charing Cross throughout the fast. No one but his watchers there suspected him of fasting. At the end he had lost about a third his usual weight, which was 150 pounds. At the close of the seven weeks he ate a table-spoonful of honey and a hot crossbun and drank a small glass of orange wine and a cupful of fresh milk; but his stomach rejected it all. Then he slept for a night, and on the next day he drank a little milk and ate slowly of a soft-boiled egg with some crumbs of bread. Thenceforward he gradually resumed his ordinary mode of living.

Dr. Joseph L. Bodine says that in 1869, when he was the physician in the Trenton prison, one Yard, a prisoner, fasted for twenty-nine days. He had been committed to a dungeon, and when the attendants gave him bread and water he would eat nothing.—New York Herald.

A Wonderful Place.

The city of Chicago is a wonderful place. There is always the same rush of people in its streets, the same signs of an immense business in its stores, and the same throng in the corridors of its hotels. The only change is that the crowd seems to be greater each time. When I arrived at the Palmer I thought surely something out of the usual way must be going on, so vast was the crowd rushing through its wide halls and magnificent rotunda. But I learned it was the usual state of things. New York certainly does more business and is larger than Chicago, and yet, even to one accustomed to the life of New York, this city seems to surpass New York in activity. In fact, the intense life here seems almost overpowering. Walk out from the Palmer House, up State street to the river, then down Lake street, past Dearborn to Clark street, then down Clark street to Monroe, and so back to the Palmer, stopping to look in at the Tremont, Sherman and Grand Pacific Hotels, and, even if you are accustomed to Broadway, you will be astonished. Such wide avenues—not empty as wide avenues generally are, but filled with the cars, 'buses, drays, hacks and carriages of a mighty traffic; such lofty, elegant stores; such splendid hotels, and, above all, such constant streams of people. Even the horse-cars go fast here; the hack-horses, even, have learned the art of motion, while the stages dash through the streets on their way to the hotels or railroad stations with the speed of a New York fire engine.—Chicago Cor. New York Evening Post.

Sinking the Shop.

When the English take a vacation they sink the shop. An Englishman traveling in Switzerland met a French lady with her daughter. They made up a party and did the lakes together. The young lady was suddenly attacked with the toothache, and the party traveled twelve miles to find a dentist, who applied a little laudanum. Subsequently it was ascertained that the Englishman was a dentist. When asked why he had not relieved the fair patient, he dryly replied, "I am on a vacation. I haven't practiced for six weeks."

At the Expense of the Bar.

President Seguier never spared the lawyers in his court, and some of his remarks concerning them were quite in the savage vein of Czar Peter. When the docket was being called one day one case was named where neither advocate was present. "Go on with the case," said the President gleefully; "now we have a chance of getting at the truth!"

DO YOUR DUTY.

BY MAC CRAIG.

Go along and do your duty,
 No matter what that duty is;
Put your trust in God the Father,
 For all you call your own is His.

Go along and do your duty,
 Never falter, never fear;
God will help you, only trust Him,
 He is always, always near.

Always near to help and bless you,
 Strengthen you to do the right;
Look to Him when cares distress you,
 He will make your burden light.

Oh, He is so good and faithful!
 You can find no earthly friend as true
If you'll only do your duty,
 He will never turn from you.

Go along and do your duty,
 That is all God asks of you;
Do it with a gentle patience,
 Keep your heart and conscience.

Keep the great commandments strictly,
 Trust Him with a strong, true trust,
And you will find His mercy boundless,
 You will find Him always just.

Trust Him when life's sky is darkest,
 When Hope's star is hid from sight;
He can change the gloom to brightness,
 Turn to day the darkest night.

EVERYBODY SING.

A List of Prominent Republicans Who Have Bade Farewell to the Bloody Shirt and Rallied Round the Hancock Flag—Hurrah, Boys, Hurrah.

[From the Rochester (N. Y.) Union and Advertiser.]

The Pittsburgh Volksblatt, heretofore strongly Republican, has deserted Garfield and run up the Hancock flag.

Peter Wilson, a prominent Republican lawyer, heads the call for a Hancock club at Streator, Ill.

Hon. Horatio King, ex-Postmaster General, supported Hayes in 1876, and will take the stump for Hancock in 1880.

Hon. George R. Wendling, of St. Louis, once a leading Republican Congressman, has declared against Garfield and will take the stump for Hancock and English. He will be remembered as the gentleman who replied to Bob Ingersoll's lecture.

The Hon. S. W. Moulton, a former Republican and member of Congress from Illinois, and Judge Moeser, Republican County Judge, astonished the Republicans of Shelbyville, Ill., last week by openly declaring for Hancock and English.

Lewis Lovelace, a prominent Republican of Pike county, Ind., and formerly a candidate of his party for Congress, has renounced his connection with the Republican organization, and is out for Hancock and English.

Edward Butler, ex-stalwart editor of the New Haven (Ct.) Palladium, has declared for Hancock.

Col. John A. Wimpy, heretofore a prominent Republican in Georgia, has announced his intention to vote for Hancock.

Mr. Childs, of the Philadelphia Ledger, is another Grant man who has all the symptoms of being for Hancock.

Hinton Rowan Helper, author of the "Impending Crisis," has written a letter in which he announces himself in favor of Hancock and English.

Don H. Powers, a prominent Republican of Eastern Maine, a well-known member of the Penobscot bar, and brother of ex-Congressman Lew Powers, has joined a Plaisted club at Newport, and will do all in his power to elect Gen. Plaisted and the Union ticket. Five other Republicans of Newport have joined the same club.

Hon. N. C. Towle, for several years Recorder of the District of Columbia, by appointment of President Lincoln, and for nearly a dozen years officially connected with the Government service, has addressed the following open letter to the Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency:

BROOKLINE, Mass., July 18.

Hon. William H. English.

MY DEAR SIR: I congratulate you and the country upon the result of the meeting of the Democratic National Convention at Cincinnati. It has submitted to the American people a ticket characterized by great ability and sound constitutional principles. But this is not all—it is a clean ticket. The names borne upon the ticket are not only illustrious by their deeds of heroism and statesmanship, but they are unstained and undimmed by even the suspicion of acts of a questionable character. The supporters of this ticket have no use for lawyers or politicians; they have no indictments to defend and no mysticisms to clear up. Here is no taint of Credit Mobilier to be deodorized, and no spoils of the Tweed or Shepherd rings to be accounted for. The people want a clean, pure, constitutional administration of the General Government, firmly maintaining its dignity and authority, and respecting the rights "reserved to the States and people," and the people see in this ticket a reasonable guarantee for such an administration, and, if I am not mistaken, will elect it by such a majority as will render the counting of the vote no difficult task.

I trust to what I hope is still remembered as a friendly acquaintance of thirty years ago, and my personal interest in observing your long and brilliant Congressional career, as my apology for the mode I have adopted in offering you my sincere congratulations. I have the honor to be very truly yours, N. C. TOWLE.

Capt. M. M. C. Griffin and Capt. A. J. Forgraves are numbered among the converted Republican members of the Hancock and English Club at Council Bluffs, Iowa. They can hardly expect to carry Iowa, but evidently they desire to record their preference on the right side.

A correspondent writing from Standish, Mich., says: "The President of our Hancock and English Club is Mr. M. McCormick, who has voted the Republican ticket for twenty-seven years, but is through with that party now. Our Vice President, Mr. Oliver T. Rugg, is a veteran of 82 years, the oldest citizen in Standish, and a man who has always heretofore opposed the Democratic party. We have on our list the names of six other working members who have been Republicans up to this time. We are all enthusiastic for Hancock and English—in some respects the best ticket the party has presented since the days of Jackson."

Col. Williamson, of Shreveport, La., declines the Republican nomination for Congress, and announces his determination to support Hancock.

Hon. Patrick Jones, Postmaster of New York city under Grant, and a lifelong Republican, has declared for Hancock and English.

One solitary case has been discovered of some solitary personage out in Wisconsin who claims to have been a Democrat, but intends to vote for Garfield. We mention the fact for what little consolation it may afford the friends of the Credit Mobilier candidate.

A PROMINENT MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN FOR HANCOCK.

[From the New York Sun.]

Gen. Patrick H. Jones has received the following letter:

JACKSON, Mich., July 14, 1880.

MY DEAR GENERAL: The following appeared in the Chicago Times of yesterday:

"Among the accessions to Hancock the Democrats count Gen. Patrick H. Jones, at one time Postmaster of New York."

Shake! Yours truly, E. W. BARBER.

Gen. Barber succeeded Gen. W. H. Terrell as Third Assistant Postmaster General under Gen. Grant. He was the stanch friend of Zach Chandler. It was at Chandler's request that he was appointed to the Postal Department.

NEW YORK REPUBLICANS DESERTING GARFIELD.

[New York Telegram to Chicago Times.]

The State Committee met to-day at the St. James Hotel. There was a large gathering of prominent Democrats, who, of course, reported universal enthusiasm over the results of the convention. In all parts of the State Hancock and English clubs are organizing, and in some of the counties every town and ward has its club already. It was stated that many Republicans have enrolled themselves in these organizations. In one Hancock club in the interior of the State forty-five former Republicans have signed the roll.

In Western New York, the stronghold of Republicanism, young Republicans in great numbers have announced their of intention voting for Hancock, among them Col. E. G. Marshall, formerly of the regular army, and Gen. Quinby Grant.

PENNSYLVANIA FOR HANCOCK.

The Old Republican Ship Lurching and the Sea Black with Departing Rats.

[Letter from Philadelphia.]

The Democracy of this State is in better heart than it has been since 1856. The Harrisburg Convention settled all divisions in the party, and the Cincinnati nominations have filled it with enthusiasm. Hunt where you will, you cannot find a sorehead or a croaker. There is not a Democrat in Pennsylvania who does not believe that Hancock will be elected, and scarcely one who does not believe he will carry his own State. They say: "The last Democratic President was a Pennsylvanian nominated at Cincinnati, and so will the next one be."

There are in this State 80,000 soldiers who served under Gen. Hancock or with him. The people, without regard to party, are grateful to him, not only for his splendid services to the Union on distant fields, but for the immediate preservation of their homes and firesides at Gettysburg. There is no name that would have stirred Pennsylvania feeling to a greater depth than Hancock's, and it is exactly true that his nomination was received in every city, town and village with a general outburst of applause. He will poll the full party vote, a large independent and Republican vote, and pretty much the whole soldier vote. Under these circumstances the talk of carrying Pennsylvania is anything but wild. Hoyt is a minority Governor. The majority against him on the combined vote of the opposition was about 60,000. The Riot bill, the pardon of Kemble and the other bribers, and other measures of a most disgraceful administration have seriously disgusted and disheartened the Republicans. These scandals afford local issues which will materially aid the Democratic electoral ticket.

On the other hand, the Republican party here is in the worst condition since it was born. In order to carry through the third-term scheme, Mr. Don Cameron and the machine managers committed a series of outrages upon the rank and file that cannot be forgotten. They failed, and in their failure the machine was smashed, its power dissipated, and the old and experienced leaders buried in the rubbish. Mr. Cameron has disappeared. He is heard of only through a dismal groan from the White Sulphur springs, or somewhere else far beyond the scene of conflict. His father, the old General, has covered his head and turned his face to the wall. None of the ancient set, who have held the State for years by their energy, their money, and their thoroughly-organized system, will turn a hand for the election of Garfield. Why should they? They have had enough of Hayes and his kind, and they know that the high-handed means by which they undertook to force Grant on the party can never be forgiven. What can they expect from Blaine, and Sherman, and Garfield, or from the Republican people, who were compelled to imperil the very existence of the party—to fight them to the verge of disruption—in order to be rid of their audacious tyranny? They will regard Garfield's defeat as their vindication, and they look forward to that event in November as confidently, if not as hopefully, as the Democrats.

There have never been so many changes reported at this stage in any campaign. In many places we hear of Hancock and English clubs composed exclusively of Republicans. Some of the deserters are men of national reputation—among them E. Joy Morris and Col. John W. Forney, who have already thrown themselves unreservedly into the canvass. The old Republican ship is lurching and sinking in full view, and the sea is black with departing rats. The flight of some of these—old and sagacious fellows—is, in the eyes of Pennsylvanians, a sure sign of the coming victory.

That $5,000 Brief.

Gen. Garfield admits the receipt of $5,000 from De Golyer & McClelland, through Dick Parsons, but he indignantly denies that it was a bribe. Why was he paid so much, for it was a large fee to the best of lawyers for the hardest of work? Chittenden was interested with De Golyer & McClelland in the paving contract obtained for them by Garfield, but was never able to make good that interest because, while admitting his service, the firm formally pleaded that, the contract having been obtained by a bribe, it was contrary to public morals. This Chittenden avows that the amount was paid, not for the services of Lawyer Garfield, neither for those of Congressman Garfield, except in so far as he was Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Garfield says it was for downright hard work, he having examined some forty different kinds of pavement and made a written brief showing the value of the "ironizing" process above all others. The Nation, without seeing the brief, thinks the work upon it worth the fee. But where is the brief? How long was it? How lucid and convincing? The document is not filed among the records of the District of Columbia. It does not seem to be in existence. It was never read to the board of the District, and never filed for reading. Unless there was some labor upon this brief the fee was obviously for the purchase of the Congressman's influence, for a mere statement to Shepherd was not a professional service worth $5,000. Garfield claimed that he wrote the brief. But what became of it? Was it written merely for the purpose of formal labor for a fee? Cross-questioned before the committee on the real-estate pool, by Mr. Nickerson, who owned the ironizing process, Gen. Garfield was asked: "Did you file with the Board of Public Works of this District a brief or opinion, written, printed, or other, upon the subject of the De Golyer pavement?" Mr. Garfield's answer was: "I could not say I did." "Did you at any time appear before the board and make any argument whatever?" was another query, and the answer of Mr. Garfield was: "I do not remember that I did; but I did speak to Gov. Shepherd on the subject, giving my opinion in its favor." That was all, and, as events proved, it was worth to Garfield's employers all they paid him. If that brief is in existence, why not print it now? It would be an interesting addition to the literature of the campaign.—Chicago Times.

GARFIELD AND PATTERSON.

[From the New York Sun.]

Senator Patterson came out of the Credit Mobilier investigation of 1873 in about the same condition as Schuyler Colfax and James A. Garfield. The people's belief in his personal integrity was gone, the respect of honest citizens was lost, the Republican press unhesitatingly declared its opinion of his guilt and shame.

Convicted upon very nearly the same testimony that convicted Mr. Garfield, Senator Patterson sank out of sight. So completely out of sight did he sink that it may be necessary now, in resurrecting his name for a moment, to distinguish him from the carpet-bag Senator of the same name who once boasted that there were "two years more good stealing in South Carolina." The Credit Mobilier Patterson was from New Hampshire. He had nothing in common with the South Carolina Patterson, except a willingness to profit by dishonest use of his position as legislator. Patterson, of New Hampshire, was a well-educated man of easy manners. By many people in New England, especially by certain members of the faculties of New England colleges, he was held to be the finest type of the "scholar in politics," a being much prayed for about that time. He was a polished orator, and went from college town to college town instructing young men as to the higher possibilities of public life and the purer methods of effecting the objects of government. No prominent man of that day could deliver a noble sentiment in more elegant language than James W. Patterson, of New Hampshire.

Oakes Ames' memorandum book and the corroborative testimony ruined Patterson. He had been assigned thirty shares of the corruption stock, which he "bought" at par when it was worth 300, 400, or 500 cents on the dollar. He received two large dividends on the same, one of $1,800 and one of $2,223, on a cash investment of $3,000, and within a few months. When the investigation began, he went upon the stand and swore: "I never received, directly or indirectly, nor did any one ever hold for me in trust, one penny's worth of stock in the Credit Mobilier." Later, he declared: "I never did receive—and I say it under the most solemn oath—one share of Credit Mobilier stock in my life." Then Oakes Ames produced the following receipt, signed by Patterson himself:

WASHINGTON, June 22, 1868.

Received of Oakes Ames $1,800 on account of dividend received by him as trustee on stock held for my account. J. W. PATTERSON.

And also this receipt:

BOSTON, May 6, 1871.

Received of Oakes Ames 200 shares of Union Pacific railroad stock, $757.24 in cash on account of Credit Mobilier stock, and there are still due on the transaction thirty shares of stock in the Credit Mobilier of America, and 2,000 in the income bonds of the Union Pacific railroad. J. W. PATTERSON.

More than this. The certificates of the very stock which Patterson swore he had never owned were found, indorsed to him by Oakes Ames, in the safe of a New York banker, where they had been deposited by Patterson. And the check for $1,800 on the Sergeant-at-Arms was produced, bearing Patterson's indorsement.

Patterson invested in Credit Mobilier a sum of cash besides his influence as a Senator; and he received large returns for his dishonor. Garfield invested nothing but his smaller influence as Congressman, and got smaller pay for precisely the same degree of dishonor.

But the parallel between the cases of Patterson and Garfield extends beyond the bribe-taking and the perjury. Both of them, after the exposure, attempted to induce Oakes Ames to swear falsely in order to shield them. Garfield went to Ames and besought him to let the $329 dividend "go as a loan." Patterson wrote a piteous letter to Ames, under his own signature, saying: "Don't fail to correct your original statement before the committee. It must not be reported as it now stands." This was after Oakes Ames had testified to Patterson's ownership of the stock, but before the documentary evidence had been produced.

Less than two weeks ago, at a Garfield ratification meeting in Lebanon, New Hampshire, the forgotten James W. Patterson spoke for forty minutes in behalf of the Republican nominee. To Schuyler Colfax's certificate of Garfield's good character, Patterson added his equally valuable testimony. Unfortunately, there was no stenographer present to take down Patterson's exact words. From the Kearsarge Sentinel of June 26 we derive this abstract of his remarks:

> He gave his reasons for his choice of Gen. Garfield in preference to the other candidates. Being acquainted with the General, he spoke of him in high terms as a pure man and Christian statesman. Toward the close of the Senator's speech, he referred to the Credit Mobilier—how men had been injured by the press, by correspondents at Washington, who would write a man up or down for $5; that not one in a hundred that talked of Credit Mobilier knew even the meaning of the word; and before closing remarked that if anyone wanted to discuss Credit Mobilier he would be ready for them.

Since the Republican party saw fit to invite another public verdict upon the Credit Mobilier business, by putting up a Credit Mobilier ticket, the full ticket should have been Garfield and Colfax, or Garfield and Patterson. As neither Colfax nor Patterson is the Republican candidate for Vice President, both of them are free to take the stump in order to "discuss Credit Mobilier," and to defend Garfield's reputation.

A Promising Campaign Lie Nailed.

We clip the following from the New York World:

> The following message received by cable from Judge Black, in London, in reply to a message from this office, makes a peremptory end of one of the most interesting inventions of the campaign press, and disembowels, at one blow, we know not how many stalwart leading articles of great pith and moment:
>
> To the Editor of the World, New York:
>
> I am not the author of Gen. Hancock's letters or orders concerning Louisiana. I knew nothing of them until they were printed. J. S. BLACK.

THE OUTLOOK IN INDIANA

Unbounded Enthusiasm for Hancock—No Doubt of a Rousing Victory in October.

[New York Cor. Chicago Times.]

The prominent Democrats from Indiana now in the city claim that the State will give a handsome majority for Landers in October. Mr. English himself speaks with the utmost confidence of the result. Senator McDonald is no less sanguine. Speaking of the Cincinnati nomination, Senator McDonald said this evening: "The Democratic ticket is as acceptable to the Democracy of Indiana as any that could have been selected, except, of course, that the nomination of Mr. Hendricks for the first place on the ticket would have called out a larger vote in the State, in which he is personally and politically so popular; but the ticket as named by the Cincinnati Convention will receive every Democratic vote in the State, and will have a majority of not less than 5,000, and perhaps 12,000. Since the adjournment of the Cincinnati Convention I have visited one-third of the counties in the State, and have not found a single dissatisfied Democrat, while in no county that I have visited have I failed to hear of Republicans who intend to vote for Hancock and English. No ticket within my knowledge has met with a more sincere and enthusiastic indorsement from the Democratic masses. There is entire harmony and union between the leaders of the Democratic party in Indiana in support of the ticket. Mr. English's nomination will add greatly to the strength of the ticket in his State. In his business relations I have never heard Mr. English accused of unjust dealing. On the other hand, I have personally known of instances that exhibited the greatest consideration. In his dealings shrewd, careful, and a thorough business man, he has made a handsome fortune, but he is by no means a hard or exacting creditor. He has warm friends, and many of them. As to the colonization of negroes last winter, the Republican party will lose more white votes by that scheme than they will gain colored votes by it. As to the reported intention of the Republican party to put a large sum of money into the State in October, I may say that Indiana is a State in which money cannot be illegitimately employed in a canvass with any great success, and the Republicans, in counting upon its use more than upon any one thing, in their hope of carrying the election next October, will be disappointed. The Democratic organization will be as perfect as it can be made. Mr. English is Chairman of the State Central Committee, having been selected before the meeting of the Cincinnati Convention, and Gov. Hendricks and Mr. Landers are members of the Executive Committee. Mr. Voorhees gives the ticket his cordial and hearty support. Gen. Hancock has for years been a personal friend, and he took an active part in securing the nomination of Mr. English at Cincinnati."

Bright Prospects.

Col. Len A. Harris, one of the best-known Democratic leaders in the country, returned this evening from New York and the East, and to-night fell into the hands of the interviewer. Col. Harris a few months ago lost one eye, but with the remaining one he succeeded in getting a pretty fair view of Eastern politics. He went East to sound the political sea, and he flatters himself that he is well loaded with useful information. After spending a few days in New York, the Colonel went to Boston, where he was joined by Gen. Butler, and the two made a pilgrimage up into Maine. He says he found the Democrats and Greenbackers of that State united and in full accord, and the belief is firm among them all that Maine will cast her electoral vote this fall for Hancock and English. Gen. Butler told him that Massachusetts would also surely vote Democratic if the Abbottites and Butlerites would unite, and he thought it probable that they would. In Connecticut, New Jersey and New York there is not a doubt fostered by Democrats but that all three States will go decidedly Democratic. The party in these States is united, and working with great enthusiasm for Hancock. On his journey Col. Harris fell in with Col. Colter, of Pennsylvania, who declared that Hancock's chances to get the Keystone State's electoral vote were much better than people in the West supposed. There is no doubt that Col. Harris has been greatly encouraged by his Eastern trip. He is known as a very conservative Democrat, and more likely to croak about coming events than to boast.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Republican Harmony.

> The statements persistently made that Secretary Sherman is not willing to give his whole strength to aid the Republican party in this campaign are not warranted. The Secretary is enjoying a brief vacation, but will do his utmost for the ticket nominated at Chicago.—Cincinnati Commercial (Moderate Republican).

> We incline to the opinion that if Secretary Sherman is really determined to "do his utmost" for the ticket nominated at Chicago he should withdraw from the Cabinet. Reports of his mischief-doing come from all parts of the country. He has no policy but vengeance since the Chicago Convention took the conceit out of him.—Globe-Democrat (Stalwart Republican).

There's harmony for you! It was the Cincinnati Commercial that scoffed at the idea of such a man as Garfield being nominated for the Presidency. But when Garfield was nominated the Commercial swallowed him, record and all. Now it wants the public to understand that John Sherman indorses the Garfield and Arthur ticket. Sherman may be compelled to indorse it, but it is poison for him. He is one of the great disaffected, and, as the Globe-Democrat points out, he knows no policy but vengeance. The Republican leaders reported so far who will give Garfield a lukewarm support, or no support at all, are as follows:

Roscoe Conkling (going to Europe).
Don Cameron (sick and disgusted).
John Sherman (will not vote).
John W. Forney (will vote for Hancock).
Leonard Jerome (will vote for Hancock).
James G. Blaine (will not vote).
John A. Logan (will gulp it down under protest).
Matt Carpenter (probably won't vote).

Among the leading Republican newspapers in the country that are giving Garfield a barley-water support are:

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat, a paper that has never bolted the Republican ticket, and one of the most extreme enemies of the Democratic party in the United States.

The Chicago Inter Ocean, the leading stalwart Republican paper of the Northwest, and never known since it was founded to treat a ticket so shabbily.

The New York Times, leading stalwart Republican paper of the East. Looks upon the nomination of Garfield as a calamity, but promises to make the best of a bad job. Very much afraid Hancock will be elected.

The papers which are giving Mr. Garfield about all the support he is getting are:

The Chicago Tribune bolted the Republican ticket in 1872, and threatened to bolt again if Grant were nominated.

The New York Tribune bolted the Republican ticket in 1872, and threatened to bolt again if Grant were nominated.

The Cincinnati Commercial bolted the Republican ticket frequently, and stood pledged to the Democracy if Grant were nominated.—Chicago News.

The Outlook in Ohio.

Hon. George L. Converse, of Ohio, is in town, and brings good news for Democrats from that State. He is a Thurman man, and was selected as a delegate to the National Convention as such. He says that all stories of coolness between any alleged factions of the party in Ohio are false. There is, on the contrary, great harmony and enthusiasm there, and a determination to make a vigorous fight—a determination that is strengthened by the discord in the Republican ranks. According to Mr. Converse, the coolness between the friends of Sherman and Garfield is growing, and there is not that harmony which has been produced by the letter of acceptance elsewhere. Sherman's friends represent the friends of the administration, and in proportion as the letter pleases the Grant managers it displeases the Sherman and administration people. Mr. Converse says that he is not only hopeful, but confident that the Democrats will carry Ohio, both in October and November. He counts on the votes of many Republicans for the Democratic ticket.—Washington telegram to Chicago Times.

Jay Gould Predicts Hancock's Election.

Mr. Jay Gould, last week, while here, spoke his mind freely on the subject of politics, prophesying the certain election of Hancock and English. In conversation with Maj. Thomas Cornell, Mr. Gould unhesitatingly said that he anticipated the success of the Democratic Presidential ticket this fall. "How is that?" queried Maj. Cornell. "Well," said Mr. Gould, "the fact is that Gen. Arthur loads down the Republican ticket, and aside from that the Democrats are thoroughly united on Hancock and English. I have no hope of carrying New York, and I believe that as goes New York so will also go New Jersey, at least, and Connecticut probably." Mr. Gould also ventured the remark that the Republican "machine" had already practically abandoned the Presidential fight, and would henceforth concentrate its efforts upon carrying the various State Legislatures, with the obvious purpose of controlling the United States Senate. Mr. Gould's revelations are important only as exhibiting the fact that what is called the money power does not seem to be as much afraid of the Democracy as some people make out.—Kingston (N. Y.) telegram to the World.

This invention has relation to machines for separating Grain, Seed and Chaff, each from the other, and adapted to employ the same High Blast for each separation, and to conduct the grain and seed to opposite ends of the machine, whence they are conducted by proper chutes into sacks, held in position by the machine itself. I expect to have ready by June 1, to
